Faculty pay-raise offer less than expected

By Doug O'Harra
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The bargaining team for the University of Montana administration, during its current negotiations with the University Teachers' Union, has proposed lower-than-expected faculty salaries and a reduced role for the Faculty Senate.

The UTU and the Montana University System are currently negotiating a new contract, and representatives met yesterday and Tuesday. The present contract expires June 30.

According to a member of the UTU bargaining council, the administration team proposed that the faculty receive a 7.6-percent raise the 1981-82 academic year, along with a one-time $100 bonus; and for the year after, the team proposed an 8.6-percent raise.

The council member, who did not wish to be identified, said the faculty had expected to receive a 12-percent raise for each year because of action taken by this year's Montana Legislature.

Howard Reinhardt, president of the UTU, said the union was "very upset" when it received the initial raise proposals. He added that the administration team has since proposed higher raises, but Reinhardt would not comment further.

The administration team also has proposed that the duties of the Faculty Senate be limited to making specific changes in the curriculum, and to setting general requirements for degrees and admission and retention of students. Under the current contract, the Senate is also concerned with developing or altering academic programs, dealing with UM academic matters and items of "critical concern" to the welfare of UM, and the forming of committees to carry out Senate responsibilities.

The UTU proposes the Senate not only retain all of its current duties, but also that "no action concerning academic affairs be undertaken without approval of the Senate." The UTU also wants the contract to read that the Senate's duties will "include but not be limited to" the responsibilities in the current contract.

Neither Reinhardt, nor Charles Bryan, professor of mathematics and chief negotiator for the UTU, would comment. Jack Noble, chief negotiator for the administration team and deputy commissioner for financial affairs of the university system, could not be reached for comment.

According to documents provided by a member of the UTU bargaining council, the administration team has also proposed that faculty members working professionally outside of UM must submit a written report

Bargaining table closed to press

A Montana Kaimin reporter was refused admittance Tuesday morning to the closed bargaining session between the University Teachers' Union and the Montana University System bargaining team—a meeting which may be subject to the Montana Open Meeting Law.

The Montana Open Meeting Law states that

"actions and deliberations of all public agencies shall be conducted openly." A meeting is defined as "a quorum of constituent membership of a public agency" that meets "to hear, discuss, or act upon a matter over which the agency has supervision, controls, jurisdiction, or advisory power."

The law further states that any committee appointed by a public body "which is within the jurisdiction of that agency" shall be subject to the open meeting law.

Jack Noble, chief negotiator for the university system team, refused to allow the reporter to attend the meeting.

He said according to the

Programming director will be chosen today

By Susan Toft
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Two of the four applicants for ASUM Programming director said Tuesday that Programming should not co-promote any large-scale events, but the other two said perhaps it should in certain cases despite the financial risk.

The new ASUM Programming director will be chosen today, and in interviews conducted Tuesday, applicants for the position aired their views on Programming and its functions.

The applicants are Sam Goza, senior in business administration and ASUM pop concerts coordinator; Liz Hogan, senior in liberal arts and ASUM performing arts coordinator; P.J. Dermer, senior in history/political science; and Ron Ellis, junior in business administration.

Current Director Rick Ryan's term ends this quarter.

Of the four applicants, only Ellis has never worked with ASUM Programming. He said, however, that he has worked with MCA Records in Nashville, doing promotional work. He admitted it is a "drawback" that he's never been involved with Programming.

All the applicants agreed that the director's job is one of overseer—to hire competent program coordinators to handle the different entertainment classifications within Programming. Those classifications are pop concerts, performing arts, lectures, movies and coffeehouse concerts.

Hogan said the qualities she will look for in coordinators will

Admissions director chosen

By Heidi Bender
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Michael Aiken, director of admissions and orientation at Southwest State University in Marshall, Minn., was chosen Tuesday as the new admissions director for the University of Montana.

Aiken was one of four finalists for the position, all of whom were interviewed at UM over the past four weeks.

The admissions search committee, made up of UM students, faculty and staff, submitted its recommendations to UM President Richard Bowers, who made the final selection.

Aiken was notified of the selection yesterday morning.

In a telephone interview yesterday afternoon, Aiken said he was "still in a state of shock" and delighted with his selection.

As UM admissions director, Aiken said one of his priorities will be to develop a computerized prospective student data file at UM to keep in contact with potential students more efficiently.

The Admissions Office currently is working on a computerized program on which all applications to the university would be processed.

During his first year at UM, Aiken said he expects to spend a great deal of time working with the administration, staff, faculty and students to determine what can be accomplished toward developing a good recruiting program and improving existing programs.

