LA window-covering plan nears completion

By BOOMER SLOTHOWER
Montana Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA — The plan to partially cover the windows of the Liberal Arts Building to save energy appears to be nearing reality. But the university has one last chance to come up with an alternative plan.

ASUM lobbyist Steve Carey said interested parties at the university have three weeks to come up with a plan that will conserve the same amount of heat as the window covering plan and meet all the federal requirements.

This last chance to come up with another plan came out of a meeting held Monday between Carey, ASUM lobbyist Mike Dahlem, members of the Missoula legislative delegation and Governor Ted Schwinden. Phil Hauck and Tom O'Connell of the Architecture and Engineering Division of the Department of Administration were also present to speak in support of the current plan.

The University of Montana is one of the leading institutions in the state in the area of energy conservation, Carey said, but it could "get a bad rap" on conservation by fighting this plan too long.

The project to retrofit the LA Building has been in the works for some time. The 1979 Legislature appropriated $1 million to the Department of Administration to improve energy conservation in state buildings. The department chose the LA Building and has spent $25,000 on planning and $5,000 on metering and energy auditing, Carey said. The state has appropriated $180,150 for the project which will be matched by federal funds through the Department of Energy, he said.

At the meeting Monday, Hauck outlined the steps he and his staff have taken, Carey said. They studied 17 proposals, five of which were sent to and rejected by the Department of Energy.

"We're under the federal gun right now," Carey said. Changing a proposal once it has been approved by the federal government is very difficult, he said.

According to Carey, Schwinden said if the differences could not be resolved, he would probably support the state architect's plan.

The plan for the window-covering proposal has been approved by both the state and the Department of Energy. Now bids for the project are requested. The Department of Administration chooses one and submits the choice to the Board of Examiners. This body, made up of the governor, attorney general, secretary of state, state auditor and the superintendent of public instruction, has the final approval on the project.

The Department of Administration expects a $50,000 a year savings on energy costs from this plan, Carey said. The original proposal called for covering 90 percent of the windows in the building but that had been reduced to 76 percent. That figure has now been reduced to 66 percent.

Students and faculty at the university have complained that they had little involvement in the retrofitting process.

"It's unfortunate that the expertise we have at the university was not utilized," Carey said. While he said that three weeks is not enough time to come up with an alternative proposal that will meet all the requirements, it may be enough time to come up with some minor modifications to the plan.

"We're not whining," Carey said. "We're just trying to get the best retrofitting plan possible."

Use of Beckwith homes prompts bill on zoning laws

By JIM BRUGGERS
Montana Kaimin Reporter

"I think it would benefit not only people in this neighborhood, but people around the state who live next to any state institution."

That is what Gera Goode, who lives just south of the University of Montana at 643 E. Beckwith Ave., said about a bill that will be introduced in the Montana House of Representatives sometime next week. The bill, sponsored by Rep. Dan Kemmis, D-Missoula, calls for all state institutions to abide by local zoning laws. And it stems from zoning disputes between UM and its immediate neighbors to the south — the residents of the 600 block of East Beckwith Avenue. UM owns three lots in that block.

The bill is now being drafted. "We're just working the kinks out," Tim Stearns, legislative intern for Kemmis, the House minority leader, said last night.

Mae Nan Ellingson, Missoula's assistant city attorney and one of the bill's drafters, explained that the bill contains five additional sections to local zoning laws that are designed to "balance interests." For example, the bill would require that state institutions check "the availability of alternative locations for the proposed development," before asking for a zoning variance.

UM President Richard Bowers and George Mitchell, UM legal counsel, have maintained that because UM is a state institution it does not have to abide by local zoning laws. The most recent controversy came last spring when Bowers wanted to move the UM Foundation and Office of Development into a UM-owned home at 667 E. Beckwith Ave., which is in a residential neighborhood.

Under the Kemmis bill, UM would have to go through the same zoning change procedures that any individual would. That is, UM would have to apply for a zoning change, the City Council would hold a hearing and then decide on whether to accept the zoning change.

Last April Missoula Mayor Bill Cregg sent a letter to Bowers telling him that he (Cregg) expects UM to abide by Missoula zoning laws.

"The University of Montana commonly ignores local zoning ordinances if the requirements or restrictions of these ordinances do not necessarily correspond with University policies," the letter stated.

Dave Wilcox, Cregg's administrative assistant and former Missoula zoning officer, yesterday cited UM's expansion of offices into the Eddy Avenue residential area north of campus as an example of disregard for Missoula's zoning laws.

