HELENA (AP) — A lawsuit brought by Missoula’s daily newspaper against the University of Montana’s board of Regents is not aimed at removing the president of the University of Montana, editor Rodney J. Deckert said yesterday.

Deckert said the suit, filed by the Missoulian last summer, is aimed at clearing up questions that the board can exclude the public and press from its interviews with university presidential candidates.

State District Judge Gordon Bennett said in a memorandum Wednesday that he will not rule on the suit until the Missoulian determines whether it has the academy’s approval to sue.

Deckert said the Missoulian had not seen Bennett’s memorandum. “What we do will be contingent on our reading of it,” he said.

But he said the paper has never intended to have Bucklew removed from the job. “If pursuing this suit means our going to make life miserable for Neil Bucklew, the Missoulian doesn’t intend to do that. That’s the last thing we want to do.”

Bennett said in his memorandum that if the Missoulian wants to bring resources to prisoners from its interviews with finalists, the suit would be dismissed.

The Missoulian then filed its suit. Bennett responded by issuing an order that required the board to hold the interview in public or have them tape-recorded. The result was that opinions

The Kaimin endorses...

(Editor's note: Following are the Kaimin's endorsements for next Tuesday's city elections. Endorsements for Ward 1, 2, city treasurer and municipal judge are not included because those running are not opposed. The other choices were made by consensus of the editor, managing editor and two news editors.)

John Hamps has jumped aboard the New Right bandwagon and obviously expects to ride it right into the mayor's office. This is not to say he will run a terrible campaign. Hamp has offered very few concrete opinions or ideas on what he will do as mayor and instead seems to be spouting the rhetoric of one of his major supporters, MAC-PAC.

Bill Cregg, on the other hand, is a proven administrator. He is neither an exciting nor charismatic leader, but exhibits a willingness to look at both sides of an issue and work hard with people toward a common goal. He is an attorney and has the support of the City Council. On that note, the Kaimin endorses Bill Cregg for mayor.

Voters in Ward 6 have much of a choice this time around. Democrat Mary Palmer has a lot of experience in public life. She has been involved in Senior Volunteers and the Housing Authority. She is a delegate to the Democratic Party. She is basically a liberal. Palmer claims her opponent is too young for the job. age discrimination has always been an unsavory idea. Telling a college audience that a college-age person is too young for the job seems like political suicide to us.

Janell Hopkins is a young, earnest and intelligent student. Telling a college audience that a college-age person is too young for the job seems like political suicide to us. Unfortunately she doesn't have any new, creative or concrete approaches to the problems of city government. She is talking the basic Republican line of encouraging business, cutting taxes and streamlining government. Noble sentiments but no substance.

Because of the lack of choice the Kaimin is endorsing former city commissioner Bill Boggs as a write-in candidate. Boggs resigned this summer after criticism from other council members about his living habits. Boggs was always an extremely hard worker on the council and asked intelligent and relevant questions on the issues being discussed. He was one of the council's strongest members.

Boggs said yesterday he was glad to be off the council, and he does not foresee much possibility of a write-in vote. But if it does happen, Boggs said he would be happy to serve again. He will be a welcome addition back.

Voters in Ward 4 have a choice between Republican Francis Supernau—an honorable conservative who provides unexciting, reliable representation—and the Democratic challenger, Charles Briggs—a man who wants to share his council seat with his wife.

The choice, for the Kaimin, is Supernau. Since he was appointed last summer, Supernau has done his job competently. While he's a little too reserved, he brings 45 years of experience as a Missoula small businessman to the job.

On the other hand, Briggs, who comes across as if he is running on a whim, proposes that police switch from five 8-hour shifts per week to four 10-hour shifts. Wouldn't that be a great idea? We can't wait to do your homework before you run for City Council.

Ward 5 residents have a choice between a proven representative and a lobbyist for Missoula business interests.

The incumbent, Democrat Rosalie Buzzas, has provided responsive, competent representation. Her vote record is neither too strong nor balanced. She realizes that rampant development of the South Hills will only aggravate the drainage problem. Hold off on development, she says, fix the drainage problem first.

Good for her.

Republican challenger Tim Hubbard, on the other hand, wants development whether or not the problem is solved. The development can't be stopped, he says. He suggests using holding ponds to solve the flooding, yet doesn't know anything about the complex, comprehensive study of the South Hills drainage problem presented to council last year by Morrison-Matefie, Inc.

