ASUM candidate budgets, 'joke' team discussed at CB

By MIKE DENNISON
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The spending limit for candidates running for ASUM offices was raised, and discussion on a rumor that a president/vice president running-mate team is "running as a joke" ended inconclusively at Central Board last night.

Candidates for CB now can spend $40 rather than $30 on their campaign, and those running for officer positions can spend $110 rather than $90.

Originally, the Elections Committee had recommended an increase for CB candidates to $60, but board members objected that this amount was too high.

Carl Burgerfor, a CB member, also asked members of the board if they had heard a rumor that Wayne Kimmel and Sue Grebeldinger, potential candidates for ASUM president and vice president, respectively, were intending to "run as a joke."

"I don't know what the rest of you think about this, but I don't like it," Burgerfor said. "If they want to play, they can go somewhere else and play."

Burgerfor said he was told by ASUM Accountant Andrew Czorny that Grebeldinger asked Czorny if she could photograph his dog to use as a picture on a campaign poster.

Tuesday, Grebeldinger declined to comment on the issue.

But after about 10 minutes of discussion, CB decided there was no action it could take on the matter, and that Grebeldinger and Kimmel should confront the board before further discussion.

Steve Stuebner, new co-editor with Bob Phillips, of the Student Action Center's newspaper, the Activist, told CB he wanted to "tone down" the paper and solicit articles from all facets of the university community.

Stuebner said before that the Activist's strong editorial stance on environmental and social issues may have alienated some readers. The paper now will focus on "educating students on environmental and political issues."

"We just want to balance it out," Stuebner, a senior in journalism/history, said.

"Before, it was basically (former editor) Terry Messman's rag," he said. "He wrote whatever he wanted." However, Stuebner said he still respected Messman's work on the paper.

Most board members approved of Stuebner's plans. Member John Bulger said: "(The Activist) will now get out to all the people instead of just a few who are interested."

New ASUM constitution proposed

By GREG GADBERRY
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The ASUM Constitutional Review Board began sifting through a proposed replacement for the ASUM Constitution last night, at the first of two public hearings to be held this week on the Constitution.

Discussed was a rewritten Constitution prepared by ASUM Central Board members Greg Anderson and Andrew Matosich.

The hearing began with a warning from former ASUM President Garth Jacobson, who recommended that the committee not change the document.

Jacobson, who served as ASUM president in 1978-79, suggested caution in changing the constitution over minor details, saying that most changes in policy could be made through the by-laws.

The constitution serves as the general document for student government and outlines policy matters such as the number of officers and elections. It can only be changed through a referendum of ASUM members.

The by-laws, however, serve as the guidebook for the day-to-day operation of ASUM and can be changed through a two-thirds majority vote of CB.

Following Jacobson's comments, the CRB began to go over the new constitution, but the board took no official action on the document.

Major changes suggested by the new document include:

- giving veto power to the ASUM president. The proposed constitution allows the president to veto an action of CB within 5 days of CB's vote. CB could overturn the veto with a two-thirds majority vote.

- outlining new duties for the ASUM vice president. The vice president would be the ex-officio chairman of all ASUM committees. The current constitution outlines no duties for the vice president.

- changing the election process. Elections of ASUM president, vice president, business manager and CB members would take place late Spring Quarter. This would allow the outgoing CB to budget money for the upcoming year.

Currently, elections are held during Winter Quarter and the new administration is responsible for the upcoming year's budget.

This election procedure, however, ignores the election process as outlined in the constitution which mandates split elections.

The constitution states that ASUM officers and most of CB be elected in the spring, with some CB members elected the following fall. According to CRB Chairwoman Sue Grebeldinger, the split elections were used in order that incoming freshmen could participate in choosing the few CB members elected in the fall. According to Anderson, this split system has not been used for about eight years.

- creation of a chairman of CB. The chairman would run CB meetings if both the president and vice president were absent. Currently, the ASUM business manager assumes the chairmanship of CB if both higher officers are gone.

Tonight at 6, the CRB will hold a public hearing to discuss the proposed constitution. The hearing will be held in the University Center Montana Rooms.

Grebeldinger said, however, that more public hearings will probably be held next week in order that the CRB can totally discuss the document.

If the CRB approves the proposed constitution, it then travels to CB for consideration. If approved by CB, the constitution will be put before the students in the form of a referendum. To pass, 25 percent of ASUM members must vote, and two-thirds of those voting must approve the changes.

Azzara says UM needs to plan for energy use

By BOOMER SLOTHOWER
Montana Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA — The plan to cover up most of the window space in the University of Montana Liberal Arts Building has angered many people, one of whom is Rep. Jim Azzara, D-Missoula.

The retro-fitting plan for the LA Building was initiated by the Department of Administration, with only minor involvement from the university community. Azzara said this lack of initiative from the university in the area of energy conservation is "glaringly hypocritical." The university is in a position of leadership in the state and should have been in the forefront on energy conservation measures, he said.