Regarding the Beckwith area, Cregg's letter stated:

"The threat of University expansion into the blocks of one of our most gracious residential areas causes mental unrest and unstable property values."

The UM Foundation has since moved to an on-campus location.

However, a recent report by the Campus Development Committee, which recommends UM expand southward, leaves the Beckwith residents uneasy, Goode said.

Both Bowers and Commissioner of Higher Education John Richardson said they would not comment on the bill until the bill is in its final draft. However, Bowers said last week he would not like a bill requiring zoning procedures for UM.

Wilcox said the city is not against UM expansion, but would like to see UM expand "at least a half a block at a time — from street to alley."

"By and large," Wilcox said, "the university has been cooperative." However, the feeling now is that cooperation "might be breaking down," he added.

Bowers said last night that he did not feel there was any breakdown of cooperation between the university and the city. But he said he recognized that "a problem exists" between the Beckwith residents and UM, especially, "any time it is suggested to use those houses for anything but residential."

Physical therapy department at UM hoping for accreditation approval

By JOHN McGRATH
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The University of Montana physical therapy department was visited last week by a team from the American Physical Therapy Association, and by March 11 the department will know if it will achieve national accreditation.

This is the first time the 5-year-old department has been eligible for accreditation, and when its first seniors graduate this spring, their license eligibility depends on the March decision.

"We have some very positive feelings" about accreditation, Richard Gajdosik, physical therapy program director, said. "Right now, it's out of our hands."

Gajdosik explained that a confidentiality clause in the department's agreement with the association prevented him from repeating any specific comments the visiting group made, but he described the group as being very "cordial" and "receptive" to what it saw of the program.

In the event of a favorable decision, Gajdosik said "it stands to reason" that there will be a significant increase in applicants for the physical therapy program. He pointed out that UM would have the only accredited program in a large geographical area, the nearest schools with accredited physical therapy programs being the universities of Washington, Utah and North Dakota.

Currently, there are 84 accredited programs in the country, and 26 more are expected to be added next year, not including UM.

Whether the enrollment will increase is uncertain, however. Like other faculties, the physical therapy faculty is "already overworked," Gajdosik said. Asked whether additional students would mean additional teachers and facilities, he smiled and said "that would be nice."

An unfavorable decision would mean the department would have to make changes as specified by the association, and then seek accreditation at a future date.

Gajdosik described the accreditation as a "long process," and said that "more than anything, right now we're feeling relieved."

no longer in charge of the committee. Diane Elliott is now in charge, Monk said.

When Elliott, junior in education, was contacted about the elections she said she was not in charge of the committee, but was just asked by Lang to help the committee.

Lang was contacted Monday and informed about the committee members' confusion. She said, "I have a feeling I'm going to be running the damn thing which I don't want to do."

Lang said, though, she expected the committee to get going on the election plans this week.

Students interested in running for office must file a petition, but no petitions are available yet and no filing deadline has been set.

The deadline to file for candidacy is usually three to four weeks before the election.

If more than three candidates file for president, vice president or business manager, a primary election must be held one week before the general election, according to the ASUM bylaws.

Election dates not set yet

By BONNIE YAHVAH
Montana Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Elections for ASUM president, vice president, business manager and Central Board delegates should be held at least one week before finals, ASUM President David Curtis said yesterday.

But nothing has been done yet by the Elections Committee about scheduling the election this year. Only six weeks are left if elections are to be held a week before finals. Last year elections were held Feb. 27.

The Elections Committee is ASUM Vice President Linda Lang's responsibility, Curtis said, but added that he has been trying to get the committee motivated.

However, there seems to be some confusion about who is in charge of the Elections Committee.

Anita Monk, a junior in health and physical education, is listed as chairwoman of the committee but when contacted she said she was

Kanduch bill a not-so-subtle warning

The smell of something truly foul has made its presence known at the Montana Legislature.

Rep. Joe Kanduch, D-Anaconda, is the primary sponsor of a bill that would impose liability and criminal penalties upon persons who pursue legal avenues to delay or interfere with economic development. The bill has 21 other sponsors.

At the heart of Kanduch's bill is the concept of "good cause." If a person or environmental group can show good cause for taking legal action against some industrial project, then they have nothing to worry about, says Kanduch.

The bill makes little attempt to define or give examples of what "good cause" might be. That would be left up to the courts to decide.

