Building plan ready but not available

A long-range building plan outlining the University of Montana's "priority areas" for construction and renovation on campus has been completed since last year, but still has not been made public.

UM President Richard Bowers had said recently he would release the report last Monday. Bowers then apparently changed his mind last week, saying at that time he did not wish to release the plan without first commenting on it.

Such reports are drawn up every two years by the Campus Development Committee, sent to the president for approval and then to the Board of Regents and the Legislature for final approval.

The Campus Development Committee, whose membership is composed of faculty, staff and students, is responsible for all planning, construction and renovation of UM property.

However, its word is not law—it can make only recommendations, which then must go to the president's office for approval.

Richard Vandiver, associate professor of sociology and former committee member, said he could not understand why the plan had not been released.

Bowers was out of town and unavailable for comment as to when he might release the document, accompanied by his statement.

In addition to planning and construction of UM property, the Campus Development Committee is responsible for space allocation such as the location of faculty offices and art work.

For example, if a professor wants a larger office, then the committee will make a recommendation concerning it, Dave Weber committee member, said.

Membership for the Campus Development Committee consists of:

- four faculty members, who are appointed by Bowers and serve two-year staggered terms.
- one staff member, who is appointed by Staff Senate for a two-year term.
- Academic Vice President.
- Vice President for Fiscal Affairs.
- Director of University Facilities.
- a representative of Fine Arts.
- three student representatives.

The student representatives are appointed by ASUM President David Curtis with consent of Central Board. One student serves a two-year term, and two students serve a one-year term.

ASUM is still accepting applications for the committee even though the first meeting is next Wednesday.

Applications for student representative for the committee may be dropped off in University Center Room 105.

Linda Lang, ASUM vice president, said yesterday that ASUM will probably appoint students to the committee within the next three weeks.

Lang had not been informed of the Wednesday meeting of the committee.

Faculty members who are on the Campus Development Committee this year include Richard Chandler, director of Instructional Materials; Louis Hayes, professor of political science; Russ Medora, professor of pharmacy; and Greg Patent, associate professor of zoology.

Staff members on the committee include Ted Parker, director of University Facilities, Patricia Douglas, Vice President for Fiscal Affairs, and Donald Habbe, Academic Vice President.

Steve Connell, associate professor of art, was appointed as the Fine Arts representative.

Excellence Fund sings 'poor U blues'

By ALAN ROSENBERG
Montana Kaimin Reporter

It will never be gold or platinum. It will never make the charts. No disc jockey is likely to play it.

Yet Allan Vannini, executive director of the University of Montana Foundation, is counting on it being a big hit.

The two-sided stereo recording, called a sound sheet, is intended to generate contributions to the Excellence Fund, a project of the UM Foundation. The Foundation is a non-profit corporation which raises funds to support the educational programs of the university. According to Vannini, the money raised by the Excellence Fund represents about one-tenth of the total Foundation's fund-raising efforts.

As part of this year's Excellence Fund drive about 45,000 flexible plastic sound sheets will be distributed to alumni, parents of students and members of the business community in and out of state.

The recordings will be inserted into copies of a special winter edition of "University" magazine, which is published by the Office of Publications and Media Relations.

On one side of the recording, the a lead-in to Bowers' talk, the chorale sings the Montana state song.

According to Vannini, the Excellence Fund, which was established in March 1979, helps provide for "the University's unmet needs."

Money raised for the fund is earmarked for four areas:

- alumni programs, including scholarships and recruiting.
- faculty development projects including research and academic conferences.
- needs of the Mansfield Library.
- equipment purchases.

Money is also budgeted each year for special "presidential projects" selected by Bowers. The fund has been instrumental in re-establishing the UM Marching Band which had ceased to exist in 1972.

Vannini said the presidential projects chosen by Bowers for the 1980-81 year are Excellence Fund Scholarships and a computer system for the School of Journalism.

Other projects to be funded this year include the marching band, research equipment, the Montana Writing Project, outreach and UM Chamber Chorale sings three selections. On the flip-side, UM President Richard Bowers makes a four-and-a-half minute appeal for donations.

The chorale sings "Hallelujah" by Vincent Youmans, "Tonight" by Leonard Bernstein and "Gloria" mass in "G" by Franz Schubert. For recruitment, faculty research and the library.

The goal for this year's Excellence Fund drive is $200,000, a figure Vannini calls "ambitious," considering the economic climate.