Not only has Hubbard neglected to study the major problem of his ward, but he is also a MAC-PAC man. If elected, he will bring the growth-at-any-cost mentality to council.

Vote for Buzzas. She'll give Ward 5 residents what they need — a voice in city government.

In Ward 6 there is a choice between a Republican running basically a one-issue campaign and the incumbent Democrat who, while not being a particularly dynamic leader, has served competently. Republican Frank LePlaine wants the sign ordinance repealed. That's not too surprising because he owns a sign company. LePlaine says the ordinance is just another example of the unnecessary red tape government imposes on businesses.

LePlaine puts jobs over health. Air pollution regulations are only useful to a point, he says, and beyond that they just get too costly for industry.

Air pollution is Missoula's worst winter enemy. It has to be dealt with. Regulations are needed. We would rather be healthy.

Put on the head of the council and serves in the mayor's absence. He is trusted and respected by the other aldermen. His strong ties to labor make him an obvious choice to represent Ward 6. He is not exciting and does not take strong stands, but his experience is enough reason, for us to favor him.

Attend the Bob benefit

Editor: I strongly urge everyone to attend the Haunted Wilderness Costume Ball on Halloween, Oct. 31, at 5 p.m. for a chili dinner. There will be an auction, raffle and costume contest that evening, with music provided by Patchy Valley Fegg and Raven's Run. A $2 donation will get you into the dance and a ticket to get you a plate of the chili dinner. Also, there is a kids' parade from Cars Park to St. Francis Gym at 1 p.m.

The purpose of this benefit is to raise money for the Bob Marshall Alliance, who is fighting to keep scientific exploration out of the crown jewels of wilderness. To go into a remote and pristine area for a week's worth of oil would be completely undesirable. Only the oil companies would benefit from the extraction of hydrocarbons from the Bob; no one else. The decision by the House of Representatives to preserve the Bob is being challenged by the major oil interests, so we need all the help we can get. If exploration is carried out, if the Bob is encroached upon, the smallest wilderness areas are sure to follow.

An estimated one week's worth of fuel might exist under the Bob. Is it worth to destroy prime grizzly bear habitat for the monetary benefit realized by the oil companies? Certainly not! A sound conservation and recycling plan could be considered a continuous source of energy forever, while we retain a small piece of national heritage for our future.

So, St. Francis is where it is at until Halloweenten, at the corner of Spruce and Owen (near Orange). Three measures will give you a hell of a good time, and it will be going toward a very necessary and crucial cause.

"If you ain't with it, you ain't without it." SAVE THE BOB.

Earth Conference Center dedication set for Sunday

The Institute of the Rockies will dedicate and open the recently completed "Earth Conference Center" on Sunday at 3 p.m. The location is one-half mile up O'Brian Creek Road, just past the intersection of Big Flat and Blue Mountain roads. A sign is posted on the north side of the creek. The public is invited.

The structure is an innovative demonstration project for alternative energy sources. The center uses earth sheltering principles, passive solar heating and a high heat, wood-burning masonry stove. The center incorporates several passive solar design principles including a greenhouse, heavily insulated concrete walls and insulating curtains for all glass areas. Only one wall is exposed to the elements.

The center is available to citizens and private groups for seminars, retreats and meetings. It can accommodate up to 60 people and may be reserved for various lengths of time. A full catering service is available.

The institute, founded in 1973, is a tax-exempt educational association created to respond to the public's need for better understanding of public policy questions on specific policy issues at the request of community or ad hoc groups. For more information or to reserve the Earth Conference Center, please call 543-7170 or 728-3592.

SAC to scare up 'Bob' bucks

The Student Action Center is sponsoring a series of activities tomorrow to drum up support and raise money for the Bob Marshall Alliance and its efforts to keep mineral and gas explorations out of the Bob Marshall Wilderness Area.

Tomorrow's events include:

- the Haunted Wilderness kids' parade, which will start at 11 a.m. at Carre Park, and end at St. Francis Xavier Gym at the corner of Spruce and Orange streets.
- a showing of the movie The Gold Rush, starring Charlie Chaplin, at 2 p.m. The movie is free.
- a chili dinner at 5 p.m. and an auction of outdoor gear that was donated by local merchants or purchased at low prices.
- the Haunted Wilderness costume ball, at 8:30 p.m., including most creative costume contest, most environmentally destructive costume contest and a dance featuring the country rock band Pache Valley Fog. A $3 donation is requested, and an expedition backpack will be raffled during the ball. A short skit also will be presented.

