New appointees acquire 2,4-D controversy

By Hymn Alexander
Montana Kaimin Reporter

New faces may bring new life to the University of Montana Pest Control Committee, which has not met in over a year.

A student representative has been nominated to the committee along with Meyer Chessin, botany professor, who will replace Clancy Gordon, also a botany professor. The fourth member of the committee is James Lowe, assistant dean of the School of Forestry. The name of the student representative could not be obtained yesterday.

The Pest Control Committee is responsible for overseeing chemical applications at UM. Recently, concern has been raised over the practice of spraying the herbicide 2,4-D on campus to kill dandelions and other broadleaf plants.

There are conflicting scientific reports regarding the potential health hazards of 2,4-D.

A student ad hoc committee has been formed to attempt to change the chemical spraying policy at UM. It has been circulating petitions that ask President Richard Bowers to change the spraying policy.

The policy now does not require the Physical Plant, which does the spraying, to notify the public of where or when 2,4-D will be applied.

According to Ken Read, university sanitarian and a member of the committee, university policy states that after the Physical Plant Director Ted Parker, approves an application to apply pesticides, the applications are sent to the members of the committee, who then may comment on the application.

Lowe said "it has been years" since committee members ever returned an unfavorable comment on a pesticide application to Parker.

In April 2,4-D was sprayed on the south end of the campus, including Dornblaser Field and Campbell Field Baseball Park.

Read said he sent the applications for the spraying to Gordon and Lowe. Lowe acknowledged yesterday that he received the applications for the April spraying.

But both Lowe and Chessin, Gordon's replacement on the committee, said they would recommend to the Physical Plant that spraying notices be posted in the future if they felt the public was concerned.

Lowe said under current policy, the Pest Control Committee can only recommend, not order, the Physical Plant to post notice of pesticide spraying.

Parker could not be reached for comment yesterday.

He said because of the controversy that spraying 2,4-D has generated, he expects Read to call a meeting of the committee soon.

Montana Eagle needs more subscribers

The Montana Eagle has half the subscription pledges it needs to begin weekly publication, and the three trial issues published in April have gotten mostly favorable responses, Publisher and Editor James Lubek said yesterday.

Lubek said the Eagle is ready for future issues, and if 2,500 people pledge to subscribe for 5 years, the Eagle can resume publication.

CB members' tempers flare during meeting

By Susan Toft
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Flared tempers and veiled accusations were the order of business for Central Board as it handled two touchy subjects during its regular meeting last night.

Discussion of board members' absences from regularly scheduled meetings and from recent ASUM budgeting sessions, and a budget challenge from a former member of an ASUM student group occupied more than half of the meeting.

Board member Amy Pfeifer raised the question of some board members' absences from budget hearings held last Thursday and this Monday and Tuesday. Attendance at hearings has been erratic, with anywhere from seven to 16 of the members of CB and the three executive officers who are supposed to be present.

It was argued by several board members, during the two-and-a-half-hour meeting, that CB has a responsibility to its constituents and the responsibility should take the form of attendance at budgeting hearings.

Member John Smith said the absences are "unfair to our constituency" and told the other members of the board that "if you don't want to be on the board, resign. It would be the noblest thing to step down if your priorities are not to be here. Get off the board and let someone else on who wants to work."

Marquette McRae-Zook said, "Those (CB members) who weren't at budgeting and don't know what the group are talking about have no right to vote on the budget."

Bjorn Goldis, who missed hearings on Thursday and Tuesday nights and attended Monday night's session sporadically said "I'd rather go to a SAC lecture than listen to a group begging for money. I know about most of these groups and I've known for six or seven weeks and I'm not worried."

"I don't have to be (at budget hearings)," he said. "It's not a matter of life or death."

Paul Kettenring, against whom many of the comments were directed, said "It's a matter of conscience if you feel you're doing what's within your means."

The board decided ASUM President Steve Spaulding would be responsible for alerting CB members that, after three unexcused absences, their attendance would be "under scrutiny" and if there is no improvement, their resignation from CB would be requested.

CB also heard a brief report from Ross Best, sophomore in classics, on his challenge of the Debate and Oratory Association's requested budget. Best charges that the members of the Debate and Oratory group have not been entirely honest with CB in presenting its budget request. (See story on page 4.)

Board member Garth Ferro strenuously objected to Best's presentation, saying that no member of the Debate and Oratory group was present to defend it against the charges.