Iranian ditches studies for guns

By STEPHANIE HANSON
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The undeclared war between Iran and Iraq rages far from Montana in the Middle East, yet for an almost-student at the University of Montana, it is a war that is close to home.

Ali Reza Zandi was a transfer student from Coffeyville Community College in Coffeyville, Kan., who returned to his home in Iran Thursday intending to fight against Iraq.

Zandi, who would have been a junior in pharmacy at UM had he completed registration, returned for what his friends call a "patriotic" desire to aid his volatile homeland.

The Iran-Iraq border-war began two weeks ago when Iraq bombed several oil fields in Iran. The area in dispute is located near the Shatt al-Arab waterway.

Zandi said he felt he "owes it to his country" to return and fight with the Iranian army, according to Dennis Bet-Daniel, a friend of Zandi's. Bet-Daniel said that Zandi had served in Shah Reza Pahlavi's army before he came to the United States to study. Because of his previous experience, Zandi felt he could benefit Iran with his knowledge of army skills, Bet-Daniel said.

Majid Malek-Afzaly, another Iranian transfer student studying at UM, said Zandi could not be persuaded to stay and complete his studies in the United States. Zandi already "made his own decision," and felt committed to carry out that decision by returning to Iran, Malek-Afzaly said.

Malek-Afzaly was a friend of Zandi's and was also his roommate when both students attended school in Kansas.

Both Bet-Daniel and Malek-Afzaly said they admire Zandi and his decision to return to Iran. They said they would not return to Iran to fight in the war—although both said they were deeply concerned with the conflict—because they want to finish their studies.

It would be unlikely that Zandi would be allowed to return to the United States since the government has issued a moratorium on allowing Iranian students into the country.

Bet-Daniel and Malek-Afzaly said that Zandi would have to return to Iran in a round-about way since the Tehran airport has been closed because of Iraqi bombing. They said Zandi would have flown to London and then to Turkey where he would have taken a bus to Iran.

Margaret McGuire, the foreign students advisor, said she had only dealt briefly with Zandi in trying to help him find an apartment. He was a very "friendly" person, she said, adding she was not informed that he had left Missoula until another Iranian called her Monday.

It's CB showtime

Once again, it's showtime at the University of Montana as Central Board resumes its Wednesday night meetings.

Unfortunately, few students turn out to watch their elected representatives in action. Considering that $399,200 in student money was portioned out by CB last spring, student apathy about the board's activities seems rather paradoxical.

If the meetings were boring, the poor attendance might be understandable.

But the parliamentary squabbles characteristic of newly elected members during Spring Quarter often provide quite a show. And the spring ritual of budgeting student groups is hardly a calm and contained affair.

While concrete action slows somewhat during Fall and Winter quarters, CB delegates in past years have managed to keep themselves entertained. For example, when the University of Montana Marching Kazoo Band requested $36 last fall for musical instruments (kazoos) and uniforms (sets of Groucho Marx glasses and noses), CB toyed with the idea of increasing the band's allocation to about $1,000 to allow for additional members and fancier kazoos, before denying the request altogether.

And when the 1979-80 board was winding down its activities late last winter, CB delegates manufactured and tested their own fleet of paper airplanes while voting to send the Women's Resource Center to the University of Wisconsin to play war games.

Sound like fun and games? Or kids playing at being powerful?

Actually, Central Board is much more than that.

It has the authority to spend all money raised by the student activity fee, which this fall increased $9 per year to a yearly total of $54 for every UM student. In addition to the nearly $400,000 allocated by CB last spring, approximately $15,000 will be given out to student groups this year through special allocations, according to ASUM Business Manager Steve Spaulding.

CB also ratifies appointments made by ASUM executive committees, including those of the ASUM Programming director and Montana Kaimin editor, who head two of the three student groups that receive the largest share of student money.

And there are some controversies.

For instance, the vote to send the WRC to play war games in Wisconsin came shortly after it had engaged in such games with CB. In the 1979-80 board's biggest controversy, it ratified a plan to move the WRC out of its space in the University Center. Student factions for and against the move formed, and few people in either group came out of the battle on good terms with the others.

CB's approval of the student activity fee increase last spring also drew some student opposition, as did its ratification of Jim Weinberg as Student Action Center director, rather than an executive committee's first choice for the job, Darla Rucker.

Other than those few controversies, interest in CB's actions rarely surfaced. Delegates did what they pleased with little public comment or question from students.

Yet students continue to deride CB action and disagree with its results, while avoiding the kinds of action that would make CB truly representative of students' wishes—attending the meetings or joining one of the many committees that now need members.