Aside from the obvious administrative problems this bill would entail, there are countless other things wrong with it.

First of all, the bill is in direct conflict with the constitutional rights of persons who pursue legal remedies against new industry they believe will do undue harm to the environment. What is now legal easily could become illegal.

The bill's sponsors don't believe it's right for any form of economic development to be held up while the environmental impact of the project is studied. They would rather see a project built and functioning without delay—that way, the actual damage of a given project would be apparent to everyone.

That isn't much like closing the gate after all the pigs got out, is it?

If this bill were to survive the legislative process, the potential for abuse by powerful corporate interests would be incredible. Montana could probably set a record as the threatened western state to go down the toilet the fastest, easily beating out Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and Idaho. That's a pretty costly price to pay for economic growth.

The only good thing about this bill is that it has almost no chance of survival. Even the bill's sponsors are aware of the multitudinous problems in wording and foresee endless court battles to decide the concept of good cause. Most environmental groups do not seem to be frightened of this bill, because they believe that everything they do is with "good cause."

The true intent of this bill is simply to warn environmentalists that there is a strong feeling among certain legislators that the benefits of unchecked economic growth far outweigh the costs of living in a cesspool. They would like to see the environmental movement lost its political influence.

But it won't do a lot of good to have an endless supply of jobs if you can't drink the water.

An air pollution alert

Today, the Montana Kaimin is beginning a campaign to call attention to the air pollution problem in the Missoula Valley. For the past eight days, the particulate (solid matter) count has averaged above or near 100 micrograms per cubic meter, meaning Missoula residents have been breathing air that usually has not met minimum federal air quality standards.

Yesterday's air quality was "marginal," meaning it hovered near the 100-microgram mark, averaging out at 98 micrograms per cubic meter.

The Kaimin will be running a front-page graphic daily, listing the air quality condition and particulate count for the previous day. The information is available from the Missoula City-County Health Department's 24-hour air pollution hotline, 543-4268.

If the hazy, dirty air doesn't serve to remind people that unnecessary use of cars and wood-burning stoves is making the problem worse, perhaps the graphic will help.

Misleading figure

Editor: The Kaimin reports that faculty members are in line for an $8,000 raise under the proposed budget for the university system. For several reasons this figure may give a misleading representation of proposed salary increases:

1. It is a projected increase in faculty compensation which includes employer contribution to social security and the Teachers' Retirement System. Such "fringe benefits" amount to about 18 percent of salaries.

2. It is an increase over last year's compensation, not this year's. The legislative fiscal analysis is proposing a 32 percent increase in compensation (not in salary) over a three-year period; that, by the laws of compound interest, is about 10 percent a year for the three years.

3. Because of mandatory increases in fringe benefits, the resulting increase in salary would be only about 9 percent per year for three years. Of this year's 9 percent we have already received about 6 percent.

Relieved

Editor: As the hostage crisis draws to a close, I am quite relieved that Reagan won't have the opportunity to deal with the Iranians. For Reagan to call the Iranians "barbarians" puts the United States at a very hypocritical standpoint.

In the summer of 1978, the media portrayed the Shah Pahlavi as a modernizing, reform-oriented leader, having a broad base of support. In the same year, an estimated 100,000 Iranian civil protestors were gunned down by the Shah's security forces.

The response of the U. S. government was to send riot-control devices, advisors, trainers and more than $2.5 billion dollars in weapons. This inhumanity of the Shah's regime and the United States' support was censored by the media. The claims against the U. S. are documented by Project Censor, an organization to evaluate censored news stories.

Russel Hodgen's question from Friday's Kaimin, "How safe will any of them (embassies) be if other countries see that we will pay ransom to get our embassy staffs home?" should be altered to "How safe will our embassies be if the United States supports inhumanities to keep ties with regimes?"

An apology

Editor: Last Thursday at the Noon Forum, in a speech I delivered to the student body, I called Freedom of Speech "a privilege which has been twisted and abused by unscrupulous men like David Duke." The next day, in one of my classes, our guest lecturer decided class time would be a good time to air his political opinions. He began his lecture with a joke and, among others, the statement, "I'll kick the ass of any son of a bitch who tries to stop him." He was referring to David Duke's appearance at U of M. He went on to express his outrage at my having called rights privileges. "Rights," he said, "come from God." The target of his anger seemed to be me. I was sitting right in front of him.