Instead, the board decided to have Best submit his questions concerning the group's budget to CB, which would then appoint a committee to investigate the charges. It's not known if the committee can complete its investigation by the final budget hearings on Monday night.

Craig and Duniway halls have unwelcome guests

By Tom Alton
Montana Kaimin Contributing Reporter

An outbreak of body lice in two University of Montana dormitories has apparently been brought under control through individual treatment at the Student Health Service.

Ken Read, university sanitarian, confirmed one case of crab lice during the last month, but said fumigation of the dorms would be no help. He said crabs can live away from the human host for only about 24 hours and can be spread by only close personal contact.

"That's the thing about human lice," he said. "It's very personal. We would have to follow each person around to be effective in preventing it from spreading."

Steve Laughrun, assistant residence hall administrator, said the crabs were restricted to the men's wing of third-floor Craig and to third-floor Duniway. The two floors are joined by a common hallway. Laughrun said the one confirmed case came from Craig, and that some of the residents of Craig and Duniway had requested fumigation of the bathrooms.

"It's a personal problem, really," he said. "There's not much we can do cleaning-wise to prevent them. I told the custodians to hit the toilets real well every day, but really they're on the body."

Al Zipf, resident adviser on third-floor Craig, said he

Pope's condition 'guarded' after assassination attempt

VATICAN CITY (AP) Pope John Paul II, shot down by an assassin yesterday in St. Peter's Square, underwent a "successful" operation for six wounds at a Rome hospital, and doctors said his condition was "guarded."

As he beamed and waved to a crowd of 15,000 tourists, shots were fired and the pope slumped in his white jeep. Blood stained his white garments and horrified witnesses cried, "Oh no! Oh no!" Police quickly took into custody a man identified as a Turkish right-wing terrorist who had vowed to kill the 60-year-old pope. He told them he "couldn't care less about life."

American doctors said infection is the main danger of gunshot wounds to the intestine, and surgeons treating Pope John Paul II were doing their best to prevent it.

Doctors in the United States said that on the basis of early reports, the pope's abdominal wounds did not appear to threaten his life, although such wounds can sometimes lead to complications.

Some patients whose wounds are confined to the intestine can be released from the hospital in as little as a week, doctors said.

The major danger with an intestinal wound results from the fact that the contents of the intestines, which contain partially digested food, bacteria, digestive enzymes and dilute acid, are released into

Will Moral Majority save us from our wicked ways?

That wonderful, self-appointed savior of all that is good and right in America will be in our very own decadent Montana tomorrow.

Jerry Falwell, founder of the Moral Majority, will be giving a rally on the steps of the Capitol Building in Helena tomorrow at 10:30 a.m.

The Moral Majority claims to save America from itself by re-instilling in the country the values it was founded on: life, liberty, morality. How strange that its actions would infringe on exactly what it purports to save — life and liberty.

The purpose of Moral Majority, it says, is to politically organize people from all walks of life, and all religions, who are pro-life, pro-traditional family, pro-morality and pro-America. It opposes such things as the SALT treaty, the Department of Education, cuts in the defense budget, abortion, pornography and homosexuality. "Our goal," Falwell said, in a recent magazine interview, "is moral stability where the family is central, the church is safe, and America is the military power she once was and able to protect herself from all would-be invaders."

"Nor can the traditional taboos of our morality be ignored," he continues. "For example, Americans have always looked upon homosexuality as a perversion. It still is. We are not trying to hurt homosexuals. We simply say their way of life is neither normal nor healthy nor moral." (What Falwell and the Moral Majority ignore, however, is that people came to America to be free. The country was conceived with a Declaration of Independence specifically granting all individuals the right to "Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness.")

The budget cuts expressed in the Roth-Kemp plan, the blueprint for Reagan's budget, will severely reduce or eliminate social and welfare benefits for millions of Americans, and is another cornerstone of the Moral Majority's political platform. But now that the budget has been approved, the churches can come to the rescue of the poor, Falwell assures us.

Somehow that is not very comforting news. If the rest of the denominations start managing their churches like Falwell runs his, we can look forward to seeing the poor bled for what little money they have, to support the lifestyles of their religious leaders.

For example, Falwell's incorporation of Moral Majority has allowed him to pull in over $1 million a week in donations. He has a sprawling 12-room Southern mansion, which includes a swimming pool and radio studio. He also has an expansive expense account, free life insurance (his soul is supposedly spiritually insured so this must be for his earthly assets), and a private jet.