Students are paying more money to fund student government and student activities this year. Passing up a chance to be a part of—or even watch—the activities makes little sense.

After all, you're paying for the show. You might as well enjoy it.

Why no story?

Editor: In response to your editorial on Oct. 7 concerning the Interim Finance Committee hearing, I was unable to attend this important meeting and would have appreciated reading an article concerning the future funding of the University of Montana.

Instead of reporting on this crucial issue you seem to believe it's more important to maliciously attack David Curtis on petty issues. This incompetent writing style doesn't represent the interests of the student body and is a total waste of my time and money. Hopefully, this editorial isn't representative of what I will be reading, or shall I say what I won't be reading, this school year.

Testimony misrepresented

Editor: Well, you blew it again. Not only was your editorial "Curtis failing Legislative Studies 101" inaccurate and insulting—it certainly did more to hurt the image of University of Montana students than any remarks made by David Curtis.

I find it appalling that you would devote a one-half page editorial to a four-minute presentation. It's comparable to writing a review of a speaker's introductory remarks and ignoring the keynote address. Even so, you still succeeded in misrepresenting the testimony.

First of all, David did not enter a hearing in which students had been "thoughtfully and intelligently" presenting their "criticisms and suggestions concerning the proposed funding formula." David led off the student presentation and set a tone in which subsequent speakers made more specific recommendations.

Had you inquired, you would have been informed of several meetings with President Bowers, administrators, faculty, staff and students to coordinate testimony. At these meetings, great pains were taken to ensure that every student was covered by the person most prepared to address it. We tried to avoid duplication of efforts—which kept everyone's comments brief and to the point.

There was an agreement at the last pre-hearing meeting that David Curtis would make a general statement about the importance of higher education. After that introductory statement, several recommendations would be made by students who have spent more time studying the specifics of the funding formula.

Your claim that David's presentation "succeeded in reinforcing—if not further damaging—the poor image legislators already have of UM students" is shocking. I'm not sure who you consulted in drawing that conclusion.

As a former student lobbyist, I would assert that most legislators have responded favorably to students at this institution. Perhaps, you meant to say the poor image of the Montana Kaimin?

Regarding the supposed insult that it is "the educated people that are going to solve the problems of our state," I would say that it is not only true but recognized as such by the "self-educated" members of the committee. Why else would Carroll South and Francis Bardanoue spend 16 months searching for an adequate formula?

It is my understanding that David Curtis has been well received by the legislators he has met. He has also done a good job in becoming informed about and articulating a broad range of student concerns. As far as getting your money's worth in the Legislature, I might remind you that ASUM will hire two lobbyists to represent student concerns.

UM receives government grant to aid disadvantaged students

By JEANNETTE HORTICK
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Ever since the Civil Rights Movement of the 1960s, federal grants have been given to universities for disadvantaged college students to allow everyone an equal educational opportunity.

Last summer, the U.S. Department of Education provided a grant for eight Montana educational institutions totaling $770,739 for disadvantaged college students. Of that amount, the University of Montana received $97,642, Raymond Carlisle, director of Special Services said yesterday.

By federal definition, a disadvantaged student is one whose family income cannot provide for a college education, whose culture does not reinforce education as a value, whose rural high school isolation had limited educational resources or who has physical handicaps, Carlisle said.

But next year, Carlisle said, this definition may change to regard as disadvantaged only those students with low incomes, $3,100 a year or less, or those whose parents did not receive college degrees.

The grant money pays the salaries for three full-time workers—Carlisle, a secretary and a counselor. It also pays 60 percent of the salaries of two instructors—one math and one English, and 50 percent of the wages for a reading lab assistant. UM pays the rest of the salaries.

A small percentage is marked for travel expenses, Carlisle said, adding he would probably make only one trip this year because the Department of Education has cut the traveling budget.

A total of $4,300 is allotted for supplies and $5,600 will be spent for tutoring services, Carlisle said. Sophomores and juniors are hired at $3.50 an hour and seniors and graduates at $3.80 an hour to tutor disadvantaged students, he said. $1,000 is matched with work-study funds to pay the tutors, he added.

Right now, there is enough money for 35 students to receive about 15 hours of tutoring a quarter, Carlisle said.

The other seven Montana educational institutions receiving federal aid for disadvantaged students are: Dawson Community College, $38,260; College of Great Falls, $77,438; Flathead Community College, $80,179; Northern Montana College, $83,028; Eastern Montana College, $98,253; Fort Belknap Community Council, $137,412, and Montana State University, $158,527.

