*In addition, a number of articles have already been placed on Blackboard. I will continue to place more on blackboard as the semester progresses. I will announce new readings by email and in class. Using Blackboard is a requirement in this class.

This course is designed to introduce students to the political history of Latin American politics and U.S. – Latin American relations. No assumptions are made regarding students' familiarity with Latin America or U.S. foreign policy. I do, however, assume a willingness on the part of students to work hard in the effort to engage the intricacies and nuances of the region by reading carefully, keeping complete and thoughtful journals, and participating in class discussions.

All students are required to read the assigned readings on time, and to come to class prepared to discuss them. All assigned readings must be read carefully and analytically before we discuss them in class. It is not possible to do well in this class without a willingness to participate thoughtfully in our conversations. I am happy to help students to develop strategies to improve your class participation, and may come to you with suggestions. However, you are ultimately responsible for developing your voice.

I regularly communicate with students by email, which I send through blackboard. Students are strongly advised to check their email for messages from me. If you do not you are likely to miss important information.

Students are expected to attend all classes unless ill or in case of emergency. Make a serious effort to get to class on time. If you are absent or late, send me an email explaining it. Do not explain it to me on the phone, in class, before class or after class.

Grades: Journal and homework assignments (50%); In-class Assignments and classroom attendance/participation (25%); Review of Loveman (25%).

Journal Instructions

Students are required to purchase and keep a journal that clearly records each reading and each class meeting. For each reading, students are required to 1) Summarize what you find to be the most important points in the reading. This summary should be of use to you when we together review the reading each class section. 2) Write at least one question and one comment – these need not be limited to the reading for that day. In fact, I encourage you to draw connections to other readings we have done in this class, other things you have read outside the class, or pertinent life experiences. 3) Keep notes on what happens in class, including recording comments you make to the class discussion (make these legible for me). This will help me at the outset to put names to faces and also help me to ensure that you get credit for your classroom participation.

All journals must be organized in the following way. If you would like to do it differently, you are welcome to bring a proposal to me in office hours where we can discuss it.

First, clearly demarcate at the top of the journal entry by number and date. For example

#3. September 15, 2010.

Reading assignment Loveman, pp. 67-112 and John French article entitled “Why the United States is Not Nice to Latin America.”

Each journal entry then has four parts, each of which should be clearly demarcated as well in the following order

1. Reading notes.
2. Chapter summaries.
3. Comments and questions for each class day.
4. Class notes.

Reading notes and class notes do not have to be EASILY legible. Reading notes are for your own use, I simply want to see that you are keeping them. However, I am going to read your chapter summaries, comments and questions word for word and evaluate them in terms of clarity and insight. So, they must be easily legible for me. If you cannot or do not choose to use legible handwriting, then type and print out your journal.

I will collect these journals at different intervals during the semester and grade them. You are required to keep them up to date. A main purpose of this assignment is preparation for class participation; thus, completing them after the fact seriously impedes their utility for you and for the rest of the class which is dependent upon the quality of your class participation.