Aiken, who has experience in modernizing recruiting programs and working with computer-based data files, was also associate director of admissions and auxiliary enterprises at the University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee, for six years before he obtained his present position at Southwest State University.

He will assume the position of admissions director at UM during the first week in July.

Jim Royan, who replaced Allan Vannini as acting director of admissions last September, will be leaving his post June 30. Vannini currently is executive director of the UM Foundation and UM director of development.

Vannini became acting director of admissions when Richard Hill quit the position of admissions director after two weeks on the job, because of apparent differences with the UM administration.

According to a statement released by Bowers at that time, Hill had cited "dissatisfaction with university support" as the reason for his resignation.

However, according to Bowers' statement, Hill had not complied with requests to evaluate what could be done with the office, given the present budget, or to examine possible reassignment of admissions staff duties. Bowers said he felt it was made clear that both were necessary before any budget or staff increases could be discussed.

This year, Fred Weldon, chairman of the admissions search committee, said there had been a "strong pool of applicants" for the admissions director position.

He said faculty, students and staff did not show as much interest as he had anticipated or would have liked, but that the response the committee did receive on the candidates was beneficial in forming its recommendations.

The other three finalists for the post were Daniel Shelley, assistant director of admissions at Bowling Green State University, Ohio; Daniel Baker, dean of admissions at McKendree College, Lebanon, Ill.; and Philip Coltart, associate director of admissions at Northern Illinois University, DeKalb, Ill.

Closed bargaining session unethical and maybe illegal

There is a dark and mysterious cloud that hangs heavy over the University of Montana. That cloud is not Missoula pollution, but its foul odor and distorting haze are the same. That cloud is obscuring the clear vision of us all.

The collective bargaining sessions between the state administration and the University Teachers' Union are closed to the public and press.

Not only is this ethically unfounded since the negotiations are dealing with millions in public money, it is probably in violation of the Montana Open Meetings Law.

According to the Montana Codes Annotated, "all meetings (a convened quorum to hear, discuss or act on a matter) of public and governmental bodies, boards, bureaus, commissions, agencies of the state, or any political subdivision of the state or organizations or agencies supported in whole or in part by public funds or expending public funds shall be open to the public."

There are some exceptions to the open meetings law however. The presiding officer of the group may close the meeting if what the group is discussing pertains to an individual where his privacy "clearly exceeds" the merits of public disclosure.

The meeting also may be closed if the group is discussing strategy regarding collective bargaining or litigation.

The members of the bargaining teams say they are "comfortable" with the legitimacy of their decision to close the meeting. Before 1975, collective bargaining sessions could be closed. However, that language has been deleted since, in keeping with the legislative intent of the law to open meetings that deal with public funds.

A second excuse the teams give to the public they serve is that they do not want to bargain their contracts in the pages of the newspapers.

Setting aside press privilege, what about the public? Have they not a right to know about the bargaining that indirectly affects their tax bills?

Newspaper stories are written to present both sides of a story. Each side has the opportunity to give its side of the issue, and have it objectively presented in the newspaper. The UTU and administrative teams would not be bargaining in the pages of the newspaper, just having their activities at the meetings recorded.

The proposals themselves should be known to the public. If the bargaining teams wished to discuss strategy regarding a counterproposal, they could always excuse themselves from the bargaining session to discuss that strategy.

A third excuse used is that the bargaining teams say they are not legally a quorum, and therefore not subject to the law. They maintain they are merely representatives of a larger group, and they both need the approval of the UTU membership and the Board of Regents on the tentative contract.

These arguments are unfounded for two reasons.

Section four of the open meetings law states that "any committee or subcommittee appointed by a public body for the purpose of conducting business which is within the jurisdiction of that agency shall be subject to the requirements of this section." The bargaining teams, regardless of whether their decisions are binding, have the authority to discuss the use of public funds and make decisions about those funds.

Secondly, the last contract the UTU struck with the administration's bargaining team was signed for approval by the members of the two bargaining teams. The contract is a tentative agreement subject to the approval of the UTU members and the regents, but the package as a whole is bargained and approved by representatives of those two groups.

Closing the bargaining sessions is an aberration of justice. The bargaining teams are dealing with millions in public money. The public has a right to know the negotiations concerning that money.

The UTU and the administrative bargaining teams should open their negotiations to the public. This cloak of secrecy is harmful. The opening of the bargaining sessions would make the teams accountable not only to the public, but to the groups they represent.

Goldis replies

Editor: Last Tuesday I came across a note to the editor which I felt required a response, as it concerned myself.