While UM's $97,642 grant is lower in comparison to the other state institutions, Carlisle said "dollar-for-dollar" UM received about the same as the rest.

One factor in the discrepancy, he said, is that UM has two programs rather than one. Upward Bound, a program for high school students, is not included in the $97,642. The budget for programs at other schools was probably included in their figures, he said.

Carlisle said one reason MSU received $60,885 more than UM is probably because it requested extra money to serve the needs of handicapped students while UM did not.

He said that UM has a commitment to serve students other than those who are eligible under federal requirements determining disadvantaged students.

In other words, although Special Services receives money from the College of Arts and Sciences, it can also serve students in other fields, Carlisle said. Last year, for example, the reading lab served 350 students meeting the eligibility requirements, while actually providing services for twice as many.

Concert ticket sales slow but increasing, Goza says

Ticket sales for the Atlanta Rhythm Section concert tomorrow night are slow but picking up, Sam Goza, ASUM Programming concerts coordinator, said yesterday.

Goza said that while only about 700 tickets have been sold so far, "that should double Wednesday and double again on the day of the show."

Everybody will buy tickets on the day of the show," he added.

Goza said the show would break even if about 2,000 tickets are sold, but that he hopes 3,000 will be.

"The concert should be real hot," he said enthusiastically. "Norton Buffalo, the backup, is the hottest harmonica player around. He puts on a real good show."

Promotion efforts for the concert have cost about $3,000, which is "about average," Goza said. Promotion has included free ticket giveaways on KYLT and XT-93 radio stations, as well as some television ads and posters.

Goza said there will probably be only one more field house concert this quarter, because there is not enough space to justify some of the bigger names, and because "people just aren't used to paying the price you have to charge."

Tomorrow night's concert is $7 for students and $8 for the general public.

Students stage demonstration against 'suspect' tampons

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (CPS)—About a dozen female students at the University of Maryland were so disturbed about reports that Rely tampons may cause a fatal illness called toxic shock syndrome that they threw the tampons out of the sixth-floor window of their dorm.

They had gotten the tampons for free in an orientation packet provided by the 13-30 Corporation of Knoxville, Tenn.

Sophomore Mary Brown explained the protest was against the university, which should have warned women of the potential harm. Richard Stimpson, director of resident life at the campus, countered, "I don't know that the university would necessarily see that as its responsibility. It was a free distribution. No one was made to take them."

Bob Hanggi, a spokesman for the 13-30 Corporation, noted that "we've asked universities to take the tampons out of the (orientation) kit wherever and whenever possible." Nevertheless, it was not a serious problem, he added, if only a dozen of the 4000 new women students at Maryland threw the tampons away.

Law School awarded $240,000

By GWINN DYRLAND
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The University of Montana School of Law will use a $240,000 grant in the next three years to study how it can improve legal training in Montana.

Law school Dean John Mudd said yesterday that the grant gives the school an opportunity to find "what it takes to practice law in a rural state like Montana," and then how to plan a "more effective, more efficient, more complete" curriculum.

The three-year study, supported by the Fund for the Improvement of Post-Secondary Education (U. S. Department of Education) will change UM law school's future academic program and serve as a model for other states' programs, Mudd said.

"We're not just talking about adding a course or dropping a course," he said.

While Mudd declined to speculate what changes in the law school the study might suggest, he called the school's 23-to-1 student-faculty ratio an "anachronism" and said that most available teaching materials have an urban, not rural, perspective.

The law school has a 1980-81 enrollment of 230 and a full-time faculty of 16.

UM is one of four law schools in the United States that have received this grant in its eight-year history, Mudd said. UM is also the first state-supported school—and the first school in a rural area—to get the grant. Grants went to one of every 20 applicants among a total of 1,800 schools, Mudd said.

Mudd said the law school has an "excellent track record" for "innovative" grant studies. It may have been selected to receive a grant, he said, because of the wide rural area it serves, its "regional reputation" as a law school, its close relationship to law practice in Montana and the law school's "willingness to raise questions" about the value of its purpose.

Three stages of the grant study will be:

- a broad survey of Montana lawyers and others to determine the skills a beginning lawyer needs in the state.

- a review of how well the course offerings and overall program at UM provide those skills.

- a plan to tie legal training more closely to the demonstrated needs in Montana.

"We don't want to just pool our own biases (in changing the curriculum), we want to get some good information," Mudd said.