All activities, except the parade, will take place at the St. Francis Xavier Gym. There also will be a noon forum today in the University Center Mall featuring speeches and discussion on the "Bob."

Heartland to be shown

By Gary Turbak

Heartland, the award-winning movie filmed in Montana by a Missoula-based film company, will be shown twice Sunday in a benefit for the Missoula County High School Legal Defense Association.

Show times are 2 p.m. and 6 p.m. in the Mari Center Theater. Cost for the first showing is $5 for adults, $3.50 for children and senior citizens. Cost for the second showing is $10 for adults, $5 for children and senior citizens. All proceeds will be used to help pay legal fees owed by the association.

Heartland, which stars Rip Torn, Conchata Ferrig and Missoula-native Megan Folsom, depicts the joys and sorrows of life on the frontier prairie. The film was made in 1979 by Wilderness Women Productions and has won several awards, including the Golden Bear Award at the 1980 Berlin Film Festival. Advance tickets for the film are being sold at the University Center ticket office, Little Professor Book Center, Steick Drug, Kay's at the Southgate Mall, the bookstore at Missoula's Vo-Tech Center and Grizzly Grocery.

UM students too 'cynical' to license their bicycles

By Laura Harrawood

Bicycle riders in Missoula have until Nov. 1 to license their bikes, when the six-month grace period that began May 1 will end. Riders on unlicensed bikes will be fined a minimum of $10 up to a maximum of $500 if they are caught riding a bike without a license if pulled over for some other offense, according to John Williams, vice president of safety and information coordinator.

University of Montana students have been among the least responsive to the licensing ordnance, according to Williams.

The attitude that the license is just another disciplinary intru­sion on the individual's rights and freedom is typical of the more "cynical" college crowd, Williams said. "I'm not actually surprised that the university students are not falling over themselves to license their bikes, insofar as they don't 't obey traffic laws anyway,'" he said.

The median age of persons having bicycle accidents in Mis­soula is 18 to 20, much higher than the national average, Williams said. In fact, the acci­dents of college-age adults are similar to that of elementary-school-aged children, he added.

Most of these accidents are caused by recklessness, such as "blasting down the road" with no lights, and driving with lights off when it’s dark. Although most college students know how to drive a car, Williams said, "They get on a bicycle and all at once they become three or four different people." Bicycle riders are subject to the same rules as drivers, Williams said. In fact, the acci­dents of college-age adults are similar to that of elementary-school-aged children, he added.

"Children are the better bicyclists because they are being trained through various programs such as the Missoula Bicyclist Training Program, Williams said. Educational courses for adults, such as the one offered as UM on campus courses in the past, have been less successful, Williams said, as they typically draw only one or two interested people.

Although there is widespread interest in learning bicycle maintenance and cross-country touring technique, Williams said, people have "almost zero in­terest" in learning "how to get down the roads with cars" and evasive action maneuvers for emergency situations.

More than 700 bikes were stolen in Missoula last year, Williams said. Licensing a bike enables someone to have a description of the bike and its serial number to match up with the owner’s name and address so that it can be returned if found, Williams said. More than 50 bikes were recovered at the last police auction because they couldn’t be properly iden­tified, Williams said.

Bicycles most likely to be recovered are those valued under $300, Williams said, because the more expensive custom bikes are torn down for their parts.

A four-year license for a full­sized bike costs $5. A similar license for a child’s bike costs $2. All the bikes in a family may be licensed for four years at just $5; if all are licensed at one time. Or a four-year personalized license is available for $12, Williams said.

The fee for the license will help pay for more bicycle lanes along heavy traffic routes. A foot bridge near Orange Street joining off McCormick Park is also being considered. "We’re not going to see any of these projects coming out if there is no com­munity support," Williams said.

The license fee alone will not generate sufficient funds to pay for these projects, Williams said. But it’s hard to convince the government to provide funds for bikes if they don’t show enough interest in themselves to buy a license, he added.

All licenses may be obtained from Williams at City Hall, and all except the personalized licenses can by bought at the Schwinn Big Sky Cyclery, New Era Bicycles or other bike shops in town, Williams said.