It is always unfortunate when notes appear in newspaper columns that have been written from a frustrated sense of self, out of anger and without regard for the facts involved; the truth, to be more precise.

Such letters usually degenerate into a morass of insipidity, leaving nothing for the interested reader to glean other than the general tone and the obvious bias involved.

Henderson's commentary appears to reflect such a disposition and suffers from it. His awkward phrasing in "I am very disturbed . . ." leaves one with a humorous impression of his state of mind.

Worse, he writes: "Goldis' response to a question concerning the Greek system to be composed of . . ." To be composed of? And when he again writes: "I would stress to Goldis to become . . ." does he mean he would advise, or that he is 'stressful'?

His misquote and subsequent misunderstanding of my conversation with the secretary of the IFC presents an entirely inaccurate and misleading viewpoint, although I will say the secretary said that many of the Greeks could not get through school without their system.

If there is one thing for certain about the Greek conglomerate, it is while they may get one through school, they don't necessarily lift one from the depths of functional illiteracy, as this Sigma Chi president so gleefully demonstrates. Also, we can see, that the Greek "moral code," whatever that may be, certainly doesn't prevent members from perverting the truth as they find appropriate.

Frat diversity

Editor: We find the views portrayed by Mike McAndrews in the April 24 issue of the Kaimin to be contrary to the beliefs we hold. We don't see our fraternity as "the epitome of conservatism," rather, we change with the times. We are not a bastion of dated traditions, grasping to keep hold of old ideas. As with any group of people, there are diverse interests and opinions held by everyone in the house. Our house contains people who hold political views on each end of the spectrum—from the staunchest of Reagan supporters to students of Karl Marx. Even though our house is diversified, our image is far from being conservative. Actually, the relaxed atmosphere here leads to a somewhat liberal attitude.

Our members are not confined to a mold set by the house to do everything together as a group. However, one of the reasons we are together as a group is because we all enjoy each other's company and enjoy doing things together but, we are glad to see individuals participate in activities with no connection whatever to the house.

Although Mike McAndrews has taken full advantage of the chance to do everything possible to promote the Sigma Nu House, without mentioning any other houses, it is not at all to be condoned, the blame cannot rest fully on him. Actually, the Kaimin holds most of the blame for their (once again) poor display of journalism, shown by asking one man about a large and varied organization, such as the Greek system.

Obey vehicle laws

Editor: I often feel the way Steve Grayson does about the behavior of non-bicyclists, but Grayson is going off the deep end in suggesting violent reaction by bicyclists.

In some instances, bicyclists disregard for the motor vehicle laws will cause the kind of behavior that Grayson relates to us.

While I was waiting for a bus on Arthur Avenue the other day, I noticed bicycles traveling in every direction, against traffic, across traffic, you name it.

Disregard for motor vehicle laws, which bicyclists are mandated to obey, not only endangers other bicyclists but hurts our image.

Cyclists, clean up your image by operating your bicycles in a responsible manner.

KUFM airs special shows for radio week donations

By Tim Rogers
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Monday began a very special week for the staff and volunteers of KUFM, the University of Montana radio station: the sixth annual Public Radio Week.

This is the week staff and volunteers of KUFM put in long hours answering phones, tallying up donations and thanking people who donate their money so KUFM can continue operating another year with its National Public Radio and local programs intact.

Terry Conrad, program director for KUFM, said last year's fund-raiser brought in $25,000, and that the station is confident it can raise $30,000 this year.

KUFM, 89.1 on the FM band, is not funded by the university, so it depends on its listeners for its budget. The five full-time staff members' salaries are paid by the university, but programs, records, power bills, engineering costs, equipment costs and other general operating costs are paid for by donations.

KUFM's membership fee to NPR is paid for by a community service grant from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, Conrad said. The Associated Press teletype machine subscription is paid for by the UM radio-TV department, since it is shared by KUFM and the department.

A number of special programs are planned for the week, including live performances from the KUFM studios by a number of local folk, jazz and rock bands.

So far this week, listeners have heard a live classical set with pianist Christine Anderson and flutist Michael Durkee and live folk and bluegrass music by John Tisdell, host and producer of the Folk Show, which plays regularly on KUFM on Tuesday afternoon. Tisdell always brings musicians to the studio to play live, but thought it appropriate to have himself play this time.

Tisdell said at one time during Tuesday morning's programming, "I stopped the show and said that I wouldn't continue until $186 was phoned in" which would put donations at $6,000. The idea must have worked, because at 1:30 p.m. $7,500 had been raised.

Chuck Florence, a jazz saxophonist, will play this afternoon.