I believe our guest abused his position as a teacher by taking advantage of a captive audience and affording it no opportunity for reply. Later, several students told me they were insulted by our guest's language and comments. Perhaps, in the future, it would be a good idea if teachers refrained from using class time for expression of political comments. It tends to make the class uncomfortable for some students, especially if the comments include swearing or cursing as did our guests.

Apparently our guest is not alone. It seems I upset others with my comments as well. Some say that I hurt the cause more than I helped. I certainly hope this is not the case. If you have not yet signed the petition calling for the cancellation of Duke's contract solely on the basis of my comments, I urge you to reconsider.

My rights/privilege analogy was intended to point out the abuse and misuse of our freedoms by men like David Duke. It was never meant to imply that these freedoms should be reserved for the select few, even though that's exactly what we've done with them throughout history. Blacks, Native Americans, women, and other minority groups have been fighting for their rights since the beginnings of our nation and, unfortunately, they still are. Men like David Duke traverse the countryside recruiting followers for their immoral and unjust causes under the guise of Freedom of Speech. Duke has actively participated in violent, aggressive acts against minorities. His appearances and the money he earns from them contribute to racial unrest and bigotry. There is no room for bigotry and hatred among the races in our country. Please help us stop Duke.

I would like to take this opportunity to apologize to that class I mentioned earlier and to our regular instructor. It was on my account that you were made subject to our guest's verbal abuse. I would also like to apologize to our guest for having made him so angry he felt it necessary to swear at the class. And I would like to offer my very sincere apologies to Rick and Sue at ASUM programming. In the past you were made the target of anger at some of the meetings held to discuss Duke's contract.

I believe such anger was totally uncalled for. In the future, I hope everyone will address the issue and avoid personal attacks. It is a very painful experience to be the target of such attacks.

Newsworthy perversion

Editor: On Thursday afternoon at 2:30, in the Grizzly Pool women's locker room, there was a man with his pants unzipped, his penis out and he was touching himself. When told to get out, he fumblingly and embarrassedly did so. This man was between 5'6" and 5'8", slightly ruddy or dark complected, stocky, with frizzy light brown hair. He was wearing silver-rimmed glasses that were shaded and his waist-length down coat was bright kelly green. Joe Lesar, who's in charge of the Grizzly Pool right now, was informed of the incident. The Kaimin was also reported to, over the phone at 4:30 that same afternoon. The male reporter who took down the information said that it was not too late for it to go into Friday's edition. That same reporter went to the Grizzly Pool for verification and typed and submitted the article. He does not know why it was not run.

I want to know why it was not put into the Friday edition of the Kaimin. Was it protection of the male species (after all, boys will be boys) or is perversion, all of a sudden, no longer newsworthy? PLEASE COMMENT!

Mission Mountain in lawsuit over name

By EDWIN BENDER
Montana Kaimin Reporter

A lawsuit over the name Mission Mountain Wood Band is the result of the many years the band has played together and the different musical interests evolving among the band members.

Rob Quist, the band's banjo player, said that the band was "beginning to stagnate." It was a "situation where we had to grow or die," he said.

The members of the band "were considering splitting up" around June, he said, but after the summer they decided to try again—minus one.

The band had been working out of New York for quite a while, Quist said, adding that Steve Riddle, the band's bass player, decided he wanted to stay there awhile to try out some new things, maybe on Broadway.

The difference of interests led Steve to file a suit against the rest of the band.

The suit concerns a portion of the band's contract which states the name Mission Mountain Wood Band will be used as long as the band remains together.

In a hearing in Butte on Dec. 22, 1980, the judge would not make a legal decision on the matter. Instead, he referred it back to the corporation which controls the assets of the band. The corporation has to examine the matter before a decision can be made, according to the band's manager.

The band, minus Steve, can use the name Mission Mountain Wood Band until an official decision is made, Quist said.

That part of the industry "just seemed to interest him," Quist said.

Steve left for New York Wednesday and could not be reached for comment. Steve's brother in New York, Dick Riddle, tells a different story.

Dick, the band's personal manager, said the band split up for "personal reasons which were ugly."

It's the oldest story in the business, Dick said, adding "when friends and lovers get involved in the music business they have about a year left."

The old adage "Deliver us from our friends" applies here, he said.

"They had that rare star quality," Dick said. "You know that when you see them play together."

While Dick emphasized that the band worked well together, he added that the business centers are in New York and California.

Mission Mountain owes $25,000 in back bills, Dick said. Steve would probably settle out of court, he added, if this debt was paid and if Steve got compensation for his equipment and reputation.

