Aber Day 1981: a change from recent ‘kegger’ years

By SUSAN TOPT
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Plans for Aber Day 1981 are in the works, and, according to Aber Day Committee Chairman Barry Adams, the day will be a “reuniting of the community and the university.”

Invitations to the festivities will be sent to area schools, community groups, and Missoula legislators, Adams said.

An informal reception is planned for the legislators the evening of May 5, with a barbecue for the community and university members to be held afterward on the Oval.

A tentative schedule of activities for May 6 include:

- the second annual Library Benefit Run, which will start at noon. The race will consist of both a two-mile and a 6.2-mile course around the university campus. Hats will be given to the first 300 entrants. Awards will be given to the first three finishers in each division with $25 gift certificates going to first place men and women. The entry fee is $5.
- an arts and crafts fair to be held on the Oval. This will include community workshops and demonstrations, and carnival games sponsored by campus groups.
- music on the Oval. Adams said a dance is planned during the afternoon of May 6, to be moved inside to the UC ballroom after dark.
- a historical tour of the campus.

An awards ceremony to present the first annual Aber Day Award. This year the award will be presented in the form of a plaque, to University of Montana President Richard Bowers in honor of his service to the university and the community, Adams said. Bowers’ term of office ends June 30.

Aber Day activities are being funded by a $150 special allocation from Central Board and a $500 donation from the Missoula Liquid Assets Corporation. MLAC sponsored Aber Day activities in the past, including the Library Kegger, last held in 1979.

Pay today
State and federal income taxes are due at midnight tonight. If you haven’t filed by then, you have a good excuse, because the government may soon be on your tail.

A two-month extension for federal forms will be allowed if Form 4868—“Application for Automatic Extension of Time to Pay U.S. Individual Tax Returns”—is mailed tonight with a good faith estimate of your taxes owed.

Some taxpayers—at least the ones who don’t have a good excuse, because the government may soon be on their tail—may go in effect next year.

States’ rights an issue in BPA fight

By HYM N ALEXANDER
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Legal briefs may prove more decisive than blueprints in determining how and where the image of the BPA. Environmentalists, homeowners and now state and county governments have condemned the powerhouse and the political maneuvers that authorized Bonneville to do the construction.

Environmentalists say the powerhouse will cause irreparable harm to the land as construction crews cross wilderness areas. Home owners fear the high-voltage lines will create health hazards and lower property values.

The state wants a voice in federal projects built in Montana. And Missoula County is concerned that, because BPA is a federal agency and would not have to pay local property taxes, it is being cheated out of a tax base while it is forced to suffer negative aspects of the powerhouse.

The BPA powerhouse will join a similar line the Montana Power Co. plans to build from Colstrip to Townsend. The powerhouse will link Colstrip’s coal-fired generating plants with BPA’s Pacific North West power grid. Because of the lawsuits, that route is now in question.

Selfish society may stymie air solutions

People on the wood stove bandwagon may get burned—with a $10 annual permit—if a suggestion by one of four air pollution study committees takes hold.

The Missoula City-County Air Pollution Control Board will begin considering tonight the suggestions of four different committees.

Each committee is a cross-section of community members, that has been studying one of four aspects of Missoula's air pollution problems for the past three months. The categories were health effects, residential wood burning, transportation and future solutions.

The wood burning committee report includes recommendations for rules to curtail installation of inefficient wood burning stoves in new homes, and a system of fines and citations for people violating wood burning regulations.

Although the committee suggests public education and voluntary reduction of wood smoke pollution as a primary means to reduce the valley's air pollution woes, they also include in their report a permit system for residential wood burning stoves.

As picturesque as the idea might be of Missoulians rallying together to save their air, it probably won't work. Ours is often a selfish society where one's freedom to burn is more highly valued than our right to breathe. And sad but true, voluntary systems usually fail.

Remember recycling and self-imposed gas rationing? It's about time the board and Missoulians got around to the idea of wood burning regulations.

Although the committee suggests public education and voluntary reduction of wood smoke pollution as a primary means to reduce the valley's air pollution woes, they also include in their report a permit system for residential wood burning stoves.

Another committee is presenting recommendations for handling transportation-related air pollution. It suggests teaching Missoulians to depend less on their cars, and use their feet, bicycles and public transportation.

As yet another lofty thought, riding a bicycle down Brooks to Southgate Mall should qualify the rider for a permit. Bike paths need to be given stronger consideration.

Missoula could be an ideal bike riding town. It's flat, moderately sized and has reasonably good weather.

But bike paths need to be given stronger consideration.