Surfer Ruth, third-place winner in the recent "Battle of the Bands," is scheduled to play live from the studio tonight during the Rock and Roll Show.

Saturday and Sunday will also feature live performances, but Michael Polling, host for "Western Wind," a western-oriented music program, said he doesn't know yet who his guests will be.

Conrad said most public radio stations have fund-raisers, though they don't all hold them at the same time. He said fund-raisers are a time when listeners become involved with the station and believe they play a part in it. He explained that the staff is "very responsive to comments and suggestions made by the audience." For example, he said, expansion of the program Morning Edition from a half-hour to a full hour was prompted by listener response.

One project the money is slated to pay for is the placing of a translator station on Aber Hall to improve KUFM's signal to listeners in the Rattlesnake. The cost of this will be about $12,400, Conrad said, half of which will be paid for by Rattlesnake listeners.

He said the translator, which picks up the transmitter's signal and aims it in a different direction, is needed because there is no "line of sight" between the Rattlesnake and Big Sky Mountain, where the transmitter is located.

Nationwide Mother's Day vigil to protest nuclear proliferation

By Mariann Sutton
Montana Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Mother's Day 1981 will be marked by more than the usual flurry of greeting cards when supporters of the anti-nuclear Mother's Day Vigil for Survival gather at state capitols across the country this Sunday, according to a spokeswoman for the Montana Vigil's Missoula support group.

The Montana vigil will take place at the capitol building in Helena from 1 p.m. to 2 p.m., and will include speeches, singing and a 10-minute period of silence, spokeswoman Brenda Kameenui said.

Kameenui, Missoula schoolteacher and organizer of the Missoula support group, stressed that the protest is not limited to mothers, but is open to anyone concerned about the possibility of nuclear war.

"We have tried to make this a true coalition of people who are willing to work for peace, to struggle for peace," Kameenui said. "This is an alternative to the Hallmark card-type of Mother's Day."

Kameenui said the purpose of the state and national vigils is to raise people's awareness of military escalation and the proliferation of nuclear weapons. She said the people involved in the vigil believe there are ways to resist this nuclear growth. Concerned individuals should write their congressmen, she said, and the nation should end its commitment to maintaining a balance of nuclear weapons as a means of national defense.

"If we continue to escalate and other countries do also, the temptation to use these weapons will become too great," Kameenui said. She said further buildups of nuclear weapons are not necessary for defense because this country already has enough nuclear weapons to destroy every city in the Soviet Union more than 40 times.

Citing a recent United Nations report that said the United States and the Soviet Union together have over 40,000 nuclear weapons, she said only 300 to 400 nuclear weapons are necessary to destroy either country.

Kameenui said the people in this country should "start screaming."

"Let Washington know that the people can't sit by and be numbed by this escalation."

Anyone interested in joining the Helena vigil can meet in the field house parking lot at 9:15 a.m. Sunday. There will be a bus and car pools available, but any additional transportation will be appreciated, she said.

There will be a picnic in a Helena park near the capitol grounds after the vigil, Kameenui said.

She said anyone wishing to support the protest without going to Helena should keep their own 10-minute silent vigil sometime between 1 p.m. and 2 p.m.

Forestry alumni banquet Friday

The University of Montana's Forestry Alumni Association will hand out over $5,000 worth of scholarships and several awards to professors and students during its Spring Awards Banquet this Friday.

The awards banquet, first held in 1978, will be in the University Center Gold Oak Room at 7 p.m.

The guest speaker will be Tom Borden, Colorado state forester and president of the Society of American Foresters.

The emcee for the dinner will be former state director of the Bureau of Land Management, Ed Zaidlicz.

Tickets are available in Forestry 110 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. The cost is $4 for students and $8 for the general public.

"Did you ever taste beer?" "I had a sip of it once," said the small servant. "Here's a state of things," cried Mr. Swiveller. "She never tasted it—it can't be tasted in a sip."

Rabies moves west of Continental Divide

HELENA (AP)—About 30 people in Montana have already been treated for rabies this year, and the peak season for the deadly disease has just begun, state veterinarian James Glosser says.

He said he is especially concerned because the disease has moved west of the Continental Divide for the first time. He said a rabid skunk and two rabid cats were discovered in Flathead County in February.

Montana's first rabies case appeared in 1964 in eastern Montana, and the disease has moved westward since.

Most of this year's cases—about 40 in all—have involved skunks, he said.

Glosser issued a quarantine Tuesday for unvaccinated cats and dogs in Teton County. He said the state cannot enforce the quarantine, but that it helps local officials.

Twenty-six of Montana's 56 counties have been quarantined so far.