"The Department of Administration is undertaking this on the state level ... often in ways that are unacceptable to the university," Azzara said, citing the LA Building as an example. "This should be an incentive to the University of Montana to use its inner resources. (Energy conservation) can be done more creatively and more effectively if it stems from an inner impetus," he said.

UM budget request for forestry station trimmed

By CATHY KRADOLFER
Montana Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA—A legislative subcommittee yesterday gave the University of Montana's forestry experiment station two additional faculty positions, then handed the rest of the station's budget back to its staff for about a 50-percent cut.

The Joint Appropriations Subcommittee on Education voted 5 to 1 to have its fiscal analyst draw up a new budget funding forest research for the 1982-83 year of the biennium only.

The compromise, suggested by Rep. Gene Donaldson, R-Helena, would essentially put the already planned expansion of the station on hold for a year. It would also make any funding dependent on the receipt of a $600,000 grant for a building at the Lubrecht Experimental Forest. The grant money would construct a building to house the information collected through the additional research.

Rep. Esther Bengtson, D-Shepherd, who voted against the motion, said the plan was unacceptable because it would not provide more jobs or expand the tax base and is "not in the best interests of the taxpaying public."

The Forest Conservation and Experiment Station requested an additional 18 faculty positions and $860,000 to change the scope of its program from one funded mostly by grants from private sources to one using state funds. The use of state money, forestry school Dean Benjamin Stout told the subcommittee, would allow faculty to study inventory, productivity and management of Montana forest lands.

Committee members made it clear at the beginning of the hearing that they would not fund the entire request. The debate centered on whether it would be best to fund only a portion of the additional research or not fund the project at all.

Saying he had "pains running through my heart that are just killing me," Stout offered several suggestions for cuts in personnel, but added that he would prefer that the request be funded fully or not at all.

Sen. Jack Haffey, D-Anaconda, said forestry research had been clearly under-funded in the state in comparison to the Montana State University Agricultural Experiment Station's $7 million yearly budget for agricultural research.

"To support one sector of the state's economy over another is unacceptable," Haffey said.

The subcommittee voted unanimously to appropriate the $650,000 the experiment station requested to maintain its current operating level, plus $44,800 for two additional faculty members to free other faculty for research.

The $860,000 research request will be re-worked by the fiscal analyst and Stout and presented to the committee again in several weeks.

Bengtson, who voted against the motion to send the budget back for revision, said the experiment station's budget had been separated from the general university budget two years ago to make it "easier to keep track of."

"In my wildest dreams I didn't believe you'd be back in two years with a request for such an expansion," Bengtson told Stout.

Stout responded that the search committee which selected him as dean in 1978 assured him that the state was willing to commit money to expand the research at the station.

"I took a 25 percent cut in salary because I was told I'd be able to develop the research program," Stout said. "If that's not the case, then I've been sold a bill of goods."

A few things to really worry about . . .

Everyone knows there are a lot of things happening in today's world. A new president has been inaugurated, most of his questionable cabinet choices have been confirmed and the hostages are back in the United States.

And there is plenty to speculate about. How will the Montana Legislature change our lives? Will the Soviets invade Poland? Will Reagan start a war? Which teams will be in the Super Bowl next year?

But despite all these events in the news, there are plenty of other things to be concerned about. Things that seldom make headlines. Things that affect all of us much more directly than most current events.

Let's take a look at some things that really matter, just to get a little perspective back into our outlook.

Banks are probably the worst of society's ills. Banks like to pretend they are public service institutions, and they work hard at cultivating that image in their advertising. However, anyone who has ever had money in a bank, almost everyone, knows that isn't true.

Once a bank tricks you into keeping your money there, it's too bad, Charley. Your money has just become their money, and they won't let you forget it. For example, if you have one of those new-fangled interest-plus-checking accounts, you will have to keep anywhere from $100 to $500 in that account at all times.

Since the purpose of a checking account is to spend money, that becomes a problem.

And just try to get a loan. It's possible, but not probable, especially if you want it for something useless like going to school. If you want to buy a car or a stereo, however, that's another story—you probably won't have any trouble.

If anyone doubts that banks are bad news, just consider how happy you were the last time you heard about one getting robbed.

On a smaller, but no less irritating, scale are situations in which you put 35¢ in a pop machine and push that Dad's Root Beer button. Out comes an A & W! What are you going to do about it?

Nothing. Now, a lot of people probably won't care, thinking, "What's the difference?" But people who drink a lot of root beer know the difference.

Hardware stores are another blight on the face of the earth. It's hard to find what you're looking for in a hardware store because every store organizes its merchandise differently. And hardware store salespeople are surly and inefficient. They have never heard that the customer is boss.

They don't want you in their hardware store, but they won't tell you outright. They would rather let you guess by giving you clues, like standing around in the stockroom drinking coffee while you look around.