After the board hears tonight's recommendations, Missoulians will be given a couple weeks to mull them over before a public comment meeting on April 25. If Missoulians are tired of seeing the air they breathe, they should go to the meetings and formulate and express some opinions.

U.S. must rally around ideals

Editor: The history of the civil rights movement is chalked out before me. The question is asked, "How far have we come?" This question vibrates through the inner cells of my mind. Where is the justice and righteousness of Don Quixote, Daniel Boone or Cyrano de Bergerac? Where is the courage to point out injustices and wrongdoing when their rotten snouts permeate the air? Has it died with Martin and John F.K. or Susan R. and Mrs. Nightingale? I definitely believe it is not gone. The ideals and actions only are hidden to show its pride one day soon.

Ideologies came to oppose us. Yes, the exploitation and greed of capitalism, as well as the bushwhay and athenism of Marx Leninism. We cannot allow other to grow or exist. Here we have the freedom to vanguard the values. Have we must take our stand. Isn't the time ready?

Do we need a cause to pull our unity together? Is it true what Martin Luther King said—"if some one has not found something worth dying for, he has nothing worth living for?" The cause to squash the prejudgment and racism is at our fingertips. It breeds like human waste it's germ in the bathroom labeled KKK or Nazism. When this mess is found, we cannot ignore it or rationalize ourselves out of our responsibility.

As a matter of fact, the death of 20 black children in Atlanta can strike even closer to home. Here, transcending the racial tension, both black and white are rallying together in an effort to halt these atrocities to innocent humanity. Surely, this cause is valiant.

As a symbolic gesture carried over from the Iranian crisis, a national campaign of sympathy and solidarity is occurring, symbolically demonstrated by the wearing of ribbons. The color of ribbons to be worn were suggested as black (symbolizing mourning) and green or red (symbolizing hope). The World Student Times urged its readers "to wear ribbons, of whatever color, as an expression of respect and empathy for bereaved families, and as a symbol of universal brotherhood, until these murders have been solved."

In proportion to the world community, America is a great nation of which we can all be proud. The "majestic" touchdown of the space shuttle shows the world what potential America has to really help and serve all of humanity. And when the slayers in Atlanta, assassins, capitalist exploiters or communicative agitators rape her, we must be clear in mind and swift in action to protect her. As our vision rises, we can carry our courage to other countries, healing and indemnifying our past mistakes.

Let us rally around the ideals for which America was founded. May we extend our hand to support our president, and offer constructive advice in his time of recovery, and show Americas that we are the youth who care for our society. Even now, Martin Luther King's voice rings out shouting for the time that "all men can live with dignity" and "the brotherhood of man will be achieved." "May we release our human potential and spirit which has been suppressed for so long.

Easter rally

Editor: "I press my face against the earth, exploiting our particles of dust that shine then fade like phantoms. I am strangled to a star, my legs spread between its points suspended zero zero zero. Here at the furnace door the smell of flesh and bones is faint, the sound of sizzling breath is my only friend. Dog owners: it's Wednesday, April 15. Do you know where your pet is? If your dog is unleashed or unattended on campus today, chances are the two of you will next meet at the city-county dog pound.

Richard Walsh, University of Montana maintenance supervisor, said Monday that starting today, a city animal warden will be on campus for one hour each week to round up loose or unattended dogs.

The dog-catching campaign will be carried out under the terms of a contract signed recently by the city and UM. The contract, which has been under negotiation since November, recently received support from the Missoula City Council and Mayor Bill Creger.

Monday, Walsh met with Assistant Chief of Police Roy Hughes, to coordinate the program. Walsh and Hughes will schedule a random hour each week for dog catching, Walsh said.

Hours of peak dog population have been determined, he said, and this week patrolling will occur during that hour.

"I know when it is, but nobody else will," he said, referring to peak dog populations. "It won't be the same hour or day each week," he added.

The agreement, which expires Oct. 1, calls for the university to pay $100 per month for one hour per week of services from the city animal warden. The dogcatcher will patrol the campus anytime from "daylight to darkness," Hughes said.

In addition to weekly patrols by the city warden, Walsh said one UM physical plant department employee with dogcatching experience will be "worn in" as an animal warden.

The time this individual spends each week seizing dogs will be proportionate to the number of dogs on campus, Walsh said. If the numbers warrant it, the employee could conceivably spend 40 hours per week as a dogcatcher, he added.

Dogs left unattended or chained to trees, bicycle racks and buildings won't escape the dogcatcher's grasp.

