Spaulding at last week's Central office. Some Central Board members have complained that they never have complaint and said that there are complaints that the office is closed at 2:30 p.m. when it was met. He said that since complaints were voiced at last week's CB Board meeting, when it was stated that Spaulding makes $225 a month. Since then, said some ASUM officers, Spaulding now comes in earlier, tells secretaries when he leaves his office and where he can be contacted if needed.

Spaulding added that he spends much time in his office. He is taking 3 credits this quarter and did not make the amount of money this semester as president as he could have made in a regular job. He has also kept a record of the amount of time he spends on the job. Monday, he said, he spent eight and one-half hours working and yesterday, more than six hours.

Spaulding said he has made some sacrifices to take the presidency of the College Placement Council. He is taking the cooperation of his office. He said the CIA is a member of the College Placement Council, a group of institutions that finds new employees through on-campus interviews.

Spaulding admitted that he does not spend much time in his office. He is taking the cooperation of his office. He said the CIA is a member of the College Placement Council, a group of institutions that finds new employees through on-campus interviews.

"They (the CIA) come here to find employment for Gamblers and Gulf Oil," Hjelmseth said. He added that the CIA uses a pre-screening method in which interested students send resumes and applications to the CIA recruitment office in Portland. The CIA examines each resume and forwards the Career Planning Services which students it would like to be in touch with.

SAC wants to change class schedules

If the Student Action Center has its way, morning classes will be shortened by 10 minutes on Nov. 11 so a class-free hour beginning at 1 p.m. can be set aside for students to participate in a discussion on the threat of nuclear war.

Schweitzer fired for saying Soviets have superiority

WASHINGTON (AP) — The top military officer on the National Security Council staff was relieved of his duties and ordered back to the Army yesterday after saying in a speech that the Soviets have nuclear superiority and "are going to strike."

President Neil Bucklew who will have the final say in the matter, SAC will ask Bucklew for his approval of the idea later this week. The purpose of the discussion, according to SAC director Mike Kadash, is to try to educate students, faculty and the Missoula community about nuclear weapons, the growing possibility of nuclear war and the need to prevent such a war from happening.

The discussion would be part of a nationwide "Confrontation on the Threshold of Nuclear War" being held at more than 60 universities nationwide.

The conference is being sponsored by the Union of Concerned Scientists and is supported by former presidential science advisor George Kistiakowsky and astronaut Carl Sagan, among others.

Tonight Kadash will ask Central Board to not only endorse the shortening of classes but also to acknowledge the need for a confrontation of this type to take place.

Either sky is falling or winter has begun

By Pat Kennedy
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Yesterday, as most of us came out of various buildings, we discovered (what looked like) snow coming from the sky. Either that or the sky was falling and Chicken Little was out to lunch or winter has begun.

Snow showers ended by late afternoon at 34 degrees and left little wet and the wind was bitter. The weather was doing almost what it was supposed to do. The forecast from the National Weather Service at Johnson Bell Field for yesterday was cooler, windy at times, with a 30 percent chance of rain at 10 a.m. The high was to be near 50 degrees. What did it do? Snowed most of the afternoon at 34 degrees and left five inches of the white stuff on Marshall ski area.

Now this is not the meteorologists' mistake out at the weather station. It is no one's fault. Montana is famous for proving the weathermen wrong. Now the forecast for today, as of last night, is: Part clearing with the snowfall ending by late this afternoon. Low for tonight is 20 to 25 degrees. High for tomorrow is 40 to 45 degrees. Chance for precipitation is 20 percent today, and 10 percent tonight. (We'll see.)

There were travelers' adversities all over the state yesterday with the major staff of the Almanac being affected by the snowfall. The ever-famous Farmer's Almanac has predicted a severe winter. The Almanac has been 80 percent accurate in past predictions. It looks as if it may be right again. (The farmers better bundle up their cows.)"
Where's the rhyme or even the reason?