I don’t feel we did wrong in taking this great country away from them. There were great numbers of people who needed new land, and the Indians were selfishly trying to keep it for themselves.­

Alexander to speak in lounge

Author and lecturer John Alexander will speak in the University Center Lounge tonight at 7:30 on the topics of peace, justice and world hunger.

These topics, said Thomas King, who arrang­ed to have the Student Action Center sponsor Alexander’s lecture, are all related to the theme of "global responsibility." King is a priest at Christ the King Church, 1400 Ger­ald Ave.

Alexander is a co-editor of The Other Side, which King called a "radical Christian" magazine, and is a member of the Jubilee Fund, which supports ministries in Third World countries.

The Asum Performing Arts Series

Montana Kaimin • Friday October 30, 1981—5
This year’s game takes on a significance completely different from recent confrontations. Usually, the Bobcats are battling for the Big Sky title and the Grizzlies are floundering near the bottom. The Cats need the win to stay in the hunt and the Griz are playing the spoiler role.

Oh, how things have changed in 1981. The Grizzlies, fresh off a 33-3 thrashing of Portland State, are in a four-way tie for the conference lead with a 3-1 record. Boise State, along with Idaho State and Montana, hold 3-1 conference records. Boise is the only team to defeat the Grizzlies so far this season, so they must lose again and the Grizzlies must win the rest of their games in order to claim the Big Sky title.

Tailback Rocky Klever is now the number two career rusher in UM history with 1,857 yards. He needs just 220 more to break Steve Caputo’s record.

Sophomore quarterback Marty Mornhinweg is already the number four career passer at UM with 1,808 yards. He is fifth in single season passing with 934 yards after six games.

Grizzly linebacker Brent Oakland has missed the last two games with a neck injury, but is listed as probable for Saturday’s game.

On paper, the Grizzlies look to be far better than the Bobcats. But records and stats don’t mean a damn thing when these two teams meet. The fact that UM is battling for the title should be a tremendous motivator for both teams.

The turning point in the match came at the end of the first game, according to Coach Dick Scott. "We had them down 14-11 but let them come back to tie it up," he said. "We could have very easily fallen apart at that point, but we held together and won that game."

"I was extremely proud of the way we held up under the pressure," Scott said. "This was a very emotional game for us, but we just went out and did what we had to." The win was crucial for UM, not only because of the rivalry, but also because it kept the Grizzlies in the hunt for the conference title. UM is now 3-1 in conference play, just one game behind Portland State, and 18-11 overall.

"We still have a good chance of winning the conference race," said Scott. "The key for us right now is to play tough against Washington State. We can’t afford to let down against them."

Montana Review—Missoula's city elections

Bill Cregg

By Rita Munzenrider
Kомиссар Читинг Конгессист Майер

City government must make it as easy as possible for new businesses to come into Missoula and for existing businesses to expand, said incumbent Democratic Mayor Bill Cregg in an interview last week.

Cregg said he is concerned with bringing more industry to Missoula to create more jobs. As a member of Missoula Jobs, Inc., a committee of 15 businessmen and government leaders promoting jobs for the city, he has been investigating the possibility of attracting clean industry to Missoula to create new jobs without adding to the city's air pollution problem.

John Hamp

John Hamp, 55, the Republican nominee for Missoula mayor in the Nov. 3 election, said in an interview last week that he feels there has been a lack of jobs in Missoula for the past four years and a lack of diversification in the community. "We need a change," Hamp said, "and we need a full-time mayor."

Hamp, who is running against Mayor Bill Cregg, said that services such as the city police and fire departments have been neglected.

"There are two fire stations with only two men in them," Hamp said.

"We're going to have to vote," Hamp said. "It will be the dream of our community." Hamp said. "Missoula will have places for symphonies and speakers. We'll even have a place to hold a forum of the rain. It will also bring in tourism, of course, it will take to implement."

Missoula's wards

BILL CREGG

If re-elected, Cregg said he will continue to work to revitalize the downtown and protect it from further decay. Since the downtown comprises 25 percent of the city's tax base, it is in Missoula's best interest to rejuvenate it, Cregg said. And he added, "there are a lot of jobs involved."

Missoula's biggest problem today is its sagging economy, according to the 50-year-old mayor. But, he said, the problem "hangs on the national economy."

"High interest rates keep people from building homes," he said, "and that results in less of a demand for lumber. There's little that can be done at the local level."