A majority of law school faculty will be involved in conducting the phase-one survey, as well as three students who helped draft the grant proposal last year. Mudd said that compiling the survey information should begin by next spring.

Jack LaTrielle, a consultant who will direct the survey, said that the interviews used will explore:

- the tasks lawyers must be prepared to perform.

- the occupational image lawyers project to people in other fields including education, counselling, medicine, and police work.

- important areas in future years.

LaTrielle said the scope and thoroughness of the survey—virtually all the legal profession in Montana will be consulted—will help "to identify specifically what lawyers should be able to do when they go out on the street."

Another congressman convicted in Abscam

WASHINGTON (AP)—Rep. John Jenrette was convicted last night of accepting a bribe from an FBI undercover agent who said he represented two wealthy Arabs needing special immigration legislation.

The jury also convicted John Stowe, a Richmond, Va., businessman, who was charged with aiding and abetting Jenrette in the bribery scheme.

The jury of eight women and four men returned their verdicts in U.S. District Court after some four hours of deliberations that began just after lunch. The verdict was announced at 6:15 p.m. EDT.

After the jury foreman, Sylvia Parker, announced the verdicts, Jenrette, sitting at the defense table, bowed his head and sobbed with his hands covering his face. Stowe sat impassively as he had during most of the five-week trial.

Jenrette's wife, Rita, displayed no emotion, staring at the jurors from her seat in the first row of the courtroom.

Jenrette, who testified last week, denied he accepted the bribe, which was offered in return for his promise to introduce special immigration legislation for the fictional Arabs.

He admits holding bribery discussions with the agents—discussions captured on video and audio tape. But he contends the FBI has persecuted him for six years and lured him into the talks at a time when he suffered from a severe drinking problem.

Jenrette also was accused of soliciting a $125,000 bribe from the undercover agent in return for Jenrette's promise to have Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., introduce immigration legislation in the Senate.

Jenrette admits taking part in that videotaped discussion, but says he was only buying time because he believed the agents were mobsters who would kill him.

Stowe did not testify. His lawyer, Murray Janus, admitted Stowe picked up the bribe money last Dec. 6, but claimed Stowe was a delivery boy for Jenrette.

He said Stowe met with the agents in hopes of getting the fictional Arabs to finance his purchase of a failing munitions plant in Jenrette's district. The agents kept hammering at Stowe to introduce them to his friend, Jenrette, so he finally did so, Janus said.

The government based much of its case on the video and audio tapes, which show Jenrette and Stowe discussing the bribe Dec. 4, Stowe picking up the $50,000 in a paper bag Dec. 6 and Jenrette and Stowe discussing the $125,000 bribe in the Thurmond matter Jan. 7.

Defense attorneys asked that the jury be polled on the verdicts and each juror responded "guilty" on each charge.

Jenrette was convicted of one count of conspiracy to commit bribery and two counts of bribery. Stowe was convicted of one count of conspiracy and two counts of aiding and abetting bribery.

Each man could face a maximum 35 years in prison and thousands of dollars in fines. Sentencing will be scheduled later.

Gubernatorial candidates disagree on handling of Anaconda Co. closure

HELENA (AP)—The candidates for governor continued their verbal sparring yesterday over whether there should be a special session of the Legislature to deal with problems caused by the closure of the Anaconda Copper Co. plants in Anaconda and Great Falls.

Republican candidate Jack Ramirez told a "Candidates' Forum" that the Anaconda closures demand immediate action that cannot be delayed until the 1981 Legislature meets in January.

But Democrat Ted Schwinden said a special session—if one is necessary—should not be called until the Legislature "can responsibly review the options that are available."

Ramirez and 10 other legislators have asked for a special legislative session Oct. 20 to deal with the "economic ramifications" of the plant closures. If 76 of the 150 legislators agree, there will be a special session.

Ramirez said a special session should explore such things as buying the homes of former Anaconda employees, helping with the employees medical insurance payments and providing assistance to schools.

"Their (Anaconda's) schools will be devastated by this," the Billings lawyer said toldt 125 persons attending the forum sponsored by the Montana Chamber of Commerce, Stockgrowers Association and Taxpayers Association.

Ramirez said the Legislature should also take action on the state's new ambient air standards, to require an economic impact of the consequences.

Ramirez, the state House minority leader, said that the 1981 Legislature is likely to consider as many bills—1,800—as were introduced during the 1979 session, and also must deal with a new state budget.

"Do you think they can adequately deal with this (the Anaconda closures) at this time?" he asked.