"What are you guys doing?"
The two women stopped talking and turned around to address a police officer in a patrol car. It was 9:35 p.m. Oct. 7 on the 200 block of Daily Avenue, only two blocks from where, minutes before, a young woman fought off an assailant with a wine bottle.
The two women approached the car to ask what was wrong.
The lone police officer explained what had just happened two blocks away. They were unaware of the incident and hadn't seen anyone. Then, according to the women, the officer allegedly seemed disdainful and indicated that perhaps they were asking for trouble by walking alone.

One of the women lived nearby, but the other had five blocks to walk, alone, before she was home. Both voiced concern for her safety to the officer. Finally, frightened for what could happen, she asked the policeman for a ride to her apartment.

She was refused that ride.
The woman made it home safely that night. She ran, informed that the attacker had not yet been found and was most likely still in the area. She obviously was shaken, first by the crime, and then by the callous and wholly inappropriate response of the officer. Good God, she probably thought, who is protecting me?

What happened here? Several patrol cars were no doubt in the area looking for the attacker. And her request was not unreasonable; one officer could have left to take the woman home, acting to prevent perhaps another assault or attempted rape. In fact officers usually offer some kind of protection or assistance at the scene of a crime.

Several calls to try to identify this particular officer from the numerous officers who probably responded to patrol the area failed.

However, given the fact that such an incident occurred requires and inspires some disturbing questions. How prevalent is such a callous, contumacious attitude among male officers? What precautions is the Missoula police department taking to prevent such attacks in not only a high-crime area, but also an area where there is a large population of sorority women? Finally, should such an officer be allowed to continue? Their continued training or solution to this incident. It never should have happened and should never happen again. One lesson should be clear though: preventative protection, such as in this instance where a simple ride home might have prevented the possibility of another attack, would be much more logical than perpetually reacting to crime.

Victimization

Editor: Dear Readers, My world is different now than it was a week ago. Now I am afraid to walk alone—anywhere. I look behind my back when I hear footsteps—even in the daytime. I am not being overly dramatic, I mean it. This is why it is so hard to believe that it actually happened. Yes, I am the woman who hit my assailant over the head with a wine bottle. I was darn lucky I had that thing.

I'm writing to the women—we're, very cautiously at night. Don't we see, sure, you, "those things never happen to me."

Well, that night, as I was walking home on a poorly-lit street, I turned around and saw my assailant before I jumped me. I turned around, thinking, "This is too absurd, he wouldn't rape me. That'll never happen to me."

A second later, he had me pinned on the ground.

Women — do not be stubborn! Think! I do not want to hear of any more victims. Nor do I believe you want to be a victim. There is a high rate of attempted rapes and rapes right right here in Missoula.

One note: the man who attacked me may have longer hair than mentioned last week in the Kaimin. I would say it was just below my ears. Keep a lookout for him. We certainly don't need him roaming the streets of Missoula.

Thank you for hearing me out.

The Victim

Wanted: pen pals

Editor: Thousands of college students in more than 100 countries overseas are seeking American pen friends of the same age and interests on American college and university campuses. They have written to Letters Abroad, a New York clearinghouse for international adult correspondence which matches Americans with applicants from abroad.

We hope your readers will want to participate in a program which has linked 1,200,000 Americans and their counterparts in other lands. Nearly all applicants for American friends correspond in English, but on occasion a new friend writes in the other language to improve his facility. Many exchanges have resulted in personal visits between correspondents.

There is an abundance of applicants from Third World areas of Africa, Asia and South America, as well as from Europe. This "one to one" exchange can provide students with a new understanding and appreciation of the feelings and opinions of their counterparts in far-off lands.

Many college correspondents have written to tell us what an enriching experience they have had.

There is so much for this service but a contribution of at least $2 to Letters Abroad to defray its expense is suggested. For immediate action, potential applicants should send name, address, age, interests and hobbies to Letters Abroad at 209 East 55th Street, New York, N.Y., 10022, enclosing a self-addressed stamped envelope.