"If a dog is on campus," Walsh said, "it better be on a leash, and there better be an owner on the other end of the leash." Otherwise dog owners are in violation of a city ordinance that requires dogs to be leashed within the city limits.

The crackdown on the campus dog populations is in response to a growing number of complaints about dog-related problems. Walsh said the problems include disruptive barking, property damage and the accumulation of animal feces.

"Really, I sympathize with the dogs," Walsh said, explaining that it is a small percentage of irresponsible dog owners that create problems for the entire campus population.

Dogs picked up by the city will be taken immediately to the Missoula City-County Animal Pound, which is located on Clark Fork Drive.

Dogs apprehended by the UM campus population.

Sex-ed in the schools?

HELENA (AP)—With the strongest possible language short of a mandate, the State Board of Public Education yesterday recommended that Montanans teach courses in human sexuality and family life.

The board adopted that policy on a vote of 6 to 1, after splitting 3 to 2 against adopting a policy of mandatory sex education.

"To add clout to its recommendation, the board voted to eventually include sex education courses in the 'recommended' section of the state accreditation standards for public and private schools. That would still not be a mandate but would amount to the highest kind of encouragement," Republican State School Superintendent Ed Argenbright immediately informed the board he would not go along with "encouraging" sex education in Montana schools. He said his office would comply with the board's policy by acting as a clearinghouse for information on sex education programs, but not more.

The board rejected adding language that "pre-marital sex is regarded by most churches as immoral." Board member Jean Robocker of Kalispell, the only member who voted against adoption of the board, called for deletion of that language on grounds that it was not comprehensive enough.

A board official said, "churches are not the only entities that believe pre-marital sex is immoral."

Admissions applicant here tomorrow

The first of four final candidates for the position of director of admissions will arrive at the University of Montana tomorrow for a full day of interviews and meetings.

Daniel Baker, dean of admissions at McKendree College in Lebanon, Ill., was chosen as a finalist from about 50 applicants, according to Berta Piane, administrative secretary of student affairs.

In addition to conferences with the seven members of the UM admissions search committee, Baker is scheduled to meet with students, faculty and staff in the Lodge Food Service conference room from 2:30 to 3:30 p.m.

The three other candidates and the dates they are scheduled to visit UM are:

- Michael Aiken, director of admissions at Southern Methodist University in Marshall, Minn. He is scheduled to arrive at UM Monday.
- Philip Colstatt, associate director of admissions at Northern Illinois University in DeKalb, Ill. He is scheduled to arrive at UM April 27.
- Daniel Shelley, assistant director of admissions at Bowling Green State University in Ohio. He is scheduled to arrive at UM April 30.

According to admission department criteria, qualifications for the position include a bachelor's degree, and experience in admissions such as recruitment and supervisory responsibility. The position will begin July 1, also requires familiarity with admissions data processing systems.

Jim Royan, acting admissions director, replaced Allan Vannini, director of the UM Foundation, last September. Richard Hill, selected for admissions director last year,quit his job in July apparently because of disagreements with the UM administration.

Members of the UM admissions search committee include: Fred Weldon, director of student affairs and chairman of the committee; Philip Catalifo, dean of the college of arts and sciences.

and for room, board and tuition for seven weeks of study. Wollersheim's maternal grandparents are from the families of Ungaretti and Puccinelli in Lucca, Italy; she has many relatives in that area.

Wollersheim is "a fine student; she is a talented musician," said Maureen Cumow, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

"She is a personable young woman with clearly established goals," Curnow added.

Wollersheim credited Curnow and Domenico Ortai, professor of foreign languages, with nominating her for the scholarship.

The birds in the backyard stopped twittering. The breeze stopped blowing and Tamara raised up from her back-porch lounge chair.

"Hello, Tamara."
"Hello, Les." She shaded her eyes from the sun. "Nice day today, Les."

"Yeah. Sunny and 70, some clouds and a bit of warmth," Les agreed. "So why the trenchcoat? Still out playing cops and robbers?"

Tamara laughed. "Funny! Almost as funny as murder by pitchfork."

Les stiffened. "Funny! Almost as funny as murder by pitchfork."

"Like what?"
"Like sacking hopping with the deceased's husband! It's called adultery, baby! It's also called a murder."

Tamara's piercing laugh froze Les in his wingtips. "You'll never forget, will you, Les? Elephants never forget. Or is it jackasses? You carry that ego of yours in a plastic sack, dear."

Les trembled inside as a sleek laugh spilled out of Tamara's robe. He closed his eyes and tried to forget those sticky summer nights of mephitic ecstasies. He was glad he had his trenchcoat on.