Steve's "contacts" got the band where it is, Dick said.

Lawyers will probably decide the amount of money to be given Steve on a percentage of the total assets the band had when they split up, Dick said.

A corporate meeting is planned for this week, Dick said, adding the suit would be further examined at this time.

Quist would not comment on the suit, he said, because the matter is still open. The band's agent, Randy Erwin of the Good Music Agency in Minneapolis, would not comment on the suit either.

Steve has been replaced, Erwin said, by a bass player from Florida named Jerry Valnoski.

Erwin said the band has done one tour in the Midwest with Valnoski. In this "extremely successful tour," Erwin said, Mission Mountain played five dates with Poco and a week with Michael Murphy.

Quist said, "It was a great tour." A couple of major tours are planned, Erwin said. One will begin Feb. 1, and the band will be on the road through May, he added.

The band will begin its tour in Colorado, Erwin said. Then it will go to Reno, Nev., Southern California, Florida and end up playing in the Midwest, he said.

Urey honored at convocation

The late Harold Urey, whose discovery of heavy hydrogen became the foundation of the atomic age, was "a man of deep concern for the future because of what man has wrought."

William Kliber, pastor of the First United Methodist Church, used these words yesterday to describe the Nobel Laureate's fear of nuclear war. Kliber was one of five speakers who honored Urey at a memorial convocation held in the University of Montana Music Recital Hall.

"Either wake up or blow up was what he (Urey) was saying" in his warnings to mankind, Kliber said. "Dr. Urey has passed the torch of enlightenment to us. May we not use that torch for destruction."

Another speaker at the convocation, Thomas Margrave, associate physics professor at UM, said Urey "deliberately turned away from work that could be used for destructive purposes" in the 1950s. At that time, Margrave said, Urey switched from studies that led him to his discovery of heavy hydrogen to a more theoretical investigation of the universe.

"His suggestions became the blueprint for the Apollo 11 moon landing," he said, adding, "Urey leaves behind a rich intellectual legacy."

Also speaking at the convocation were Richard Field, associate professor of chemistry, Samuel Maclay, local rancher and personal acquaintance of Urey and Raymond Murray, dean of UM sponsored program administration, who filled in for UM President Richard Bowers, who was unable to attend. About 80 people attended the convocation.

WANTED: TUTORS

Last quarter, a tutoring program for UM students was begun in the Center for Student Development which uses funds provided by ASUM and the University Center to partially defray the cost of tutoring sessions for students who need them.

That program is being continued this quarter, but there are still several areas in which we have no tutors and others in which we have only one or two.

We are seeking tutors with the following qualifications:

- Sophomore status or above
- Overall G.P.A. of 2.5
- A 3.0 average in the course(s) in which you would like to tutor
- Ability to obtain departmental approval as a tutor in the course(s) to be tutored

Rates are $3.75 per hour for tutors who are sophomores or juniors, $4.05 per hour for tutors who are seniors graduate students.

To find out if your tutoring subject is one in which we need tutors, call 243-2711 after 1:00 P.M. any day. Interested students may pick up tutor application forms at the Center for Student Development in the Lodge.

CB to consider Duke controversy tonight

By GREG GADBERRY
Montana Kaimin Reporter

David Duke — the ex-Klansman whose name has become a household word in Missoula — will be the subject of ASUM Central Board debate as a group of anti-Duke petitions will be offered to the board at tonight's meeting.

In addition to debating on Duke, CB will also vote on two nominees for vacant CB seats and hear reports on bicycling and the state Legislature.

Debate over Duke began last fall after it became known that ASUM Programming had hired him in November to speak at the University of Montana Feb. 18. Duke is to be paid $1,400 plus expenses for the appearance. The decision, however, raised the ire of some students who claimed that Duke is a racist, one who they said should not be supported with student funds.

A student group — coordinated by Terry Messman Rucker, senior in journalism and wildlife biology — has circulated a petition asking that CB break the contract between Programming and Duke. The petitions will be given to CB tonight.

CB will also vote on two nominees for vacant CB seats tonight. ASUM President David Curtis said he is nominating Eric Johnson, a junior in psychology for one of the seats. Curtis said he had yet to confirm a second nominee, but hoped to do so today.

The seats were vacated by Dan O'Fallon and Ralph Simpson, who left to take out-of-town jobs, and Ed McMillan, who apparently committed suicide Dec. 20.