No satisfaction

Editor: On Oct. 9, I had the misfortune of going to the Fox Theater for the midnight showing of the Rolling Stones movie, " Gimme Shelter." A small group of about 30 people were gathered there to witness all the sex, drugs, violence and rock and roll of the Altamont Pop Festival of 1969. What we got instead, however, was a film which needed to be edited with the cunning expertise and sensitivity of a giant sloth. But it was the soundtrack — the most critical part of a movie of this nature — which suffered the most. Throughout the entire film, two of the four speakers would wonderful sing along cut out. There were even a couple of 3:10 minute intervals where there was no sound at all. One would have had no trouble sleeping were it not for the hooting and hollering of the audience demanding that something be done about these problems.

But nothing was done. Upon confronting two teen-age ashers, and demanding a refund after the movie, I was told that I had no right to a refund. When asked why, one of them produced a sign that was allegedly hanging out of the front saying, in essence, that the Fox could not guarantee that the quality of this motion picture was like being at a real concert. They then invited me to talk to the manager upon his return on Monday, which I did. It was like talking to a panda. When I mentioned to him that his business ethics stunk, his reply: "Maybe so." When I suggested a letter might be forthcoming in the paper, his reply: "Go right ahead."

Well here it is, Mr. Peep Show Man; I know you won't mind a bit.

Van Develder's purpose of the Miss Legs Contest at My Place bar. If the intent was to entertain, I was not entertained. It was to inform, one paragraph would you have sufficed. If it was to spark sagitated readers to submit heated letters to the editor, congratulations, you succeeded. My views in reference to the ethics of the context itself are of no primary concern at this time.

I have outlined that moral nature serve no purpose to the Kaimin or to the students who write the publication. Appropriate ASUM funds used to produce the Kaimin and column space are grossly misused and could certainly be put to better use covering more culturally and educationally relevant topics. In fact, I can think of at least 69 other columns I would consider newsworthy and would feel comfortable contributing both my funding to pursue the articles and my time to read them.

Adams awarded $1,000 to research peace culture

By Pam Newbern

What has happened to the flower children of the 1960s? Did yesterday's protestor turn today into today's upright citizen, a member of the very establishment once so scorned? Or does the counter-culture of the 60s continue to grow and thrive into the 1980s?

One person thinks he might have the answer. Meet Barry Adams, former participant in the 60s counter-culture, and now University of Montana senior in sociology.

Adams was awarded a $1,000 Watkins Scholarship this summer to research the present status of the 1960s youth movements. Adams says that although groups like the hippies seem to have died out, there is evidence that they are continuing to grow, although they no longer receive or desire the attention the media gave them in the 60s.

Adams plans to attend "counterculture" meetings such as barter fairs and the Rainbow Gathering in order to do his research. He will write descriptions of his personal observations and interviews to see if such groups are still vital in today's culture. He will also submit a paper on his findings to the 1982 meeting of the American Sociological Association.

Dressed in a fringed-leather jacket, dark framed glasses, long hair, and a baseball cap proclaiming "unique in the world," Adams puts it this way: "The culture of the 60s has become the communities, food co-ops and barter fairs of the 80s. Barry is right in the middle of it. He knows what's going on in these groups.

Balch says that he feels Adams sees his life as a mission of what he wants to do.

"I think everything Barry does has a purpose towards what he wants to do," Balch said. "He definitely has a lot of charisma. He has an amazing ability to switch back and forth between cultures.

To limit the press is to insult a nation; to prohibit reading of certain books is to declare the nation; to prohibit reading of a cultural book is to declare that the culture is not unique in the world." —Al Capone

HELENA (AP) — Informing the public is a multi-million dollar activity for the state of Montana.