If you do get bold enough to ask where something might be, they will point in the general direction of the merchandise, rather than showing you where it is.

There are plenty of other irritants in society. Pool tables in which the balls get stuck have always been a real problem. You just don't know until you put in the money, and then it's too late.

Telephone companies also cause grief. To order a new phone in Missoula, you go to a company office, where a person behind a desk wants to know what you're doing here. When you tell them, you're directed to a special phone that connects you with a person who will take your order for real.

Obviously, this is a psychological ploy. Not being able to see the person you're dealing with immediately puts you on the defensive, while to the person on the other end of the line, you're just another piece of meat.

Trends like this could probably be quelled if people made a practice of asking the company representative all sorts of personal questions, such as: What do you look like? What are you wearing? Are you a white, black or red person? Where do you get your hair cut? How big is your head? Do you wear glasses?

Getting attacked by dogs is no picnic. While most dogs are friendly and good natured, even the best of them will sometimes revert to their natural instincts and bite your ass off if you don't pay attention, or piss on your leg while you're idly chatting with someone.

The list goes on. But remember, the next time you're disturbed by something in the news, there are plenty of things that really matter a lot closer to home.

Human being

Editor: I see by your paper that former Grand Wizard of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, David Duke, is going to be offering a lecture here at the university. More importantly though, judging by your headline, this man is going to be introduced by a "black former student."

I also see your point, a spokesman for a secret society which boasts white supremacy to be introduced by a black man? Why, yes, that is a little, shall we say, risque, but not, however, the issue at hand.

Rick Ryan, programming director, and Andre Floyd, our black former student at large, have both "denied" (as though they had been accused) that the introduction would be presented because of Floyd's skin color. Floyd goes on to say, "I'm not going to be speaking there as a black man, but as a human being."

I would have hoped, oh Kaimin staff, that you would have given Floyd the courtesy of being a human being first thoughtful, intellectual, emotional rather than tagging onto him (in hopes of an eye catching headline, perhaps) a simple biological classification "black former student."

Intolerance of Duke should cause no shame

Editor:

"I did not foresee, not having the courage of my own thought: the growing murderousness of the world."
"The best lack all conviction while the worst are full of passionate intensity."
William Butler Yeats

It was with some bitter laughter that I read David Duke's comments in the Friday Kaimin, and it was with some wonder that I heard the jello-headed pronouncements of Ms. Grebeldinger. It seems that any among us who is to counter the speech of a bigot is also a bigot? Intolerant are we? Yes, I hope so. I beg all of you to be intolerant and not to become a perverted pawn in this foolish game, for the tolerance advocated by Ms. Grebeldinger and some of my melon-brained fellow students only serves the causes of violence and suppression.

If our goals as a people are the attainment of a society whose values are the prevention of cruelty to men and animals, and the elimination of violence, then we had better learn early to be intolerant. If we extend our precious free speech principles to policies and modes of behavior which should not be tolerated, then we truly are perverts who will deserve what we get where we get it. If we really want a more humane world can we afford to tolerate those policies and modes of behavior that threaten to destroy our goals?

Oh, I know, the last time I spoke out against Duke, suggesting that obscene and lunatic elements had not earned the right of free speech one sophomore dragged out the poor old First Amendment, and sought to skewer me on his leaden rapier, and some poor woman wrote in convinced that I was in love with my rubber ducky. This situation is not really so hard to understand if we only clear our minds and try a little. In our society we often extend tolerance to that which is radically evil, hoping that thereby we will preserve the general good. What we preserve is the evil, and our liberal democratic illusions of fair play. Thus we have confused our notions of obscenity and perversion. David Duke and the Klan are obscene, and those who tolerate them in the face of their murderousness are perverts.

Within the framework of our social policy we practice two sorts of tolerance. The first is a passive tolerance that we grant to established attitudes even if they are demonstrably destructive; and the second, we practice an official tolerance to the right, the left, the center, the up, the down, and lovers, the haters. This abstract tolerance refuses to take sides, probably assuming that conflicts of principle are really only conflicts of interest. It is thus that tolerance is bent to the protection of the established forms of discrimination, like the Klan.

To some, this may appear as a birthright of liberal democratic society. However, we must not forget that a fundamental restriction also must attach to this tolerance. In the words of John Stuart Mill, this tolerance was "to apply only to human beings in the maturity of their faculties." Now Mill was not excluding only children and minors: "Liberty, as a principle, has no application to any state of things anterior to the time when mankind have become capable of being improved by free and equal discussion." Mill emphasizes that anterior to that time men may still be barbarians and "despotism is a legitimate mode of government in dealing with barbarians, provided that the end may be their improvement, and the means justified by effecting that end."

In short, tolerance ought not to extend to the protection of wrongful barbaric deeds and false opinions which clearly demonstrate their destructive nature to the ends of humanity. Where freedom and human happiness is at stake, we dare not be indiscriminant. Certain behavior and attitudes deserve intolerance, and to act otherwise is to pervert toleration into an instrument of servitude.