Catholic Church supports revolutionaries, Curtiss says

By Tom Alton
Montana Kaimin Contributing Reporter

The Roman Catholic Church supports the revolutionaries in El Salvador in their struggle against the U.S.-backed repressive government, Bishop Eldon Curtiss of Helena said Tuesday night.

The bishop told about 40 people in the University Center Lounge that while U.S. aid is "detrimental to the fundamental question of poverty," the church is "committed to the will of the majority of the people — the poor."

Curtiss said he has never been to El Salvador, but that he has served as recently as last February at a Catholic mission in Guatemala. He said he presented a report to the Vatican on the military, political and economic situation in Central America.

American bishops are in direct contact with the church in El Salvador, Curtiss said. "The witness of the church there is a real one," he said.

About 80 percent of the people are suppressed by the established government of Jose Napoleon Duarte, and the United States is supporting that "rightist" regime, Curtiss said.

"Our concern is that the quest for social justice for the majority is not suppressed by the rulers," he said.

Curtiss described the U.S. State Department's definition of the situation in El Salvador as "troubling."

He said if the U.S. government does not give priority to internal injustices there, it "misdefines the problem and subordinates the needs of the people to a geo-political conflict that is one step removed from their daily lives."

Curtiss said Catholic bishops in El Salvador recognize the risks in advocating social and economic reform there, but there is greater risk in the status quo, which he called un-Christian.

"We have to have people in the church who are willing to give up their lives if necessary," he said.

Curtiss said the church and all others involved in social reform in El Salvador are seen by the Duarte government as communists. He said Archbishop Rivera Damas thinks he will be the next to be assassinated. Damas replaced Archbishop Oscar Romero, who was killed in El Salvador in March 1980.

When Romero first went to El Salvador, Curtiss said, he was a quiet theologian. But when he began to speak out for organization and reform for the poor, he marked himself for death and was assassinated.

Curtiss said the United States is placing itself on the side of those who support repression and resist change.

"We are supporting the ruling military junta," he said, "and suppressing the dignity of man."

The problems in Guatemala are similar to those in El Salvador, but complicated by the discovery of oil there, Curtiss said. He said a small group controls about 80 percent of the wealth in Guatemala and that group makes tremendous profits from the export of fruit and beef. The great injustice, he said, is the people could support themselves, but so much of what they produce is exported.

Curtiss predicted revolution will come in Guatemala within five years, and the only thing that could delay it would be U.S. military support of the ruling class.

"If we support the government in Guatemala," he said, "we are doing so against the wishes of 80 percent of the people. That is the stupidity of our policy in Central America."

Curtiss said in Guatemala there is a ruling class supported by the military. "And with the discovery of oil there," he said, "I suspect the United States will keep the military there very strong."

He said the church has been the major influence against the regime in Guatemala by pushing reform and organization of the Indians.

Interviewed after the lecture, Curtiss said he doesn't feel the American press is misrepresenting the facts in El Salvador, but it is concentrating on the wrong problem. Rather than reporting poverty and injustices in El Salvador, he said, the press is concentrating on the global conflict between the United States and the Soviet Union.

"The press is focusing on the hemispheric tension," he said. "It's not misinformation, but the focus is screwy."

Curtiss said the United States supports such an unpopular and repressive regime because it is part of U.S. foreign policy to support any government that will tie itself to the United States politically and economically.

The responsibility of the great states is to serve and not to dominate the world.

Teamsters' head, Fitzsimmons, dies

Teamsters President Frank Fitzsimmons, a high school dropout who ruled the nation's biggest union for the last 14 years, died yesterday, several weeks after he was hospitalized for lung cancer. Reports of Fitzsimmons' death came as the executive board of the two million-member union was meeting in Washington, D.C., to consider a successor. Union sources said Roy Williams, head of the Central Conference of Teamsters in Kansas, is the front runner.

Programming director . . .

be determination, enthusiasm, experience and "a sense of dedication."

"The hardest thing a director has to do," she said, "is to choose coordinators. Basically, you're judging a person's character and you hope you judge right."

The applicants were unsure, however, how to maintain the coordinators' "financial accountability" — making sure they don't overspend their budgets for each event. Hogan said budgets should be drawn up by coordinators before the event, listing all projected expenses and income.

Goza said the problem is that the coordinators are "winging it" because there is not a written job description for them, adding that the "lack of organization within Programming is detrimental to the way things work now."

A monthly report to the director from each coordinator would improve what Goza said he considers to be "lack of communication" within the Programming office.

In light of the $16,000 loss suffered by Programming on the Atlanta Rhythm Section concert in October, the topic of co-promoting concerts was a main point in the interviews. Ellis said he sees "no problems with ASUM co-promoting" a field house concert, if the group is a "major attraction, mainstream and real commercial."