If you have a question — about almost anything involving the state — some agency has probably issued a news release or brochure on the subject. This past year:

• where the fish are biting
• what Gov. Ted Schwinden said when he dedicated a grove of trees in Pennsylvania to honor Montana war veterans.
• how to increase the sex drive of your sheep.
• what to do if verticillium wilt attacks your alfalfa.
• where the highways are icy.
• how you can tell the difference between ruffed grouse, blue grouse and spruce grouse.
• where you can recycle used tape material for radio and television.
• what to do if verticillium wilt attacks your alfalfa.
• where you can recycle used tape material for radio and television.
• where you can find "Montana's Best-Kept Secrets"... famed trout streams, hot springs, wilderness areas, guest ranches and resorts, ghost towns, museums, rodeos, festivals and public and private parks.

The state will issue thousands of news releases, produce films, tape material for radio and television, collect agricultural statistics and publish newsletters and magazines.

In Montana, the Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks is by far the largest information operation in state government. It plans to spend $1,016,000 on informational services.

The Department of Commerce plans to spend $611,000; Montana University System, $365,000; Office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, $116,704; and Highway Department, $104,443.

The Department of Agriculture will spend about $81,000; Natural Resources and Conservation, $59,000; Health and Environmental Sciences, $54,000; Institutions, $40,000; Military Affairs, $36,000; Justice, $35,000; governor's office, $27,175; Administration, $25,000; and Historical Society, $10,000.

Messman Rucker was in prison for trespassing Easter Day, 1980, at Malstrom Air Force Base in Great Falls during a nuclear arms protest demonstration.

Contacted in California by the Kaimin three weeks ago, Messman Rucker said he intended to pay the bill. He also said he would not know the exact amount of the bill until he was informed by the Kaimin.

ASUM sent a letter dated July 9 to Darla Rucker demanding payment of the bill. ASUM received no reply.

A second letter, dated Oct. 1, was sent to Rucker's Missoula address asking that the bill be paid. Again, ASUM did not receive payment.

According to ASUM secretary Brenda Perry, as soon as ASUM acquires Rucker's address in Berkeley, Calif., it will send Rucker a registered letter asking for payment. ASUM hasn't yet learned Rucker's address.

If Rucker doesn't pay the bill by Nov. 1, the matter will be turned over to the Missoula county attorney, Perry said.

Escapees captured

BROWNING (AP) — A personalized license plate bearing the name of one of three state prison escapees led to their capture here early yesterday morning.

The three trusts slipped away from the state prison ranch near Deer Lodge on Sunday night. Richard LeFountain, chief of the Bureau of Indian Affairs police, said the three men were arrested without incident at the homes of relatives of one of the escapees.

We're shedding light on special phone needs.

For someone with a hearing difficulty, this phone can shed some light on the problem. Because when it rings, the light starts flashing. And on the inside of the handset, there could be a volume control to amplify the caller's voice. So even though someone might not hear as well as other people, that person can use the phone just as well as anyone.

And that's the whole idea behind the Mountain Bell Telecommunications Center for Disabled Customers. Helping people with phones like this one so a disability won't be a barrier to phone conversation. At the Center, we have phones and equipment that can help with a hearing or vision disability. Impaired speech. And limited mobility. And if we don't already have an answer to a specific phone need, we'll work to find one.

If you, or someone you know, could use our special phones and services, we'd like to hear from you. Call us, toll-free, at our Telecommunications Center for Disabled Customers any weekday from 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. (The numbers are listed below.) Or call at your convenience and leave a recorded message. We'll get back to you the next business day. So you'll have a phone you can use when you want to use the phone.

Area ski runs are shaping up

By Ace Ramel
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Already you can see the "think snow" signs all over campus — scratched into desk tops, plastered on bulletin boards, even on buttons worn by people whose eyes glazed over at the sight of the white stuff coming down yesterday.

Velma Green is thinking snow. She is the manager of the Marshall ski area east of Missoula. Marshall is spending more than $100,000 on a new snow-making system that will provide man-made snow for 2,000 feet of the area's ski runs.