The basis of free speech presupposes mature and capable individuals developing their ideals. This rationale fades in the face of manipulated, indoctrinated speakers who parrot propaganda. This rationale fades when the stupid opinion is treated with the same respect as the thoughtful opinion, when the misinformed draws equal time with the informed, when propaganda masquerades as education, when truth travels with falsehood. Freedom of speech is perverted when we tolerate sense along with nonsense.

This is all justified by some on the basis that no one is in possession of the truth, or capable of defining good from bad, right from wrong. Therefore, all opinion is to be submitted to the people for judgement. But the people must have a capacity, a faculty for judgement, and access to authentic information, and that judgement must result from autonomous thought. Is this possible if we treat Duke's propaganda with the equal respect that valid, informed ideals deserve? This use of tolerance serves not only to protect repressive attitudes like Duke's but also serves to neutralize the opposition, the forces of humanity and true freedom, by placing them on the same level.

In my mind, the rights of many of our minorities are far more important to us in terms of our humanity than are the preservation of the abused rights and privileges of those who are their oppressors. It should be evident that the exercise of the rights of some minorities presupposes the suppression of the rights of those who prevent their exercise. The exercise of the civil rights of the slaves meant the suppression of their masters'.

The withdrawal of tolerance from repressive movements like the Klan, intolerance to David Duke, these so-called anti-democratic notions of mine, will, in the end, reinforce the basis of true, universal tolerance. Most of us know this in our hearts, even though we cannot give conceptual voice to this. We need not feel shame for our intolerant feelings toward Duke and the Klan, for this may find expression as a humanizing force that may lead us to a kinder and more just tomorrow. Shame is for those shallow souls among us who believe that no convictions at all is the democratic norm, for it is by their good offices that the Hitlers of this world will rise to power.

Plans made for riverfront property

Two Missoula real estate agents, Bill Coffee and Bob Brugh, are trying to put a seven-mile parcel of Milwaukee Railroad property along the Clark Fork River into public ownership. Eventual plans for the land would link the university with the downtown via a riverfront park.

The land totals almost 80 acres and stretches from the Milltown Dam to near Reserve Street.

Neither the city nor the county has enough money on hand to purchase the land, so Coffee and Brugh are trying to recruit investors to hold the riverfront property in trust until the public open-space committee in February or March.

Open-space committee members were confirmed at Monday's Missoula City Council meeting.

The new committee will review all proposed uses of the $500,000 conservation bond Missoula voters approved last November.

Coffee said, however, that City Council members have made no commitment concerning the riverfront property and the conservation bond.

Other money for the property, he added, could come from mill levies, conservation groups, state and federal grants and private donors.

Coffee himself was nominated for a position on the committee, but the council withdrew his name, citing a conflict of interest because of Coffee's attempt to acquire the property.

Coffee said many people had the "knowledge of the mechanics and the expertise" to be on the committee but were not chosen to be on it.

Coffee added that the committee may now be cumbersome. "They will have to go outside the committee for information now, whereas they could have gotten it free," he said.

Also, Brugh and other Missoula investors have purchased the old Milwaukee Depot and nine surrounding acres. Plans for the depot include a restaurant and offices.

Fout to speak on chimps

A pioneer in animal communications system, Roger Fouts, will give a presentation tomorrow at 8 p.m., in the University Center Ballroom.

Fouts, a professor of psychology at Central Washington University in Ellensburg, specializes in teaching chimpanzees to communicate by sign language.

While at the University of Nevada-Reno in the 1960s, he was a member of Project Washoe. The project was named after the first chimpanzee that was successfully taught to communicate with humans through sign language. Since then, both orangutans and gorillas have learned the system.

Fouts is trying to determine whether Washoe, who accompanied him to CWU, can teach sign language to her offspring. He will present slides and movies focusing on these studies, as well as his earlier research.

This program is part of the Distinguished Speakers' Series and is sponsored by the Graduate Council, which invites one speaker each year. Last year's guest was biologist George Wald of Harvard University.

The presentation is free.

Polish workers continue strikes

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Millions of workers stayed off the job yesterday in spreading wildcat protests that have crippled industries nationwide. The nation's largest trade union accused the communist government of creating "another dangerous crisis" by failing to live up to concessions won during last summer's widespread strikes.

Spurious assassins stalk UM campus

By JAY KETTERING

Montana Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Molded in my couch, fishbowl full of rum in hand, I was enjoying babbled conversation with myself as my blurry friend watched on.

Suddenly, a suction-cupped dart bounced off my warm belly and I was dead.

My roommate had answered the door to our room only seconds earlier because someone was knocking. A very stupid move. He was also dead.

We had been ambushed by two assassins only six minutes and two very odd seconds after the vicious game had started. The first of many casualties in this rapidly spreading college fad.

