UM GRADUATE STUDENTS SELECTED FOR NATIONAL PARK SERVICE INTERNSHIPS

MISSOULA--

University of Montana graduate students Carolyn Fox and David Weingartner have been appointed to 12-week internships in the National Park Service research laboratory at Fort Collins, Colo.

They took up their assignments June 15 as research assistants, working in the field under supervision of NPS scientists. In addition to field research, their duties involve laboratory work and library research.

Fox, who is working for a master's degree in environmental studies, is the daughter of Stephen and Barbara Fox of West Springfield, Va. She is a graduate of West Springfield High School and of William and Mary College, Williamsburg, Va.

Weingartner is a candidate for the M.S. degree in geography, with emphasis on rural, town and regional planning. He is a graduate of UM and Butte High School, and he has served with the Peace Corps in the Philippines. He is the son of Mrs. Letty Weingartner, Butte.

Barb Olson, director of cooperative education at UM, said Fox and Weingartner were selected for the two available internships from applicants from six states.