Ramirez said that if a special session of the Legislature in October orders the state Board of Health to produce an economic analysis of the new ambient air standards, it could be ready before the regular 1981 session.

Schwinden said he did not think Democratic Gov. Thomas Judge would hesitate to call a special legislative session if he felt it would be of help.

Replying to Ramirez' suggestion that a special session could enact legislation to buy the homes of laid-off Anaconda employees, Schwinden asked whether the state should also buy the homes of workers who lost their jobs when the Van Evans wood products' plant closed in Missoula or when some Malmstrom Air Force base activities were phased out in Great Falls several years ago.

Asked about tax indexing—a concept under which taxpayers would not pay higher state income tax rates unless their salaries outpace inflation—Schwinden said he would ask the Legislature to adopt a "responsible program," which would not "precipitate a fiscal crisis in the state and shift the burden from the wealthy to the poor and middle-income" wage earners.

Ramirez said he favored Initiative 86, a tax-indexing initiative.

William Cordingley, the forum moderator and publisher of The Great Falls Tribune, asked Schwinden why there is still a 10 percent state income surtax when the state has experienced budget surpluses.

Schwinden said the surtax, originally 30 percent, was adopted as an alternative to a state sales tax. He said the governor, Legislature and people have generally been asking for property tax relief.

Schwinden said "I have said that if fiscal conditions permit, I would like the 10 percent tax repealed."

Earlier, Schwinden said that the Anaconda closure decision "Was a cruel way to teach this state the value of insurance. If only we had a copper severance tax for the last 100 years . . . the opportunity to help would have been much better."

In the Western District congressional race, both Democratic incumbent Pat Williams and Republican challenger Jack McDonald criticized President Carter.

"If you like Carter, you'll love Pat Williams," said McDonald.

But Williams said some Democrats are unhappy because he has taken a "middle of the road position" and supported Carter's programs only 56 percent of the time.

Williams said Carter was wrong on the abandonment of Amtrak service through parts of Montana, for not saving the Milwaukee Road railroad and on some other issues.

Williams also said he supported a strong national defense, adding that while some charts may show the Soviet Union has more planes or tanks, "It isn't just warheads, folks, but who has the best ones."

Asked about his stand on wilderness, McDonald said "We do have enough wilderness." But he said he would "protect the wilderness we have."

McDonald said he would have liked a referendum in the Missoula area before Congress approved the new 61,000-acre Rattlesnake wilderness and recreation area bill.

Congress begins hearings on radioactive dumping

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—The government's decision to dump thousands of barrels of radioactive waste into the sea off the Atlantic and Pacific coasts has formed a "radioactive dumping ring" around the United States, Rep. John Burton, D-Calif., told a congressional subcommittee yesterday.

Burton, first in a series of witnesses, criticized the government's failure to keep adequate records on the dumping, which began in 1946 and continued until the early 1970s.

"Various scientific groups are disputing the seriousness of the problem," he said, "and the federal agencies have added to the problem by not keeping complete records on the location and ingredients of the dumping."

The largest dump is about 150 miles off the Delaware coast, but the site that has caused the most furor is near the Farallon Islands, several inhospitable chunks of rock about 25 miles west of San Francisco. Some 45,000 barrels were dumped there until the government outlawed the practice in 1972.

About 100,000 barrels were dumped at about 50 sites, government records show.

Some environmentalists, led by Dr. W. Jackson Davis of the University of California at Santa Cruz, say radioactive material from the dump site off the Farallons has entered edible fish and poses a "measurable health hazard."

That is disputed by a number of scientists and other environmentalists who say the wastes present no hazard. All, however, advocate continued monitoring.

Pressure from San Francisco Supervisor Quentin Kopp and supervisors from other California counties led the House subcommittee on environment, energy and natural resources, chaired by Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., to hold the hearing. Its purpose is to determine the extent of the dumping and its effect on the environment.

An assistant administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, David Hawkins, told the subcommittee he could not condone the procedures or the record-keeping.

A number of federal agencies participated in the dumping, which began as a "garbage-disposal type of operation," according to a 1957 federal report.

Carter, Reagan exchange caustic rhetoric

The tone of the presidential campaign grew more acrimonious yesterday after President Carter said the election of Republican Ronald Reagan could divide the country and Reagan retorted that the Democratic incumbent is "reaching a point of hysteria."

And independent presidential candidate John Anderson said he is "appalled by the low level to which I think both of the traditional party candidates have taken this campaign."

