COURSE DESCRIPTION

A novelist, playwright, literary critic, political activist, and, of course, philosopher, Jean-Paul Sartre was one of the most imposing intellectual figures of the twentieth century. Despite his enormous influence in the post-war period, however, his thought was largely eclipsed by the 1960's. In contrast with Heidegger, with the rise of structuralism and poststructuralism, Sartre was deemed largely passe. One of the underlying questions that we shall deal with in this course, therefore, is whether Sartre's philosophy is (or at least should be) relevant today.

We shall begin by considering two of Sartre's early essays, The Transcendence of the Ego and The Emotions: Outline of a Theory. The focal point of these phenomenological works is the unbridled freedom of consciousness. We shall then spend, roughly, 8-9 weeks on his existential phenomenology, namely, Being and Nothingness. Next, we shall look at Sartre's Anti-Semite and Jew, which fleshes out the ethical implications of Being and Nothingness. And, finally, we shall conclude by spending a couple of weeks on Search for a Method, which was published as an appendage to the monumental Critique of Dialectical Reason, and gives the most concise formulation of his phenomenological Marxism.