Cregg said recent accusations that the City Council is anti-business are untrue. All anyone needs to do is look at the records to see that the council is strongly pro-business, he said. "Usually, the council eventually ends up doing what the petitioner asks, even though members are tough on businesses in committee hearings."

Cregg said he supports development of the riverfront. "The extraneous plans might not get done," he said, "but the smaller, less expensive stuff will. We can wash anything nice."

Cregg said consolidation of city and county governments is necessary, and if re-elected, he would push for consolidation. The public would have to vote for consolidation, which would add 15,000 residents to the city and increase the tax base by about 40 percent, Cregg said.

Then, the county would pay its share for services that it is now getting at no cost, he added.

"The fight against annexation is a lost cause," said Cregg, who spent 30 days of the 90-day 1981 legislative session in Helena lobbying for an annexation bill. "We gave it hell in 1979, too," Cregg said. "It's not good politics, and it's bad for the morale to keep lobbying for a lost cause."

Cregg believes he has been an effective mayor, despite his bout with cancer of the larynx two years ago, which has left him with a raspy voice. But, that is the only remaining sign he once had cancer; for the disease is in total remission, he said. "My health is now perfect." And, his success, he said, is partly because he keeps good people around him. "I've been through five budgets and 35 contract negotiations and never had a strike or serious labor unrest," he added.

Cregg said he believes there is no waste in city government. An administrative assistant to the mayor is imposing, he said, to provide better service to the city and county by improving efficiency. No meaningful tax relief would result from cutting the $25,000 a year position he said, because each taxpayer spends only 75 cents per year towards the administrative assistant's salary. But, by cutting the position, "the city would lose all kinds of money," he said.

"We're going to have more jobs than there are people," Cregg said, "so we've got the money, eventually, at a 14 percent interest rate."

"Delinquent taxes mean increases for other taxpayers. But, in the meantime, Cregg says, "that policeman needs his pay checks. As soon as the economy is better, delinquent taxes will be paid. There won't be as large an increase next time for taxpayers once delinquent taxes are paid."

Cregg, who lives with his wife and four sons near the University of Montana, has been a Missoula resident since 1950. He came to Missoula in 1949 to attend the university and he spent 1951 in Korea during the war. He returned to Missoula in 1955, but he never finished school.

For more than 25 years, Cregg has been involved in community services, including the March of Dimes and Little League baseball. He also organized and directed the Little Grizzly football program and the Junior Achievement program for the Missoula high schools.

John Hamp

Hamp said that, if elected he would stimulate the Missoula downtown area as quickly as possible. He said that downtown Missoula will never again be a major shopping area. He added that offices would have to be moved downtown to stimulate business growth. He said that shopping malls in other cities have taken away downtown district business, but most of those downtowns have been converted into major business districts.

"We need a downtown parking problem. Most generally, you can park somewhere," he said.

"We gave it hell in 1979, too," Cregg said. "It will be the dream of our community." Hamp said. "Missoula has had financial troubles because of numerous tax delinquencies the city holds, he said, but that, despite the delinquencies, the city government has still overspent its budget in the past five years.

"After five years," Hamp said, "this money isn't coming in, and when we can't afford to buy things we should. And we should put money that we do have where we're going to get something back."

Hamp ran unsuccessfully for the state Senate in 1980. He attended Colorado State University and Denver University and is a World War II navy veteran.

He is active in the Missoula Crusaders booster program, Golden Grizzlies and the Elks.

Georgia Walters City Treasurer

By Renata Birchbuel

Georgia Walters, a Democrat and incumbent city treasurer running unopposed in the upcoming election, said that the major issue facing the city is the budget. Walters, who serves as a state senator and member of the Montana Senate, said that the city is facing tough times in terms of balancing the budget. She said that the city has to make tough decisions in order to cut costs and balance the budget. Walters said that the city has to look at ways to cut expenses, such as by eliminating positions and reducing overtime. She said that the city is also looking at ways to increase revenue, such as by increasing fees and charges. Walters is running unopposed and is expected to win the election. She has been a city treasurer for many years and has a strong record of fiscal responsibility. She said that she is committed to continuing to work hard for the people of Missoula and to making the city a better place to live. Walters is also involved in many community organizations and is a member of the League of Women Voters. She is a strong advocate for women's rights and for equal opportunity for all. Walters is a devoted family woman and is a mother of two young children. She is a dedicated public servant and is committed to serving the people of Missoula.
Ward 1
Cass Chinski
By John Carson
Kaimin Contributing Reporter
For Cass Chinski, Democratic alderman from Ward 1 for four years, the election was over on Sept. 15 when he beat his Democratic rival, David Gilligan, in the primary. He is running unopposed in the general election.