Material wealth, he has been quoted as saying, is "God's way of blessing people who put Him first."

Falwell cannot be ignored, for he wields quite a bit of political influence. Recall that it was Falwell's group that helped defeat several incumbent candidates last fall, and U.S. Sen. John Melcher has been targeted for defeat by the New Right when he runs for re-election next fall.

Try if you can to go to Helena tomorrow. Montanans should not be caught unaware of Falwell's rhetoric in the future when we have the opportunity to hear him in our own backyard now. And remember, God loves everybody, despite what Falwell tells us.

Our hearts are grievous and frustrated today, a result of the assassination attempt made on Pope John Paul II yesterday.

Recently it was John Lennon, then President Ronald Reagan. When will this international madness stop? When will people stop killing one another to make a social or political statement? We pray for him.

Editor: On April 18, the Missoulian printed an article under the headline "UM netters look forward to Division II," accompanied by a photograph of Birgitte Giaever, who has played first singles for two years. Not even the picture could redeem the story, which was rooted in ignorance and lacking in perspective. It was a combination of pseudo-analytical journalism and quotations gleaned from an interview with the new coach of the University of Montana women's tennis team, whose present record is 0-15. The article stressed three fallacious contentions: 1981 was a rebuilding year; it is almost impossible to recruit tennis players at UM; the UM tennis team cannot compete in Division I of the AIAW and will welcome relegation to Division II of the NCAA.

Even the Missoulian should be aware that women's tennis at UM did not begin in the autumn of 1980. Paul Larson coached the UM women from 1978 to 1980. Technically sound, skilled in recruiting and able to relate to the players—no one quit the team in his two years—he assembled a team which compiled a regular-season record of 17 wins and four losses in his second year. It also became the first UM team to win a Region IX Division I AIAW title, and thus receive automatic admission to a national tournament.

As a graduate student, Larson was restricted to a two-year term by the UM athletic department, whose policy calls for the appointment of a teaching assistant to coach women's tennis. Full-time coaches are reserved for basketball, volleyball and gymnastics, on the theory that they are revenue-producing sports. Given Robin Selvig's remarkable ability as both a recruiter and a coach (that he is entitled to full-time assistants and a respectable recruiting budget is irrelevant in this context), basketball should attract paying audiences. But volleyball is almost as indigenous to Montana as cricket, and gymnastics is likely to produce profits when UM recruits Nadia Comaneci, Tracee Talavera and Juliann McNamara simultaneously.

The reasons that induced the statement that it was necessary to rebuild a 17-4 Region IX titlist are mysterious. Larson bequeathed to his successor the first five women and an experienced reserve from 1980, plus tournament experience and freshmen of considerable promise. Only three of the seven are now on the squad, and two are playing out of position. Understandably, the caliber of the performance of the three veterans were higher last year, although each rose to the occasion in singles against MSU. Admittedly, going from 17-4 in 1980 to 0-15 in 1981, so far, is a jolting reversal for the veterans, unthought of in September.

Moreover, it is difficult to understand why 1981 is described as a "rebuilding" year. The three veterans include two juniors and a senior, and the three newcomers are all juniors. One usually assumes that a coach who is rebuilding is playing freshmen and sophomores all season for experience. (Three freshmen did survive the final cut; one left the squad in October, another in March and the third in April.)

Recruiting in any sport is not easy, and admittedly the women's tennis team does not receive sufficient financial support. But Larson proved that one could recruit players for UM. The home states of members of his team ranged from California to New York.

That UM plans to embark on a double standard in athletics has been one of the few secrets successfully concealed on this campus. I heard first the report from a visiting tennis coach at the quadrangular meet Friday, and the article in the Missoulian the following day confirmed it. In brief, the UM women's teams, except for basketball, will be relegated to the "bush league," also known as Division II. On the other hand, since the NCAA mandates that a Division I school in men's basketball or football must field teams in eight sports in Division I, UM and the other Big Sky Conference schools will carry on as they do now. The visiting coach intimated that the double standard was attributable to a desire by athletic directors and presidents to spend less money on women's athletics, since Division II status sharply restricts budgets. The discrimination in the meager financing of bush league teams is self-evident.

Several years ago, Sharon Dinkel, then the director of women's athletics and gymnastics coach, proposed shifting tennis and swimming to Division II. (Gymnastics, of course, would have remained in Division I under her impartial plan.) After a long discussion, Harley Lewis agreed to recommend to President Bowers a continuation of the status quo, and UM continued to play tennis with the major schools.

