CUTLINE FOR PHOTO W/STORY HEADED "JOURNALISM SCHOOL..."

#37

Kurt Wilson sees his story appear on the screen as he types it on the keyboard of a video display terminal. The terminal is part of the electronic editing equipment acquired by the University of Montana journalism school with the help of the Montana Press and the UM Foundation. Reflected in the mirror are Wilson's classmates. Wilson's parents are Marvin and Gloria Wilson, Missoula.

Ken Brusik, right, assistant professor of journalism at the University of Montana, and Clark Fair, a student in Brusik's course on the use of electronic editing equipment, watch a readout of a story unroll. The story was typed on a computer terminal linked to a controller and stored on a disc in the controller. At an electronic signal, the story is printed out. Fair is the son of Dr. Calvin Fair and Mrs. Jane Fair, Soldotna, Alaska. (UM photo by Leslie Vining)