Chinski is, and has been, a consultant for various conservation groups: the Wilderness Society, Friends of the Rattlesnake and the Sierra Club, among others.

A graduate of the University of Wisconsin with a bachelor's degree in economics, Chinski said the tax-increment financing plan for downtown redevelopment is a sound investment.

Tax increment financing freezes the tax base in the central business district and channels the taxes that are collected on improvements in the district into financing more improvements to the district.

Without both the tax-increment financing plan and a riverfront park, Chinski said, rebuilding the central business district would be next to impossible.

Jeanne Ransavage, a Democrat over Gilligan was significant

"We've had a hard time trying to balance the budget and still provide police and fire protection and sewer and street maintenance."

Because the state determines property tax rules, council members need to ask the Legislature for a new law that will increase the amount of interest charged to delinquent taxpayers, Ransavage says.

One proposal being considered would raise this interest only for those who owe more than $1,000, she adds.

Ransavage said she believes Missoula must attract new business and become more independent of the wood products industry.

"I want a different kind of industry that won't pollute the air," she says. "The kind that will be healthy for the community."

In Ward 2, a new truck route is needed, she says, because many trucks use Phillips Street. Residents are upset, especially with the trucks often speeding, and the police haven't always been able to regulate them.

Specifically, Herbig wants to:
• Revitalize the downtown through building the new parking garages and by holding back expansion of the Southgate Mall.
• Immediately purchase the Higgins Avenue-Madison Street parcel of the new Riverfront Park.
• Strictly enforce the sign ordinance, the new air pollution standards as well as the ordinance prohibiting camping by transients in Greenough Park and along the river and railroad.
• Combine the above, mix in equal portions, and you have Herbig's formula for attracting tourism and clean industry to Missoula.

Herbig, 55, who is running unopposed, was appointed to council last November after alderman Dick Guillian moved from the ward, which comprises the lower Rattlesnake and the university area. If elected, Herbig will finish Guillian's term which ends in two years.

Ward 2
Jeanne Ransavage
By Gregory Ammonson
Kaimin Contributing Reporter
Jeanne Ransavage, a Democrat, is unopposed in the upcoming election to represent Ward 2, a job she has held for 10 years. For her, the "big issue" facing the city is the budget.

Members of the City Council will have to lobby at the special session of the Legislature this fall in order to solve budget woes, Ransavage said.

Another problem facing Missoula is many citizens' failure to pay property taxes on time, which has created "substantial hardship" for the city and for those who pay on time, she said.

The large number of tax delinquencies is resulting in a lower standard of government services, she says.

"We've had a hard time trying to balance the budget and still not only because of their different opinions on the issues, but because Gilligan's candidacy was sponsored by the Missoula Area Citizens Political Action Committee, an organization Chinski characterized as "negative" and "politically naive."

CASS CHINSKE
"MAC-PAC is under the impression you can buy an election," Chinski said, citing the fact that his $841 campaign expenditure was less than half of what MAC-PAC spent on Gilligan. Most of Chinski's campaign was financed by small individual contributions "of $5 to $25" with the exception of a $100 contribution from former council member Jack Morton.

In an interview last week, Chinski said that in the campaign, MAC-PAC perpetuated an image of the City Council as anti-business. This is an image Chinski said he feels is both undeserved and ultimately harmful to at least one of MAC-PAC's own stated objectives: attracting more businesses.

Chinski said Missoula needs more diverse industry to safeguard it as much as possible from economic hardship. Regarding statements about an anti-business council, Chinski said, "We've done more for business than any council before us. Some people just don't want to be told they have to plant a tree in front of their business."

Chinski supports the creation of a local government economic development office to organize the "valuable resources" of the area and channel "public input" into development policies.

An avid bicyclist, Chinski says he will work for continued development of city bicycle routes and, of course, the riverfront parkway.

While Herbig has kept a low profile during the 11 months since her appointment, she said she intends to be "a little more outspoken and assertive" during the next two years.