Green said the ground work in preparation for the installation of the snow-making system, which is manufactured by Hefco, should be completed by Nov. 1, and the system should be set up by Nov. 15.

The ski area has usually opened up anywhere from the first week in December on, Green said. She said there was no way to predict whether the winter would be going to be like called but called yesterday's snow "just beautiful." Green said yesterday afternoon the mountain already had four of five inches of snow on the top and about three inches on the bottom.

Marshall has a triple chair lift, a T-bar and a Poma platter lift, along with four rope twos. Twenty percent of the area's slopes are rated for beginning skiers, 55 percent for intermediates and 25 percent for experts. A season pass for the ski area costs $85.

For skiers who like to "go for it," the Montana Snow Bowl northwest of Missoula is the place to go. It has about 20 runs, half of which are rated expert. General manager Dave Malasky said the Snow Bowl is "considered a very challenging area," and added it has also begun intermediate and intermediate slopes.

Malasky said the changes on the mountain for this year's skiing include new cables for the chair lift and T-bar, and "a lot of grooming and cleaning especially of areas that were damaged by flooding last spring." He added that this year has a double chair lift, T-bar and rope tow, usually opens during the first or second week of December.

Malasky said. He said season passes for students are selling at last year's price of $135 until the Safety on Skis fair to be held at Big Sky High School on Nov. 8 after which the price will be raised to $145.

Further away from Missoula are the Discovery Basin and Lost Trail ski areas, both of which are about 90 miles away.

Discovery Basin, which is on Ramsey Mountain near Anaconda, is now just finishing a snow-making system exactly like the one being installed at Marshall, according to manager, Joe Bobbokat.

Bobbokat said he hopes the Hefco system, which he estimates will cost about $190,000, will allow Discovery Basin to open on Thanksgiving. He said last year the ski area didn't open until after Christmas.

Discovery Basin has a chair lift that provides access to several runs, Bobbokat said, including one brand new run. The area also has a Pony lift on a beginner slope.

Season passes cost $105 for the first family, and a book of 10 tickets are available at the door for the price of five. Bobbokat said.

Fifty percent of the area's runs are rated from beginner to intermediate, 35 percent are intermediate and 15 percent are rated expert.

The Lost Trail ski area, is more than 7,000 feet high and has a double chair lift for access to the ski runs. It is located about 30 miles south of Missoula on U.S. Highway 90. No representative for Lost Trail was available for comment yesterday.

Have the "stigma" that seeking Service should do so between Dec. 1 and Jan. 15,1982, a spokesman said, the Walk-In is operated solely — by the volunteers are under the guidance of the Student Health Center's mental health staff, she said, the Walk-In is run by student volunteers who have been through personal crises" of their own and are therefore "sensitive" to the problems of others. While the volunteers are under the guidance of the Student Health Center's mental health staff, she said, the Walk-In is operated separately — and solely — by the volunteers.

The Walk-In, Dozier said, does not use professionals or paraprofessionals and is not used as a training ground for psychology students. Thus, she said, it offers students another option of help, one that does not have the "stigma" that seeking professional aid still holds for some people.

The volunteers meet twice a week for an hour at a time for "training sessions" with the three nurse practitioners who constitute the mental health staff. The number of volunteers varies, but there are usually 10 to 20 volunteers each quarter.

The prime requisite for working in the Walk-In is caring, Sheila said. Volunteers are trained not just to listen but to show that they are interested and listening attentively, she said.

Bob said this includes "reflective listening," in which the volunteer repeats what the student has just said, phrasing it as a question. Thus, if a student said, "I feel bad," the volunteer might say, "You feel bad?" The student would thereby have the choice of going on from there in any direction.

In addition to repeating, Sheila said, body-language techniques for showing attentiveness, such as maintaining eye contact, leaning forward toward the student, nodding at what the student says and particular sitting postures must be combined with what each individual volunteer feels comfortable and relaxed with.