The statement in the Missoulian that UM cannot compete successfully in women's tennis in Division I is historically inaccurate. In the early 1970s UM defeated Washington, Oregon and Oregon State without losing a team match to them, and held an edge over Washington State. The primitives of Montana State, apparently unaware that women played tennis, did not field a team. Then, after a series of unnecessarily mediocre teams, UM revived last spring to enjoy a 17-4 record and a Region IX title.

To conclude: I am unhappy with the failure to appoint Larson or someone of comparable ability as a recruiter and coach to a full-time position in charge of the women's tennis team; I am irritated over the negligible recruiting of women tennis players this year; I am unable to appreciate the shift from a 17-4 record in 1980 to an 0-15 record thus far in 1981; and I am adamantly opposed to the forthcoming discrimination against women's athletics at UM. If the men's teams remain in Division I, as they should, and the women's teams, excluding basketball, are relegated to Division II, the downgrading of women's athletics will be accomplished ab initio. And that is discrimination on its face.

Bike fair to be held in UC

By Mariann Sutton
Montana Kaimin Contributing Reporter

If you're looking for a bike, looking to sell a bike or just are interested in looking at bikes, the University Center is the place to be tonight during the Outdoor Resource Center's bike fair.

Anyone interested in selling a bicycle should bring it to the ORC office in the UC between noon and 6 p.m., according to Sue Iverson, coordinator for the sale. Iverson said bikes in any condition, "from clunkers" to really good second-hand bikes, will be accepted for the sale, which will last from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Iverson said the ORC will charge a 10-percent commission on bikes and equipment sold, and any outdoor equipment, bike-related or not, will be accepted.

Along with the bike sale, there will be displays of bikes, parts and equipment and information on bicycling and bicycle touring, Iverson said. She explained that several organizations, including Bikecentennial, the Missoula and University of Montana Bicycle clubs, the American Youth Hostel and the bicycle coordinator for the city of Missoula, will be represented in the bike fair, along with most of the bicycle stores in Missoula.

Iverson said she expects to have as many as 100 bikes for sale this year. She said last year about 60 bikes were sold out of 75 that were accepted.

Iverson also said video-tapes of the film "Breaking Away" and of bicycle races, including the Tour de France, will be shown Friday night from 8 to 10:30 in Women's Center Room 215.

Administration, UTU still bargaining

By Doug O'Harra
Montana Kaimin Reporter

With 48 days left before its contract expires June 30, the negotiation teams for the University Teachers' Union and the University of Montana administration are meeting today in another bargaining session.

Howard Reinhardt, UTU president, said the session held on Tuesday was "hard bargaining."

Reinhardt said, "A number of (faculty) wish the bargaining was proceeding more quickly. But I think we're making satisfactory progress."

Reinhardt added that the UTU has not taken a strike vote, nor has it called for a vote.

Jack Noble, chief negotiator for the administration team and deputy commissioner for financial affairs of the Montana University System, agreed the negotiations are proceeding satisfactorily.

On Friday, the Montana Kaimin reported that the administration was offering a 9-percent increase for faculty salaries in 1981-82, and a 9.6-percent increase for 1982-83. Noble said those figures were "too low." However, he would not say what the administration's offer actually was because the administration team is "still bound by confidentiality."

One explanation for the discrepancy is the raise in salary for a typical faculty member will be somewhat lower than the net raise in salary and benefits for the faculty as a whole. Apparently the figures reported were the administration's proposal for a typical faculty member's raise and did not include benefits or merit raises.

Reinhardt also would not comment on the latest offer. "I don't think it's productive to talk about what the offer amounts to," he said. "What's crucial is what the final, negotiated settlement for faculty members is."

Noon forum to review today's racism, sexism

"The Equality Experiment: Progress or Regress? Racism and Sexism Today," is the topic of a noon forum today in Mammary Park, located between the University Center and the library.

Speakers will be Elaine Gilham Clayborn, Native American Studies professor; Ulysses Doss, humanities professor; Ann Mary Dussault, Missoula legislator; Ann German, Missoula attorney; and John Photiades, economics professor.

At 7:30 p.m., Freeda Klein, a Boston-area feminist, will give a lecture on "Connections Between Racism, Sexism and Violence," in the UC Montana Rooms.