"If I don't have any game plan," she said, but will "take the issues as they come along and do my homework. I'm not going to worry about what happens to me politically."

One problem Herbig sees among Ward 1 residents is their lack of interest in city government. She said when she first was appointed, she went around to homes in the ward with a letter giving her hours and phone, but has never had any response.

Herbig said she feels the neighborhoods, including residents of the University of Montana dorms, should form associations that she and the other Ward 1 alderman, Cass Chinski, could meet with on a regular basis.

A clean and attractive Missoula is what Lois Herbig wants. And Herbig, democratic candidate for a Ward 1 council seat, has definite ideas on how to get it.
The city's personnel, data processing and accounting departments all overlap with the county's, she said, adding that the city and county should combine those departments. Hopkins also questioned the need for the Missoula Planning Department to have 21 staff positions while the largest city in the state, Billings, has only 14.

The position of administrative assistant to the mayor should be eliminated, Hopkins said, and the need for a financial director is "questionable." She said both jobs could probably be filled by one person, the way it was done last year.

The present system would be a better solution, she said.

The way city government businesses that want to move to Missoula also frustrates Hopkins. "Businesses that want to come in, we should welcome," she said. "We have to try to make the city attractive." A strict set of planning rules should be drawn up and adhered to, she said. Such rules, she said, have added that the council constantly adds new requirements and requests additional hearings on proposed developments.

"Our biggest task is to make government more efficient and more effective," she said.

JANELL HOPKINS

The 35-year-old Democrat says her experience as head of the Retired Senior Volunteer Program, the Missoula Housing Authority and other civic work provides her with the skills necessary to help run city government.

Palmer, a Missoulian resident for 15 years, said last week she doesn't think someone 23 years old — such as her opponent — could do the job.

To establish credentials, Palmer said, "one has to experience many things, then be willing to go on a limb and risk getting shot down."

Palmer and Hopkins are seeking the seat vacated by Bill Boggs, who resigned after a draw-out inquiry initiated by Ward 3 Alderman Ernest Boggs, about Boggs' residency in Ward 3.

The ongoing inquiry initiated by Ward 3 Alderman Ernest Boggs, about Boggs' residency in Ward 3.

The council has delayed action on a request from the mayor to move to Missoula, she said. Stiffer penalties for not paying the taxes she hopes voters won't consider her husband's job as county commissioner — or the recall attempt against him — an issue.

"There's no conflict of interest and I hope people don't use that as an issue," she said. "I've built a track record of my own."
MAC-PAC seeks changes...

Business climate is too cold

By Jack Tanner
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Missoula has a more important choice Nov. 3 than just who will represent them in city government for the next four years, according to a group of businessmen who have banded together under the banner of the Missoula Area Citizens Political Action Committee. Missoula has a choice between living in a vital city or one on the verge of dying, said John Seeberger, MAC-PAC chairman.

The choice is clear, the generally conservative, generally Republican committee believes. Missoula can either continue its present "anti-business" attitude and watch the city wither and die, or it can change directions, begin encouraging business and become a "healthy, viable city."

To achieve that end, MAC-PAC has become increasingly active in the upcoming city elections, openly soliciting funds and supporting candidates whose views most closely coincide with its political philosophy, a philosophy which leans substantially toward the business side of the ledger.

The reasons for the formation of the political action committee nearly two years ago, and the reason for its increasingly active and visible role in local campaign regards to the business community is simple, according to Seeberger.

"We decided we didn't agree politically with the direction the city of Missoula was taking," he said. "We didn't like the anti-business attitude that things as they have been in the past are not quite the pro-business city government."

Attitudes have change, according to Seeberger, who had intended to run for the Ward 3 seat but was ruled ineligible because he does not live within the city. But things could have been worse, he said.

For instance, MAC-PAC supported nine candidates (including two Republican incumbent Francis Superneau faces Democrat Charles Briggs."

The results, approaching the general election, have not been all that positive, according to Seeberger, who had intended to run for the Ward 3 seat but was ruled ineligible because he does not live within the city. But things could have been worse, he said.

For instance, MAC-PAC supported nine candidates (including two Republican incumbent Francis Superneau faces Democrat Charles Briggs."

The remaining MAC-PAC supported candidates are mayoral candidate John Hamp and council candidates Janet Hopkins (Ward 3), Tim Hubbard (Ward 4) and Frank LeBlanc (Ward 6). MAC-PAC has declined to endorse a candidate or comment on the only other contested council election, Ward 4, where Republican incumbent Francine Hopkins faces Democrat Charles Briggs.