CB is also scheduled to hear two reports, the first from ASUM Legislative Committee Chairman Bill Bronson. Bronson will speak on the work of the committee and of the efforts of ASUM's two lobbyists in Helena.

Also scheduled to speak is Sue Lindgren of the Citizens Bicycle Advisory Committee who will explain the work of her committee and will solicit support for it.

CB will meet at 7 p.m. tonight in the University Center Montana Rooms.

TRADING POST SALOON

Bill would outlaw drug paraphernalia

By BOOMER SLOTHOWER
Montana Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA — The drug paraphernalia business has come under legislative attack in many areas of the country recently. The latest move against this $3 billion-a-year industry was made by Rep. John Matsko, R-Great Falls, who introduced a bill to outlaw the sale, possession or advertisement of paraphernalia.

The bill is closely based on the Model Drug Paraphernalia Act drafted by the federal Drug Enforcement Administration. The bill has precise definitions of what can be considered paraphernalia, but leaves any questionable areas up to the courts to decide. The bill would make possession, sale or advertising of paraphernalia a misdemeanor. The penalty would be six months in jail, a $500 fine or both.

The exception to these penalties is for delivery of drug paraphernalia to minors. In this case the penalty would be one year in jail, a $1,000 fine or both.

Matsko said he has two reasons for introducing the bill. He said when he was younger he worked in a store that sold paraphernalia. The owner would mark up the suggested retail price two or three times, he said. "So you could call this a measure to stop the rip-off of consumers," he said.

But Matsko has a more philosophical reason for sponsoring the bill. While he admits that no measure will stop the production of paraphernalia, he said that this is a step in the right direction.

"I'm trying to take a stand . . . trying to say that it's insane to let a multi-billion dollar industry exist that is principally used in an illegal act," he said.

The bill is not too harsh on people, he said. Possession, sale or advertising paraphernalia would only be a misdemeanor, and the paraphernalia would be seized, he said.

He said he does want stiffer penalties for sale to minors.

"I've seen kids 12 or 14 years old buying pipes in head shops," he said. "They shouldn't even be in there. They should be out playing baseball, being kids."

The bill leaves any gray areas of the law up to the discretion of the courts, which is fine with Matsko. "That's where it should be," he said. Any court decision, either for or against the law, will tend to clarify it, he said.

Matsko, who is a deputy with the Cascade County Sheriff's Department, said people who use drugs probably wouldn't face such negative public opinion if they were more discreet. "They have no class," he said.

Other states have enacted similar legislation and some of it has run into trouble. Colorado enacted a bill based on the Model Drug Paraphernalia Act that was declared unconstitutional before it ever went into effect, according to Colorado Assistant Attorney General David Rees. The law had some revisions from the DEA proposal and was declared unconstitutional in federal district court, he said.

The Idaho Legislature passed a bill almost identical to Matsko's proposed bill last year. Lynn Thomas, chief of the appellate division of the Idaho attorney general's office, said the law was challenged immediately and was upheld in district court. That decision is being appealed to the state Supreme Court now, he said.

Thomas said law enforcement agencies will not enforce the law until a final decision is reached. There was a stay order on the law while it was being litigated, he said, but that order ended when the district court decision was made. Even so, he said, the law is not being enforced.

State laws that stick closely to the DEA's model act have survived most court cases, he said, but those that contain revisions have often lost.

Matsko said his bill is modeled closely after the DEA act. The bill is comprehensive, he said, and he would not approve of any amendments unless it can be shown that the change would definitely be for the better.

He said the main opponents to the bill will probably be people who use paraphernalia and those who "make big bucks" from the sale of paraphernalia. There will be some who merely oppose the restriction on being able to sell something, he said, and while they have a good point, "you shouldn't be able to cater to an illegal act."

Weather or Not

Reaching Penny's house, Chris found Lisa leaning against the front door. "How did you get here so fast?" he demanded.

"Latvian Intelligence and Counter-Espionage agents get around," she said. "Let's get inside — it's cloudy through tomorrow with a high of 32 and a low of 25." Lisa kicked the door down, startling the young woman in the drawing room.

"Oh, Penny!" Chris said. "I was walking over here when a man got killed and two men tried to kill me and Lisa saved me and hid me for the night and now the cops are after me and . . ."

"You two spent the night together?" Penny asked.

"It's O.K. She's from L.I.C.E."

"Get out!" Penny's scream shattered a window painfully.