Co-promoting an event puts ASUM in a financially risky position because it absorbs the loss if the event loses money. By having an outside promoter, ASUM Programming takes a percentage of the profits with no financial risk.

Hogan and Dermer said co-promoting an event is not worth the financial risk. Goza said co-promoting should be used on smaller scale events such as lectures. He added that promoters have a "better intuitive sense" as to what type of event will be successful, and that Programming should work with promoters for field house events, but not necessarily to co-promote.

Ellis said his contacts and experience in the entertainment industry qualify him for the job of director. He says he has "as many contacts as anybody" and also has the "capabilities" to do the job.

Ellis had no specific ideas on any improvements within Programming, saying that he doesn't know how the structure of Programming worked and therefore couldn't suggest changes.

Hogan said her experience as performing arts coordinator qualifies her for the director's job, adding that she wants to see the work she's done with performing arts carried through. She also said there has been a problem with scheduling events too close to one another and that she would space them out a little more.

She said her weak point is that she has had no experience in dealing with the pop concerts area of Programming, but would overcome that by hiring a coordinator with pop concerts experience and, "the things I've learned (as performing arts coordinator) can apply to all parts of Programming."

Dermer, who has worked as stage manager for Programming events, said the main function of Programming is entertainment and "an outlet" for students, adding that Programming is not "out to make a lot of money."

He said Programming's accounting could be improved if financial matters could move through the state's accounting system faster, but he offered no specific ideas on how this could be done. He said the Programming director and ASUM accountant Andrew Czorny should be responsible for Programming's account — "definitely not the Controller's Office."

Goza said Programming's financial accounting could be improved if ASUM had its own computer because the accounting is "hampered by the state accounting system."

Goza said Programming director is a "natural progression" from pop concerts coordinator for him, adding that he intends to pursue a career in entertainment management or booking.

When asked how the high quality of pop concerts can be maintained in the face of budget cuts, Goza said additional funds for Programming could be raised through events such as auctions. He said perhaps local businesses could be persuaded to donate items for an auction in return for receiving free publicity, with Programming receiving the financial benefits.

Weather or Not

Les nubbed a quarter out of his trenchcoat. "Call it, Two Fingers." He flipped it end over end towards the felt.

"Heads." It hit eagle-up.

"Rack 'em, Eddie."

"Les, I'm gonna make you wish you never grew fingers. I'm gonna baptize those pockets with the number of every ball on the table. I'm gonna run 38 little guys, 50 big guys, shower those side pockets and put cloudy skies over your sorry existence. You'll wish you never saw the sun."

Les' Camel dangled over his poised stick like a lantern in the rain. "Straight pool to 100," he uttered. Les drilled the cut into the multi-colored triangle, popping the five-ball into the corner. He ran the next 13 balls.

Eddie gulped.

"How's 'bout to 200?"

Correction

Some remarks were incorrectly attributed to University of Montana President Richard Bowers in the Montana Kaimin's April 24 article on the final day of the legislative session.

Bowers was quoted as saying, "There's no way we can complain about this session—we got what we needed and more." ASUM lobbyist Steve Carey actually said that.

In addition, Bowers' alleged statement that predicted a "more pleasant and better equipped" working environment for UM as a result of the increased budget, was made by Bowers aide John Crist—not Bowers.

The Kaimin regrets the error.

Benefit run nets dollars for UM departments

Dennis Normand, Greg Strizich, Nancy Fetz, Judy Goffena and the University of Montana Physical Therapy Club were the big winners in yesterday's second annual Library Benefit Run, which raised almost $1,000 this year.

Normand, running in the men's 18- to 24-year-old division of the two-mile race, was the men's overall winner, with a time of 10:03.

Strizich won the 18- to 24-year-old division of the 6.2 mile race with a time of 32:31 and was the men's overall winner.

Fetz was the women's 6.2-mile winner with a time of 40:05, running in the 35- to 44-year-old division.

Goffena, who ran in the 18- to 24-year-old age group, was the overall winner in the women's two-mile race with a time of 13:04.

The Physical Therapy Club won the discipline contest, in which academic departments on campus competed to win the most money, with $265.65 raised in entrance fees and contributions. The foreign language and literatures departments raised $238, earning second place.

One hundred-fifty dollars in entrance fees also will be given to the Physical Therapy Club for new books for the physical therapy department, said Karen Hatcher, associate professor of library sciences. She said the 160 entrants were supposed to mark on their entry ballots to what department they wanted their entrance fee donated. The fees of those who didn't mark the ballots went to the general fund, she said.

