This course is a comprehensive review of contemporary human relations from a global perspective. Its central concern is an exploration of the ways people from different backgrounds and traditions approach common problems. While the nation-state is the focus of any discussion of international relations, this institution is examined from both the historical-traditional point of view as well as the evolving, future-oriented point of view. This examination is based upon empirical assessment as well as normative-ethical perspectives. Of special concern are distributive issues like economic development and global welfare disparities. Also, human rights issues and problems associated with the global commons are examined.

Course Objectives:

Develop understanding of the role of political organizations in global relations

Promote the ability to analyze the components of commercial and economic relations at the transnational level

Encourage appreciation for the socio-cultural differences that describe world populations

Increase recognition of the importance of moral and ethical perspectives in international affairs

Encourage an appreciation for the historical changes that have occurred in the value systems embraced by people in different parts of the world

Generate informed discussions of the philosophical controversies and dilemmas in the contemporary world

Course Requirements:

The course is divided into four sections of approximately four weeks each. At the conclusion of each section, there will be a one-hour exam covering the material of that part only. There will be no comprehensive final at the end. The exams will consist of objective type questions and will be designed to draw equally from the textbooks and lecture material. In addition, there will be questions on geography and current world events. Each exam will count for 25% of the final grade. The exams will be electronically graded so purchase at the Bookstore answer form F-289.

MISSED EXAMS WILL BE MADE UP ONE WEEK AFTER THE EXAM DATE.

Legitimate reasons for missing an exam are limited to the following:

1. Sickness
2. Family emergency
3. Personal exigency

To be eligible to make up an exam, written documentation is required.

Extra credit: an additional maximum of 20 points may be earned by writing brief essays on ethical issues raised in the Amstutz book. There will be four such essay opportunities counting five points each. You may write on any or all of these. Five points will be awarded for each of these essays. Tara Steinke will assign and supervise these projects.

GRADES: The course grade will be based on the total of the four exams (400 possible points). Twenty additional points are available as extra credit. Grade distribution will be as follows: top 10% = A; next 20% = B; next 40% = C; next 20% = D; next 10% = F. This course is offered only on the traditional grade basis.

In order to make the experience of this course as pleasant and rewarding as possible for all concerned, you are asked to observe the following rules. Do not come to class late or depart early. Do not use class time to read the Kaimin, write letters, chat with your neighbors or engage in other activities not related to the course.