Klein has been involved in issues on the effect of violence on women for 12 years, and has developed a consciousness-raising program on racism with black feminist B. Smith.

Lawrence Turk, sophomore in general studies, said the idea for the forum grew out of the David Duke controversy Winter Quarter.

Turk said the forum is an attempt to provide a positive response to Duke. Special emphasis, he said, will be given to the problems of sexism and racism in Montana, adding that the audience will have time to question the speakers.

Musicians will also participate in the noon program.

The forum is being co-sponsored by the Women's Resource Center, the Student Action Center, the Black Student Union, the Kyi-Yo Indian Club and ASUM Programming.

In the event of rain, the forum will be held in the UC Mall.

Debate group accused of fraud

By Susan Toft
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Charges of negligence and fraud concerning its requested ASUM budget have been leveled against the Debate and Oratory Association by a former member of that organization.

Ross Best, sophomore in classics, has charged that the Debate and Oratory Faculty Adviser Jim Polsin, associate professor of interpersonal communications, would not release records on the group's finances and submitted a budget request identical to last year's request. He also charged that the group receives funds other than those from ASUM.

He said the Pi Kappa Delta speech competition, held each year in different cities across the country, is a waste of money and was not even listed on the budget request, although the Debate and Oratory group plans to attend the event.

Polsin said Best was removed from the Debate and Oratory team in 1977 for missing two competitive events.

Best claims he was removed because of "personality conflicts."

Best claims the Debate and Oratory budget request is "literally a mimeo" of last year's request. He said the group was in a hurry so it copied last year's request. "Budgeting snuck up on them," he said.

Polsin admitted this year's request is a mimeograph of last year's request. He said he used the old request because "it's the same thing every year—same request, same tournaments, same form." He said the reason the Pi Kappa Delta tournament is not listed on the request is that the location has not been set yet, and he isn't sure the group will attend. He said if the group's budget is cut too much, they won't be able to attend the competition.

A figure representing the expenses for the last Pi Kappa Delta tournament, held in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, was listed on the budget request as a "reasonable estimate" of what traveling to this year's tournament would cost, according to Polsin. He said the budget request is the "ideal" budget the group could receive, and that "if we get the money we'll go (to the Pi Kappa Delta tournament) and if we don't get the money, we won't go."

Debate and Oratory requested $8,884 this year. The executive recommendation cut the amount to $6,000.

Best said he has gone to Polsin's office several times to request information concerning the Debate and Oratory group's finances and has been told to leave the office by Polsin. He claims Polsin is withholding information a student should be able to obtain.

Polsin says he is under no obligation to maintain records of spending by the Debate and Oratory group.

Records of ASUM-funded groups are available on request from the Controller's Office and in the office of ASUM accountant Andrew Czorny.

Polsin said the Debate and Oratory group has received funds from the University of Montana administration, "to make up for what ASUM doesn't give us."

Donald Habbe, academic vice president, said an account was set up by the administration in October to supplement the ASUM funds for the debate group. He said this group receives administration funds because it is a combination of an academic program and student group. This year the funds are coming directly from the president's office, Habbe said.

The fund originally contained $4,000. It now has $150, according to Paul Bjerke, supervisor for appropriated funds in the Controller's Office.

Best said he intends to continue to investigate the group's finances because he feels Central Board should not fund a group that submits an inaccurate budget and is, he said, "hiding something"

April Wine profits high; drinking, fighting low

By Susan Toft
Montana Kaimin Reporter

ASUM Programming reaped a profit of over $3,500 from the April Wine concert Monday night, according to Sam Goza, pop concerts coordinator.

Goza said 5,066 tickets were sold for the concert, which was sponsored by Programming and Albatross Productions. Programming received 10 percent of the gross amount of $48,738. Two percent of Programming's share went for rent for the Harry Adams Field House, leaving Programming with a net profit of $3,579.08.

Goza said there were no accidents or fights at the concert. And a "less than normal" amount of alcoholic beverages was confiscated, he said, adding that it was a younger crowd than was at the Molly Hatchet concert Feb. 6.

The Molly Hatchet concert had been plagued by fights and excessive drinking by concertgoers.

Goza said the concert was quite successful, even though the band arrived five hours later than expected. He said the band had run into snow in Idaho, but the concert Monday night began on time anyway.

WANTED: YOUR VIEWS ON POWER LINE IMPACTS.