The game of "Assassin" or "Killer" (as it is known on other campuses) is a sophisticated game that combines espionage with tag, using toy dart guns as weapons.

The object? Shoot your victim before he shoots you. That we had not accomplished this was something my roommate and I had become soberly aware of.

This campus diversion to studying and similar university extra-curricular habits begins when players turn in a brief biography sheet to the organizer of the event.

This person then assigns "hit" sheets for each player through a computer programming process. After an obituary list is posted for the names of the deceased and guns are distributed, the game is on.

Each player receives the name of his assigned victim through the mail at the same time. Players only know who they are supposed to kill and because no one knows all the people in the game, they must be cautious of anyone within dart gun range.

When a person is shot, he turns his victim sheet over to the assassin who then pursues his next victim, forming a self-executing circle.

The game ends when only one person remains and in this game, Tom Scott, freshman in physical therapy, was awarded a case of the beverage of his choice.

The organizer of the game on the University of Montana campus, who wishes to be known only as Papa Bear, majoring in geology, said he heard about the game through his girlfriend who attends school at Beloit College in Beloit, Wis., where the game was being played.

According to the January issue of Playboy magazine, the slay-for-play game has spread to UCLA, University of Pennsylvania, California State, and Florida State thanks to the efforts of Richard Baltin, a 23-year-old University of Florida law student.

Baltin said the game was introduced to him at Florida when his roommate transferred from the University of Michigan in 1976 where an unorganized form of "Killer" had been a favorite dorm diversion since the early 1960s.

Baltin is now president of KAOS (Killer As An Organized Sport) and claims the Gainesville chapter is the national headquarters.

Once the game began at the UM campus, the main attitude was that of paranoia.

One finds students taking showers with their dart guns in hand, turning and shooting at the slightest sound, practicing their aim on mirrors and unsuspecting people in the halls, and planning on how to stay alive.

A player must be shot in the torso to be officially dead and the only places off-limits to shooting are the cafeteria and the library.

One student, who had passed out on his bed one night, awoke only to discover the horror of being a dead man.

The game played on the UM campus started Jan. 10 and ended last Sunday and consisted of about 40 players.

Papa Bear said the game was a success but it dragged some because off-campus students were hard to track down.

Another game is being set up for this Friday, but there is no more information available from Papa Bear. Letting the details out only by word of mouth will help keep the game small and well-organized, Papa Bear said.

If people on campus would like to start their own game of rubber-tipped death, they should hang around Craig Hall next week and see how the shooting and hiding takes place.

Center stresses self-reliant living

By MARK GROVE
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The dirt in the garden is frozen now. The windows of the greenhouse are tarnished with snow. The chickens' water is almost frozen and there is a light on in the chicken coop to encourage them to lay eggs during the winter.

Inside the house Bill McDorman and Pamela Lee are eating homemade sourdough bread and drinking homemade elderberry wine.

"Winter is a great time for drinking wine," McDorman says.

But this spring McDorman, Lee and two other housemates will be busy in their backyard — planting seeds in the garden, working on the greenhouse and maintaining the Montana Center for Self-Reliant Living.

The center is an attempt by a few Missoulians to live within their means by growing their own food and heating their homes with the help of solar collectors.

Although the center is still in its beginning stages the group hopes to make it more than just a solar heater, a backyard garden and a chicken coop. Besides starting on three solar greenhouses, they have constructed shelves in the cellar to store canned goods and dried fruit.

McDorman and Lee, a sophomore in philosophy and economics, said they also plan to plant 20 dwarf fruit trees. They hope to have peaches, plums, pears and apples. They also plan to expand their kitchen to give them more room to can and dry fruits and vegetables.

A hot tub is also planned to give them a place to relax after working in the garden, and they will build a hot water solar collector.

The end result will be raising enough food on one-third acre of land inside the city limits of Missoula to sustain them. That is what makes their project different than the back-to-the-land movement of the 60s and early 70s, McDorman said.

Cities are where most people live, and if people want to be self-sufficient they will have to do it within urban areas, he said.

McDorman said if everyone who wanted to grow his own food, moved to the country, the open spaces would turn into one big

The group has already bought three houses and hopes to rent them to students who want to learn how to live in a self-reliant system.

subdivision.

With the increased costs of food and energy, McDorman said, it is more economical to raise your own food in your backyard than it is to buy it at a grocery store or grow it on large plots of land in the country.

By using compost and planting seeds close together they will be able to feed themselves and have food left over to sell at the People's Food Cooperative, McDorman said.

Selling the food at the co-op keeps money in the community instead of spreading it around the country to the big chain grocery stores, he said.

The center is not limited to the four people who are now involved. They have applied for grants from Musicians United for Safe Energy and the Western Sun Co. to help them start a self-reliant living collective.

said.

"People are becoming alienated from their life-support system," Lee said.