Last year's race was held on a Sunday and had over 200 runners. It had been postponed because of the ash fallout from Mount St. Helens.

Winners in each of the 12 divisions were given ribbons and baked goods — either cookies or cake.

Earle Thompson, dean of library services, said in the introduction to the awards ceremony in the University Center Mall that the Library Benefit Run was "initiated to bring back the traditional Aber Day, give the University of Montana a better image, promote physical fitness and raise funds for the library."

The Associated Students Store donated the hats given to the runners and the two $25 gift certificates for the winners, he said.

First, second and third place winners in each age group, if there were that many finishers in each group, are listed below.

To protect your privacy, don't waste words with unwanted callers.

Your phone is part of your home. And at Mountain Bell, we understand that when someone uses your phone to invade your privacy, it's like an unwanted visitor coming through your front door. But we want you to know that you can have the last word with these callers. By not wasting any words with them at all.

If the caller is a salesperson using a hard sell, you don't have to listen. Just say you're not interested, and hang up.

If you get an obscene call, or the caller remains silent, don't stop to listen. Above all, don't talk to them. Hang up on their hang-ups. And if these callers keep after you or threaten you, get in touch right away with the police and your local Mountain Bell business office. We'll help you find other ways to deal with these calls.

No matter what kind of unwanted calls you get, let your actions speak louder than their words. By hanging up. It's the best way we know to protect the privacy of your home. And your phone.

Bowers garners three awards at Aber Day ceremony

By Tim Rogers
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Richard Bowers often has been criticized and under fire during his reign as University of Montana president by both students and faculty, but yesterday was award day for him, and he received plenty of praise.

ASUM President Steve Spaulding presented Bowers with the first annual Aber Day Award, "given to the person who best helps the university or improves community - university relations," according to Barry Adams, chairman of the Aber Day Committee. Bowers was given the award for his efforts in recruiting students for UM and his work during legislative sessions, especially this year's, in which the university received a 38-percent increase in funding and a new fine arts building. Sue Grebeldinger, Programming lectures coordinator, listed these accomplishments in a speech before the presentation.

Bowers also was presented with an award by Bill Anderson of the Interfraternity Council and Diane Elliott of the Panhellenic Council in recognition of his service to the university and the state of Montana. Bowers was greeted warmly by the 50 people attending the presentation in the University Center Mall.

But Bowers didn't stop here in garnering awards — he also took third place in a group for the 6.2-mile Library Benefit Run, with a time of 55:49.

Programming Director Rick Ryan also presented the first Gary Bogue Campus Beautification Award to Gary Bogue, for his work to beautify the campus, particularly in the UC and Mammary Park areas. Bogue was not present to accept the award. Ryan said Bogue was out planting trees and other plants around campus.

The award will be given annually to the person, group, club, fraternity, sorority or dorm which does the most to beautify or improve the campus, Ryan said.

He said an example of a club's work to improve the campus is the Forestry Club's tearing up of the sidewalk between the Venture Center and the Forestry Building and replacing it with a wood-chip walkway, which was done several years ago.

Forum assesses 1981 Legislature

By Susan Toft
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The University of Montana had one of the most effective lobbying efforts in Helena during this legislative session, Bill Norman, District 47 senator from Missoula, said during a panel discussion Tuesday night.

The legislative panel, consisting of Rep. Dan Kemmis, District 94; Rep. Ralph Eudaily, District 100; Rep. Earl Lory, District 99; and Norman, was held in conjunction with the Aber Day festivities to allow students and university community members to meet with the legislators to discuss the past session.

Norman said legislators from university towns in Montana had worked "hard and effectively" for the schools in past legislative sessions and their efforts "went down in flames." He said lobbying efforts from the university administration, faculty, students and alumni "made a very telling difference" during the 1981 Legislature.

He said the university lobbyists were "getting up there with the heavies," adding they "did a good job and aren't resented yet."

Kemmis said a turning point in the 1981 Legislature came during the break at mid-session when legislators went home and saw "how upset" their constituents were about some of the bills being considered, such as the bills to change the initiative process. He said "the business of going home is important" to maintain contact with the people who elected the legislators.

The bills regarding the initiative process were to double the number of signatures on initiative petitions, to limit signature-gathering at polling places, and to require signature-gatherers to be Montana residents. The only bill approved allows local election officials to regulate signature collection at polling places.

Norman said votes in the Legislature this year were generally not along party lines, except on money questions. He said there is a "cleavage" between urban and rural legislators and between western Montana and eastern Montana legislators.