Beyond this training, Sheila said, volunteers occasionally receive talks about specific problems such as alcoholism, rape and drug treatment from professionals in those areas or from people who have dealt with the problems.

The Walk-In receives visitors with all kinds of problems, Dozier said, from students who have broken up with boyfriends or girlfriends to students who don't have a place to sleep, from those with major psychological problems to those suffering from loneliness or homesickness. If a student has a problem requiring more than a listener, the volunteers have a list of organizations and professionals, both on and off campus, to refer the student to.

Sheila herself has been in counseling for five years, she said, since she was 17 and her parents discovered — and didn't know how to deal with — the fact that she was using hard drugs. Only the past two years of counseling, at UM, have been beneficial, she feels. Sheila became involved with the Walk-In after her resident assistant brought her to see one of the professionals counseling in the center, but she did not become a volunteer until this quarter.

Visitors to the Walk-In do not have to give their names to the volunteers, and no records are made of who visits the Walk-In or of the nature of the visit.

Volunteers do record the total number of new and return visitors during their shifts. The Walk-In averages 25 to 40 visitors a week, Dozier said, adding that the service received about 200 first-time visitors each quarter during the 1980-81 school year.

The Student Health Service provides the facilities and up to $300 a year for advertising for the Walk-In, Dozier said.

The Walk-In is located at the east end of the Student Health Center Building, at the corner of Eddy Avenue and Maurice Avenue. It is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and every night from 7 to 11.

"It is also clear that the speech does not reflect the president's thinking with regard to the state of world affairs," said the official, who asked not to be quoted by name.

The aide said Schweitzer concurred in the action, taken by Allen at 7:15 EDT yesterday morning after an article on the ape in the Washington Post. "He thought it was important to return to his normal duties in order to spare the administration any embarrassment because of his unauthorized remarks," the official said.

Although the general caught White House officials by surprise, Schweitzer said in his speech to the Association of the United States Army his remarks had not been cleared and might get him in trouble.

"Well, I think we are going to have to get ourselves in trouble... in order to lay out the threat because the threat is believed not to exist," he said in the apparent intelligence. "These individuals should be able to learn rapidly," he said. "They have a lot to learn."

Schweitzer will be succeeded at the National Security Council staff in 1979 and earned a reputation among his colleagues as a "hardliner," even among the generally hard-line Reagan strategists. When Reagan began as president, Allen named him director of defense policy. Asked whether he had known of Allen's action in advance, Reagan said he did not and had been unaware of any "personnel problems."

"I have not been involved in discussions with Allen," Reagan said. "I think this country has been on a road that might be described that way when we were unilaterally disarming and letting the margin of safety disappear, the window of vulnerability gets wider. That's why we're following the course we're following now, so there can't be a drift toward war."

The Reagan administration has pressed for substantial increases in defense spending to augment U.S. strategic defenses. Schweitzer will be succeeded at least temporarily by his deputy, Rear Adm. James Nano.

"It is "a drift toward war," Reagan said.

When Reagan began as president, he was wounded in battle seven times. He was awarded the Purple Heart with six oak leaf clusters, indicating the military's second highest award for valor, three Silver Stars and the Purple Heart with six oak leaf clusters, indicating he was wounded in battle seven times.

Brezhnev gives PLO official diplomatic status

MOSCOW (AP) - Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev, in a strong new sign of support for the Palestinian Liberation Organization, announced yesterday that the Soviet Union was awarding the PLO's Moscow office "official diplomatic status."

Arab diplomatic sources in Moscow considered the move a Soviet and PLO response to the strategic military alliance between the United States and Israel announced in September.

They also said the Soviet action — while on the surface little more than a protocol nicety — also appeared to herald still closer political and military cooperation between Moscow and the PLO.

Thus, the Soviet news agency quoted Brezhnev as saying Palestinians have won "sympathy and respect" for their cause around the world, and that the PLO has gained "extensive international recognition as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people."