Let's get together and exchange information on the Garrison-Missoula portion of the proposed Garrison-Spokane transmission line project.

We'll fill you in on the past, present and future of this project designed to help meet the power needs of western Montana as well as other Pacific Northwest areas.

Then we'll ask your help in identifying issues and concerns that should be dealt with in a revised environmental impact statement.

You'll also be asked to comment on the alternative routes (see map), one of which is to be selected for the proposed power line.

Finally, we'll answer any remaining questions.

The portion of the proposed 500-kilovolt line between the Garrison area and the Missoula area is a new addition to this project. Public meetings on the original Hot Springs-Bell project between the Missoula area and Spokane were held in late 1979 and early 1980. Follow-up sessions are contemplated later this year to bring citizens along that portion up to date on proposed routes and other facets of the project. Our need right now is to receive your comments and suggestions regarding the newly added portion. We're interested, for example, in any concerns you may have about effects on forests and other natural resources, on agriculture and other land uses, on undeveloped lands and recreation, on scenic values, on animals and on people.

We've scheduled six meetings, all beginning at 7:15 p.m. (doors open at 7 p.m.). Dates and locations are:

Monday, May 18 Drummond Community Ctr. Drummond, Montana	Tuesday, May 19 Clinton School Clinton, Montana
Wednesday, May 20 Polomac School Polomac, Montana	Thursday, May 21 Lolo Community Ctr. Lolo, Montana
Wednesday, May 27 Frenchtown School Frenchtown, Montana	Thursday, May 28 Village Red Lion Motor Inn Elementary Multi-Purpose Rm. 100 Madison Street Missoula, Montana

Written comments are welcome, too. Submit them at the meetings or send them by June 15, 1981, to:

George E. Eskridge
Projects Information Officer
BPA Transmission Coordination Office
1620 Regent, Post Office Box 4327
Missoula, Montana 59806
For more information, write to the above address or call (406) 329-3737.

There is a best way. Together we can find it.

Pope's . . .

After the 4-hour, 10-minute operation, the pope was transferred to the hospital's emergency care unit where he was expected to remain for the next 48 hours.

In a briefing for reporters, Castiglioni said the pope was shot twice in the lower intestines. One bullet passed through the body, causing another wound when it left. Another stayed in the body and was extracted by surgeons, Castiglioni said. The pope also had two slight wounds on his right arm and one on his left hand.

"We have sound hopes that the pope will remain with us, that he will continue to live. He wasn't hit in vital parts, but they were not light injuries. Important blood vessels were just barely missed and the pope was very lucky," Castiglioni said.

Priests, nuns and the faithful fell to their knees in tearful prayer, Catholic schools halted classes to send students to Mass and there were renewed calls in the United States for gun control.

The Connecticut Senate reversed itself and approved a handgun control bill after an opponent of the bill said the shooting had changed her mind about gun control.

President Reagan, who survived an assassination attempt six weeks ago, was shocked when he heard the news and said, "I'll pray for him," according to the White House.

In Washington, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., a Roman Catholic who has lost two brothers to assassins' bullets, told the Senate: "This is a shot that has gone to the soul of the world."

Craig . . .

is sure the case from his floor came from a toilet seat. But he said the janitors are cleaning well enough, and the detergent they use is toxic enough to kill the crab lice.

"The guy who got it was just a victim of circumstances," he said. "I'm not sure if our floor gave it to us. It would be nice to blame somebody, but you just can't do it."

Zipf said the crab lice are too small to see and that a person never knows he has them until they multiply to the point where he starts itching.

"It's one of those embarrassing moments," he said, "especially if you have a girlfriend, and she didn't give it to you."

Zipf said it is important for anyone infected with crabs to take care of it immediately. "It may be embarrassing," he said, "but that way you can nip it in the bud, and that's important in the dorms."

Read said the Health Service takes care of crabs by prescribing special soaps and ointments. He said it's not necessary to boil clothing and bedding — ordinary laundering will kill the lice and their eggs.

"They need blood meal to live," Read said.

Weather or Not

Les approached the table. He sunk his two ducks. Eddie racked. The straggler was buried in the side. Les wiped the nervous sweat off his throat. He called the corner in the corner.

He missed.

Dag's face clouded over. Les' pulse rocketed to a high of 68, bottomed out at 38 and blood drained from his face like a sudden shower.

"Say goodbye to that finger, Hitchcock."

Nothing matters, and what if it did.