Part of the beauty of raising your own food is knowing where it comes from and having the satisfaction of raising it yourself, Lee said.

McDorman and Lee said students would probably be able to get credit for their participation in the collective through the University Omnibus Program or special assignments worked out with a professor.

They said they want students who are willing to work hard and to devote a year to the self-reliant living system.

"It's a myth that this type of living is all grand and rosy," Lee said.

She said people who want to get involved with the collective will have to work hard and work with other people.

McDorman and Lee said they don't expect everyone involved to have the same commitment or priorities but hope that they would contribute to the center in their own way.

People interested in joining the collective this spring should write McDorman or Lee at 629 Phillips, Missoula.

Power that controls the economy should be in the hands of elected representatives of the people, not in the hands of an industrial oligarchy.

Drawing will be raffled

Art department faculty members and students are holding a raffle and spaghetti dinner to raise money for the Visiting Artists fund.

A drawing by Rudy Autio, professor of art, will be raffled away. Autio, an internationally recognized ceramicist, donated the drawing for the fund-raising effort. Raffle tickets are $1 each.

The Visiting Artists Fund will provide money to bring outstanding artists to the University of Montana to meet with students, give lectures and demonstrate skills.

The winner of the raffle will be announced at the pasta fund dinner to be held Saturday night. Tickets for the dinner are sold in advance and are $5 each. They can be purchased from any graduate art student.

Further information can be obtained by calling the art department at 243-4181.

AKIRA KUROSAWA'S THE HIDDEN FORTRESS STARRING TOSHIRO MIFUNE

Kurosawa has taken a traditional period-drama, completely turned it around, and given us a fairy tale. He has employed all the elements from which the swordplay and costume pictures are made: coincidence, loyalty, disguised princesses, lost treasure, the flight through enemy lines, and used them in his fantasy for the purpose of entertaining us. There are heroics in abundance, feats of derring-do that could only be found in a fairy tale such as this, visualized by the master director himself and acted by the incomparable Mifune. If it has a moral, it is that which is expressed by the princess herself (this sensible young lady is the only one to keep her head throughout the film), an exhortation to be yourself to be what you are, and to realize yourself to the fullest.

It is as though Bunuel had made The Mark of Zorro. The result is what they call an action-drama in the trade, but one so imaginative, so funny, so tender, and so sophisticated, that it comes near to being the most lovable film Kurosawa has ever made.

One may guess that booze is important to the James McClure plays "Lone Star" and "Laundry and Bourbon" being presented by the Clark Fork Actors Alliance (CFAA) at the Forum. There must be some corollary between the voracious drinking onstage and that which it inspired in the audience last Saturday night. It is no small wonder that the plays improved as the evening went on, as more alcohol was drunk by the audience and the reviewer.

It is not only to the barmaid that I give thanks. I happily give the cast its due. The plays were well acted throughout, and the staging was effective. But I must object to both the plays and the spirit in which they were selected.

Unfortunately, the level of comedy in "Lone Star" was not even up to that of cheap Texas beer. According to its adolescent equation of comedy, if a belch is worth one laugh, then a fart is worth three. Topics such as Vietnam, sex roles and growing older were duly discussed. But it was cliché. There were themes, sometimes only inference that the plays dealt with something charmingly Montanan. The program maintains that "these plays would speak well to a Montanan audience." McClure, it is further claimed, "writes authentic western humor."

I find it difficult to understand why these plays, particularly "Lone Star," were selected on this basis. Since when is spitting, cursing, and belching western "humor?"

To suggest that Montanans need to be fed from their own red-neck mythology is a good-natured condescension. Would it speak better to Montanans to replace "Doonesbury" with "Rick O'Shay" or "Cowpokes?" Our artistic prejudices need not be pandered to. Nor should we feel self-congratulatory if they are.

One could claim that the bigotry and stupidity of the characters were held up for ridicule. Is this review, then, the rage of Caliban seeing his own face in a glass? I don't think so. The plays came off not as irony, but as a nostalgic pining for the "good old days" when men were men and the presidents Republican. If these symbols, along with Roy's pink convertible, are lost to the West, so much the better.

I am not obliged to accept these symbols, nor discover irony where none was present. Despite the fine acting, the plays induced a nostalgia for an old West which was neither as funny nor as fun as we are told. It is the same misty-eyed, backward-looking simple-mindedness that elected Ronald Reagan and maintains the "Urban Cowboy."

That we are served up this level of art, and as an audience consume it so heartily, indicates that we are all too ready for the inanities of the Republican '80's. Arthur Symons once wrote, "Comparatively few people care for art at all, and most of them care for it because they mistake it for something else." Certainly an artistic outing, even in bar theatre, could be more fulfilling than this.

CFAA, you could be replaced by a wide screen T.V.

gags, but no plot, much like T.V.