He said that in the final vote in the Senate on the drug paraphernalia bill, there were three votes against it.

"The three Democrats from Missoula" voted against it, he said, "and that probably sealed the fate of the paraphernalia bill."

When asked about legislators changing initiatives that have been passed by the voting public, Eudaily said the Legislature is a "good sounding board for initiatives." He said the public does not always completely understand what a particular initiative means so the Legislature has a right to change the initiatives.

Kemmis disagreed, saying, "if the people have passed a law, it should be only for the most significant reasons that the Legislature should change it." He added that the Legislature changing initiatives is "one more step in alienating people from the initiative process."

Norman said he anticipates a special session to deal with President Reagan's budget cuts. He said the session could be as early as October or as late as January.

Few showed for Aber Day campus clean-up this year

By Diana Pellegrini
Montana Kaimin Reporter

This year's Aber Day was different from those of recent years.

Gone were the 1,001 kegs and the 10,443 beer drinkers. Gone were rollicking bands such as Mission Mountain, Jerry Jeff Walker, Jimmy Buffett and Bonnie Raitt.

Instead, the day was to be dedicated to cleaning up the campus, according to this year's Aber Day organizers. But only about 60 people showed up to clean the campus.

Bad weather forced all the day's activities, except the benefit races, into the University Center. As the day progressed, more and more people appeared on the Oval, but they were there to play frisbee, not to clean.

This year's Aber Day was an attempt to break away from the idea of an annual kegger, the organizers said.

"It's going to be an uphill battle to get away from the kegger image," said Barry Adams, chairman of the Aber Day Committee.

The idea of Aber Day originated in 1915. Traditionally, it was a time for contests and campus cleanup. The day was named after William Aber, a University of Montana (then Montana State University) Greek and Latin professor from 1895 to 1919.

Over the years, the day became more and more of a party day until it was abolished in 1954. It was revived in 1971 with the annual kegger, which died last year.

This year's Aber Day was an attempt to get students to do something besides drink beer, said Bill Udall, freshman in secondary education and member of the Aber Day Committee. But this concept is going to take a few years to catch on, he added.

Lack of time and money were the organizers' biggest problems, Udall said. The group had only one month to plan Aber Day and a budget of less than $1,100, he said, adding that things were "a bit rushed."

"But support from the UM staff and faculty was a big help to pulling the whole thing off," said Marquette McRae-Zook, freshman in general studies.

"We hope that next year, there will be more of an input from the students," she said. "Students on this campus are different from students on other campuses, because here they are more environmentally aware," she added.

The concept of Aber Day is to get in touch with nature, Adams said.

Aber Day organizers already are planning next year's events, Udall said. They are trying to get funds for a scholarship that will be awarded to a UM student who has served both the university and community, he said, adding that funds for the scholarship will come from alumni contributions.

to the academic vice president before June 15 of each year. A change in the wording of the clause concerning faculty evaluations by the deans also was proposed by the UTU.

Reinhardt, who confirmed that these issues are on the bargaining table, said there are other issues on the bargaining table as well, but would not elaborate.

Reinhardt said the sessions have been "hard bargaining," but added that he thought that the bargaining was in "good faith."

"I'm still hopeful that we're going to have a contract by the end of the month," Reinhardt added.

Forum today

Arnold Bolle, former dean of the University of Montana forestry school, Cass Chinske, Missoula City councilman and several students will speak about the Bob Marshall Wilderness Area today at noon in the University Center Mall.

The speakers will address the history of the wilderness and the current threats of oil and gas exploration in the wilderness. The forum is in conjunction with Bob Marshall Day, which is tomorrow.

team's attorneys, since neither team was a quorum of a public agency, the bargaining session was not subject to the open meeting law, and therefore could be closed to the press.

Noble also said that having a Kaimin reporter present would "make it more difficult to bargain."

But, according to Peter Meloy, attorney for the Montana Press Association, since the bargaining team for the university system has the authority to make tentative agreements with the UTU on behalf of the Board of Regents, the team might be subject to the open meeting law.

However, Meloy said it depends on whether the authority of the bargaining team makes it an "agent" of the regents. If it is, Meloy said, then the meeting should be open.

But, there is no clear answer because the issue has never been decided in court, he added.

Allen Chronister, a Montana assistant attorney general, said the open meeting law has been interpreted to allow the closure of bargaining sessions—an interpretation that Meloy said is "absolutely" wrong. Chronister also said the law had not been challenged in court over collective bargaining.

Charles Bryan, chief negotiator for the UTU, said the union also wants the remaining session closed to the press. "It's counterproductive to bargain in front of the press," he said.
