Course Objective

With the end of the Cold War, it is increasingly clear that attribution of Third World crises and violence to ideological battles was wrong. Today the Third World is fast becoming the exclusive arena of conflict. Is the Western world right in taking it for granted that the world of the post-Cold-War period is a more secure place except the backwater of the Third World? Should the West simply regard these Third World conflicts as being only of a nuisance value? Pity the affected peoples and intervene there on humanitarian grounds? Or simply let them stew in their own juice? Or should we see the insecurity of the Third World as a source of insecurity for the West, demanding collective, global solution, and if so, what kinds of solutions will work, which ones will not? Answers to these questions demand first of all our understanding of the nature and sources (internal and external) of Third World conflict and how they impact on the international system and affect others. Secondly, they demand that we see the nature of threats to security as dramatically transformed, compelling commensurate dramatic revisions in security concepts and security planning. The objective of the course is to introduce students to these issues, to increase their understanding and to let them reflect on the idea that security is increasingly less a matter of arms than of cooperation to eradicate or attenuate global insecurity at its source -- global poverty in the midst of plenty.

Course Description and Format

The course begins with the discussion of the concept of security, western and non-western perceptions of threats to security, and the meaning and sources (systemic and internal) of the insecurity dilemma in the Third World. Then we examine the impacts of Third World insecurity dilemma on international and global security, paying particular attention to the role and impact of the strategies adopted to overcome insecurity. Of interest here are adversarial/conflictual approaches reflected in irredentism and secessionism, in the non-aligned movement and in paradoxical dependent militarization.

Attention is then turned to the search for accommodative and cooperative solutions to the emergent global insecurity. Here we examine the strengths and weaknesses of global, regional and sub-regional collective security, the UN conflict management role and possibilities, regulation of arms production and transfers, the idea of cooperative security, promotion of democracy and human rights, and the notion of global governance.

The last three weeks of the semester will be devoted to the presentation and discussion of term papers.

The course will be organized as a discussion seminar. After the initial preliminaries, students will take turns leading discussions on key issues, concepts and themes from the assigned readings for the relevant class sessions. The discussion leader launches the discussion by presenting a summary of the readings and posing the key issues. Discussion leaders are not expected to answer all questions in their presentations; their task is to identify important issues and areas of controversy for discussion. Meaningful discussion and rewarding class sessions can only occur if we all faithfully do the assigned readings when due; otherwise we would only be exchanging ignorance and have boring sessions. Everyone is therefore responsible for the material assigned for each session. The oral summary by the discussion leader is only a convenient way of launching the discussion, not a substitute for a careful reading of the materials.

In addition to leading class discussions in turns, each student will also write and present a term paper, a learning tool. The paper, on a topic of your own choosing, is expected to break new ground, i.e. go beyond the assigned class readings and discussions. It may cover topics left out or insufficiently covered in the course, e.g. international terrorism or the Timorese struggle against Indonesia. Or it may examine the interventionist policy of a great power in a specific country or sub-region, or the role of a particular group or NGO in bringing about such a policy. It may deal with the position of a country or sub-region on particular security issues or conflicts. The possibilities are unlimited.

Class presentation of the term papers will begin about the Thanksgiving period. It will follow essentially the same format as the earlier presentations. The final draft incorporating relevant comments and suggestions from the class discussion will be due not later than 72 hours after the class presentation.

Evaluation

There will be three components to the course evaluation. The first component comprising 30 percent will be based on your classroom performance, including the quality of class discussions you lead, and your general contributions to other class sessions. To assure this quality, short (no more than three pages at the most) reaction papers to some of the readings will be required and will constitute a part of the evaluation. Obviously, your regular attendance will also count, perhaps as much as ten percent.

The second component, also 30 percent, is a mid-term exam. The third component, the term paper, will be evaluated for its quality and the oral presentation (40 percent). There will be no final exam.

Texts

The basic texts are: Mohammed Ayoob, The Third World Security Predicament; Mahmood Monshipouri, Democratization, Liberalization and Human Rights in the Third World; Frederick Pearson, The Global Spread of Arms; and The Commission on Global Governance, Our Global Neighborhood.