The latest exchange began Monday night in Chicago where Carter told a partisan dinner that Reagan's election could result in separating "black from white, Jew from Christian, North from South, rural from urban."

The Republican candidate responded yesterday while campaigning in a Polish neighborhood in Philadelphia.

"I think he had some harsh words for the country, not just necessarily for me," said Reagan. "I think he owes the country an apology."

Reagan called Carter "a badly misinformed and prejudiced man" and added that "certainly, he's reaching a point of hysteria that's hard to understand."

Anderson was campaigning in Massachusetts and he also concentrated his criticism on Carter's remarks.

He told a news conference in Boston that the president "is really masking his own fear that he is now not going to win the election."

The Illinois congressman said Carter's tactics "have been offensive to many thinking Americans and really harmful to the political process."

While concentrating his fire on Carter, Anderson didn't let Reagan and the Republicans off free.

"This country is going to be fractured between Democrats and Republican parties by the time this campaign is over," he said.

Reagan also continued to chide Carter for abusing his office for political gain.

"I've never seen an incumbent use the incumbency as blatantly as President Carter has," Reagan said in an interview on the NBC-TV "Today" show. "The grants, the distribution of favors throughout the country, the use of the Cabinet, including offices that were always considered sacrosanct as far as campaigning was concerned—the secretary of state, secretary of defense."

Anderson also has said Carter is "trying to subvert the democratic process," by trying to keep the independent candidate off the ballot in many states.

The congressman quoted Vice President Walter Mondale as saying it was time Anderson dropped out of the race.

"Well, I have some news for Mr. Mondale to report to Jody Powell and Hamilton Jordan," said Anderson. "You've tried everything and you've failed. You can't force me out of this race. And I have just begun to fight."

Powell is Carter's chief White House spokesman and Jordan is the president's top campaign strategist.

Federal court says women's charges in sex-for-grades case 'speculation'

NEW HAVEN (CPS)—Ending the nation's most significant sex-for-grades case, a federal appeals court ruling last week denied five Yale University women's appeal to rehear their sexual harassment charges against certain faculty members.

The three-judge panel of the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said charges of sexual harassment and an "atmosphere of inequality" were pure speculation and conjecture.

"We do not believe that the courts should indulge in speculation of the sort required here," Judge Edward Lumbard ruled.

Of the five women, one had complained a male professor slashed her grade from an "A" to a "C" because she refused to submit to his sexual demands. Another woman claimed she had been forced to have sexual intercourse with an instructor, and ultimately had to forsake her chosen major. Still another said she was forced to leave her position as an athletic assistant to the men's hockey team because of sexual harassment.

In its ruling, the court said the women had not suffered "distinct and palpable" injury because of Yale's action (or inaction) on the allegations.

But in its three-year journey through the courts, the Yale sex-for-grades case set several important legal precedents, including a ruling that sexual harassment constitutes discrimination against women.

"The momentum we've established here has already reached many women across the country," said Anne Simon, lawyer for the five women. "And sooner or later a judge will rule to get these guys (the accused male professors)."

Simon adds that women from across the country have been seeking more information about this case, and how it could lead to more equitable guidelines at their institutions.

The five women, who have already graduated, were not asking for monetary compensation, but sought a court order directing Yale to institute grievance procedures dealing with harassment complaints.

Excellence . . .

Last year more than $180,000 was raised nationwide. Vannini says the goal for the Missoula area will remain at $60,000.

The fund is guided by an eight-member steering committee made up of local businessmen. For the first time this year, Vannini says, other committees will be set up in Great Falls, Billings, Helena and possibly Butte to coordinate efforts in those areas.

Vannini said that because of the closing of the Anaconda Co.'s smelter in Anaconda, the steering committee will be "reassessing" the decision to organize a drive in that area. Historically, Vannini added, the Butte area has been the strongest in the state for per capita donations.

The Excellence Fund drive is modeled after the United Way Campaign which features a highly organized grassroots effort, Vannini said. In Missoula, 57 team captains, the same number as last year, will attempt to solicit donations from 484 local business people. Similar networks will be established in other cities.

Major contributors to the fund last year included Burlington Northern which provided a one-time gift of $25,000, Vannini said, adding that he is working with the corporation for other possible gifts.

The fund has also relied on a direct-mail campaign to solicit contributions. But, Vannini says, the mail response has not been satisfactory.

Vannini hopes that the distribution of the sound sheets, as well as a greater number of follow-up mailings, will stimulate the direct-mail response. The problem, Vannini explained, is one of marketing. "We don't have a wide enough base of small donors," he said.