"Laundry and Bourbon" was more successful. It maintained humor without relying so heavily on body processes for its punch lines and vocabulary. Or was it that because of T.V., we are more used to laughing at women than men? Especially annoying was the

MRT to begin '81 tour

The Montana Repertory Theatre (MRT) will begin its 1981 season tour next month with productions of Bernard Shaw's comedy, "Arms and the Man" (Feb. 11, 12, 18 and 20), and "The Lion in Winter" by James Goldman (Feb. 13, 14, 19 and 21) in the University Theatre. The MRT is a professional company based at the University of Montana.

After playing in its home town of Missoula, the MRT will hit the road for a two month tour of thirty towns in six western states.

The MRT is now in its fourth professional season. Its chief goal is to offer the highest quality professional theatre to small and medium sized communities in the Pacific Northwest and Rocky Mountain states.

The MRT offers more than live performances. While touring, the company holds workshops on a variety of theatre arts in the schools of the hosting community. Also, each year 2 to 4 student interns are selected for non-lead parts in the MRT plays. This year's interns, James Moholt, Sheila Cooney and Darryll Broadbrooks, receive pay and academic credit, along with the opportunity of working with the professional thespians. Most of the technical crew and the set designers are also UM students.

Shaw's play, "Arms and the Man" met with critical acclaim upon its opening in London, in 1894. Unfortunately, the play's debunking of the glory of war was too radical an interpretation for the romantic English audience of the day.

"The Lion in Winter" is a modern re-telling of the struggle among King Henry II, Queen Eleanor and their three sons, over who will succeed to the throne. The deft shifts in emphasis from the hilarious to the melodramatic have often caused the play to be mistakenly billed as a comedy.

All seats will be reserved for these performances. For ticket information, call 243-4581.

'Wisdom' is breathtaking

By RANDY HINKLE
Montana Kaimin Reviewer

Bruce Beresford's The Getting of Wisdom, made its Montana premiere this week at the Crystal Theatre.

Set in Australia at the end of the Victorian period, the film follows the life of Laura Tweedle Rambothem (Susannah Fowles) through three terms at a stern college for young women. Laura arrives at school a naive girl from the Australian outback, unprepared for the snobbery and petty jealousy of her classmates.

Ashamed of her poor heritage, she attempts to win the approval of her peers by mimicking their vicious egotism. In short, she becomes a snob. Laura gains great status by fabricating a tale of her passionate love affair with a young minister.

Laura's glory is short lived, however, once her deception is discovered. Ostracized by the rest of the girls, Laura becomes a loner, devoting much of her time to studies and to the piano. It is through her music that she becomes acquainted with Evelyn, an older girl at the school.

At this point Beresford takes his greatest risk in the film, which had played something like a slick remake of Hayley Mills in The Trouble with Angels. The young women become exceptionally close, much like young lovers. Beresford treats the relationship with such sensitivity that the audience is deeply moved by the beauty of its intensity; there is a sharing and interdependence that is often missed in similar presentations of heterosexual relationships.

The film is beautifully photographed. Beresford is intensely aware of the breathtaking splendor of the Australian countryside. The seaside is a stunning mixture of white sand, black boulders and the pale blue sea. The gardens surrounding the school are awash with green and brilliant reds. Against all backgrounds, Beresford makes Laura stand out, taking full advantage of Fowles' marvelous ability to hold the eye of the viewer unrelentingly with her piercing eyes.

Neither the film nor the director should be missed if they return to town.

Contract negotiators awaiting budget

The contract-negotiating team for the University Teachers' Union told members Tuesday "basically not to expect any thousand-dollar raise," according to Howard Reinhardt, professor of mathematics and president of the UTU.

The meeting was held to relay information concerning the legislative session in Helena and how the lobbying effort on behalf of the Montana University System was progressing.

The UTU is negotiating with the administration on a new two-year contract, but negotiations are now awaiting the Board of Regents' budgetary proposal to the Legislature.

The current contract expires in June.

Tuesday's meeting was intended to keep members abreast of developments, but "there's nothing much new," Reinhardt said.

The Board of Regents will hold its next meeting on Feb. 6, where, among other things, the UTU negotiations will be discussed, according to John Richardson, commissioner of higher education.

The board is expected to draw up its proposed university system budget by mid-February and present it to the Legislature at that time. On the basis of this proposal and its chances of approval, serious negotiations involving specific figures can begin, Richardson said.

However, the budget is not expected to be finalized until mid-April. At that time the Board of Regents will know exactly how much is to be allocated to the university system as a whole, which will give the bargaining teams a firm basis for negotiation, Richardson said.

"It's all quiet on the front for awhile," said Jack Noble, deputy commissioner for financial affairs for the university system and a member of the administration's bargaining team. He said, "I don't think there are any major points of controversy" in the negotiations at this time.

The board also heard from ASUM Legislative Committee Chairman Bill Bronson on the progress of several bills and the work of ASUM's two lobbyists, Steve Carey and Mike Dahlem.