The total cost of producing the sound sheet is $7,800. The cost will be shared by the UM Alumni Association, the UM Foundation and the Office of Publications and Media Relations.

With the expense of mailing, the cost to the Foundation will be about $5,000, a figure Vannini says is "relatively inexpensive." He said he hopes the recording will generate between $15,000 and $20,000.

Publications Editor Bill Brown, who is responsible for producing the quarterly University magazine, designed and helped to produce the recorded appeal.

Brown said that both he and Vannini had seen ads for the Eva-Tone Co. sound sheets at about the same time and both were interested in using them—for different purposes.

Brown said he had been impressed with the quality of the UM Chamber Chorale and thought that a recording would "be more meaningful and more fun" than just a story. But, Brown said, there wasn't enough money in the budget to have it produced.

Vannini, who said he was intrigued by the concept of a recorded appeal, wanted to use the sound sheets to help raise money for the Excellence Fund. According to Vannini, several major universities have benefited from the use of similar sound sheets.

Brown said it was his idea to make the production of the sound sheet a joint venture.

The 8-mil-thick flexible plastic sheet will be inserted in the magazine with an attached ad for the Excellence Fund and a "check size" return-address envelope, Brown said.

Bowers' recorded talk, prepared in Brown's and Vannini's offices, is a direct appeal for donations to the fund.

Bowers, in the informal message, praises the University and explains the purpose of the Excellence Fund. Brown calls the talk a "basic liberal arts message" designed to help maintain the quality of education."

Regents hold on to nuke program

SACRAMENTO (CPS)—The University of California will continue to administer two nuclear weapons programs despite protest from student groups and from state Gov. Jerry Brown, who is a university regent.

The entire Board of Regents voted last week to keep its contract with the federal government to oversee weapons research at the Lawrence Livermore and Los Alamos laboratories. David Saxon, president of the nine-campus University of California system, favored continuing the $900 million per year contract.

"You just can't walk away from that kind of responsibility," he said.

The university created the weapons research program at the Los Alamos, N.M. lab 35 years ago and the program at the Livermore lab in Berkeley in 1953. It has supervised the research ever since.

The research came under increasing criticism as part of the anti-Vietnam war protest and again as the anti-nuclear power movement swelled in the mid- and late-seventies. Brown has helped mount additional pressure to sever ties between the university and the labs.

"It's more of an issue than it's ever been in the past," Saxon told a press conference. He attributed the controversy to "more public concern about things nuclear and the fact that we now have a governor that's out in front leading the issue."

CB meets tonight

ASUM's Central Board will meet tonight for its first session of the 1980-81 school year, but apparently, two of its members will be absent.

According to ASUM President David Curtis, CB members P. J. Derner and Michael Lopez have decided not to continue serving on the board.

"P.J. is studying in Israel and Michael, I guess, has decided he doesn't have time to serve," Curtis said.

CB is also scheduled to discuss the forming of new ASUM committees and to hear a financial report from ASUM Accountant Andrew Czorny.

The meeting will be at 7 p.m. in the Montana Rooms at the University Center.

Montana's 30 percent coal severance tax, the highest such tax in the nation, has nearly survived the 1980 Congress unscathed, despite several attempts to outlaw it or penalize the state for levying it.

Rep. Ron Marlenee, R-Mont., has worked to kill several measures limiting state mineral taxes, and an aide said yesterday the one anti-tax amendment still to come has little chance of succeeding.

Al Feit, aide to Marlenee, said the amendment would cut some of Montana's federal revenue-sharing funds as a penalty for what some Eastern congressmen see as an excessive tax. But Feit said, "I think we'll win" by killing the amendment, which was voted down by the committee which considered it.

The tax has also been challenged in court on grounds that it restrains interstate trade. Although the Montana Supreme Court upheld the tax last July, the coal companies and utilities that brought the suit are expected to appeal.

Last year's coal tax revenues were about $75 million. Of that, about $23.6 million went into a constitutional trust fund, which can only be spent with the approval of a three-fourths majority of the Montana Legislature. Beginning this year, the fund will contain half of the tax money.

The rest of the money goes to various programs such as aid to affected areas, alternative energy and renewable resource development, and the state's general fund.

Wyoming has the second-highest coal tax, about 17 percent.

Six bills defeated in Congress this year would have limited such taxes to 12.5 percent.

Feit said the coal-tax limitation issue will probably come up in Congress again in 1981.