Some of the bills Bronson reported on are:

- a bill to state-fund the Montana University System's work-study program, with $600,000 over two years. The lobbyists will testify in favor of the bill.

- two bills to give the university system $1.4 million for library acquisitions. The ASUM Legislative Committee so far supports only the first bill, as it would take $700,000 out of investment earnings from Montana's coal severance tax. The second bill would take $700,000 out of the trust fund set up by the coal tax, and Bronson said "we do not want to see the trust fund busted up yet."

- House Bill 334, which would require legislative approval of ambient air standards set by the state Board of Health. Dahlem lobbied against this bill earlier this week.

- a bill to grant 18 additional faculty members and $860,000 to the University of Montana for forestry research. Bronson said "it does not look very good" for the bill, and urged those with an interest in forestry to write legislators in support of the bill. (See related front page story.)

- a bill calling for a constitutional convention to draft a federal constitutional amendment banning abortion. Bronson said a "very large majority" of University of Montana students are against banning abortion, according to a survey the Legislative Committee took last year, and that UM's lobbyists will lobby against the bill. In other business, CB:

- heard that one-third of the 1980-81 faculty evaluations are nearly completed. ASUM President David Curtis said the objective computer-generated data from Fall Quarter's evaluations will be tabulated by tomorrow, and that the subjective written data should be summarized soon.

- heard that student openings exist on two new UM search committees. Two students will be on a committee to nominate a new director of admissions, and one student will be on the committee nominating a new doctor for the Student Health Service, as one doctor is resigning. Interested students should contact Curtis.

- heard that openings exist on the following ASUM committees: Legal Services, Campus Recreation, Traffic Board, University Athletics and University Standards.

Azzara said he is planning to introduce a resolution that would call for the formation of an inter-campus committee to assess the energy savings that could be had from retro-fitting buildings in the university system. He said he is studying ways in which the money saved at each institution could be kept at the institution for other purposes. "We shouldn't dock it from the operating budget," he said.

There are two alternatives for the "up-front" funding for energy-saving plans, he said. One source would be the state, which he said has "the responsibility to put up front money for the projects." The other source would depend on the passage of a bill he is sponsoring that would require utilities to invest in energy conservation before acquiring major resources.

This bill would require investor-owned utilities to invest money that would have otherwise gone to central station generating plants, in cost-effective energy conservation and renewable resource proposals, Azzara said.

"It's vastly cheaper to produce a kilowatt by saving it than to make a generating plant," he said, but added that "it's not as profitable for utilities."

If the university system could come up with cost-effective energy conservation plans, the utilities would provide the capital to put them into effect, he said.

As a spokesman for the university, the hesitancy of UM in initiating conservation measures has put him in an awkward position, Azzara said. The other members of the Legislature wonder why the university does not lead by example in making campus buildings more energy efficient, he said.

Azzara said he would be "more than happy to sponsor any form of legislation" the university wants to propose in the area of retro-fitting and conservation.

Forum held about Duke

Most of the nine persons attending the campus-town meeting last night in the music-listening room of the University Center Lounge wanted David Duke to speak Feb. 18 so that they would "know what they're fighting."

Barry Adams, organizer of the meeting and environmental and social coordinator for the Student Action Center, said the meeting was designed to provide a forum for a community-campus dialogue over the Duke controversy.

Jerry Dirnberger, who moved to Missoula two weeks ago from Denver to start a management consulting firm, said that Duke will be an educational experience.

"By understanding where he's coming from," Dirnberger said, "at least you can get a feel for how you can respond."

Brad Warner disagreed. "You don't fight (racism) from an armchair," Warner said, "you fight it in the streets where it's real." Warner, a senior in English, said he saw Duke on television and found him to be a "hedgehog" when answering questions.

"Duke is dangerous," Warner said.

Law team advances

The University of Montana Law School moot court team won the second round of national moot court competition yesterday. They defeated the University of New Mexico in New York City, according to Betty Blankenship, administrative assistant for the law school. She said they will go into the quarter-finals today, with 16 teams left in the contest.

Weather or Not

Chris and Lisa were relaxing on a Wolfe Park bench when an old man with a long white beard and a loin cloth sat down next to Chris. "My name's Noiman Lizard. I'm Brooklyn's poem wizard," he said. "Go back to Brooklyn," said Chris.

"No, I'll stay with you and my poetry spew."

"If you don't leave, we will."
"Weather thou goeth, so goeth I; 38 will be today's high. Weather thou goeth, so do I go; 28 will be tonight's low. Journey with joy, or journey with sorrow: variable clouds, with snow by tomorrow."

Lisa drew her huge automatic and aimed it at Noiman's loin cloth.

"I'm leaving — just watch! But don't shoot my crotch!" Noiman fled.

"Thank you," Chris said. He kissed Lisa on the cheek.