The loss of four of eight races in the city primary, however, was perhaps not the biggest blow that MAC-PAC had to endure.

In early October, the Missoulian published an article indicating that MAC-PAC had tried to conceal the names of numerous contributors.

MAC-PAC has vehemently denied these charges, blaming the problem on a misunderstanding of campaign contribution reporting regulations.

"It was a simple misunderstanding," Lowe said. "They (MAC-PAC) did not understand the laws, which is understandable, considering the complexities involved. Once they were informed of the problem, they immediately filed the proper reports. They cooperated very well."

"They kind of screwed up in their choice of fund-raising techniques," he said, "but they certainly didn't break any laws."

Seeberger said the article damaged the committee's credibility but it hasn't stopped MAC-PAC from continuing its pro-business campaign, he added.

"I think the biggest impact we've made is that people right now recognize that there are some people that are disenchanted with the direction that local politics has taken," he said, assessing MAC-PAC's effect to date. "Even if the candidates we support don't get elected, those that do get elected are going to realize that out there somewhere in the populace there is an attitude that things as they have been in the past are not quite the way that they should be.

FRANCIS SUPERNEAU
because of his business experience. Superneau's experience began soon after moving from Philiburg in 1933, with a job in a convenience store, which was located where the Bon is located today. He earned his accounting degree in 1938, practiced tax accounting for several years and began work at Wanda's Men's Wear (newly the Music Center at 403 N. Higgins Ave.) in 1943. Superneau bought the store in 1969 and ran it until 1978, when he sold the store and retired.

Superneau also favors spending some of the city's $500,000 conservation bond on developing the banks of the Clark Fork River. "My feeling is that if we don't do something to preserve the riverfront, for the good things, and if we were to let it go and not develop it in a good orderly fashion, that a few years down the road we'd really have to do it," he said, suggesting condominiums and parks would be a good way to develop the area.
PROBLEM WHICH, ACCORDING TO CITY GOVERNMENT, IS A MAJOR Issue for Ward 5. Leadership in community groups, like that on the council, he said, desperately needs someone to deal with the problem. "People are scared," he said, "and we need to bring in some innovative ways to cut costs and still maintain the quality of services."

One of the proposed budget cutbacks for next year includes reducing the personnel offices as a place to begin "streamlining." A series of innovations have been put forward, which, according to Hubbard, his degree in business and experience as finance controller for the now-defunct H. O. Bell Ford dealership and his present job as an accountant for Peterson Meat Market, will help Missoula. "Missoula desperately needs someone like that on the council," he said in an interview last week.

A lack of jobs and high taxes are the two most pressing problems in Missoula, according to the 36-year-old Glendive native who has lived in Missoula for 23 years. "People are scared," he said. "We need something other than the lumber industry we can bring to Missoula. We have to see what kind of industry we can bring."

Taxes are going up, Hubbard said, because the city is spending more than it is taking in. He said the city could save money by cutting back on non-essential services, such as picking up leaves and street cleaning. "These are areas people can start doing more for themselves," he said.

TIM HUBBARD

Missoula can also save money by "streamlining city government," he said. "This is something we need to do." He said there is duplication of services in some areas and mentioned the personnel offices as a place to begin "streamlining." A self-funded insurance program like the county's could also save the city money, he said.

The main problem facing Ward 5 residents right now, Hubbard said, is the drainage in the South Hills. "We can't keep waiting," he said. "There are other ways to deal with the problem." Hubbard suggested that a series of settling ponds be built, but he was not familiar with similar plans to deal with the problem that Morrison Maierle Inc., a Helena engineering firm, presented to the council last year. "It's time to act," he said. "We can't keep waiting." Hubbard favors development of the riverfront park. "We can rejuvenate the downtown with little (cash) outlay," he said. The city should buy the land now while it is cheapest, he said.

This is Hubbard's first attempt at political office. He is married and has four sons.
I think the people do want some sign regulations," he said, adding that the regulations should be "reasonable." By lifting the existing restrictions on signs, some businessmen would be tempted to start constructing bigger signs, and "it could get out of hand," Potts said.

Potts said his Republican opponent, Frank LePiane, testified last year before the City Council against the sign ordinance, and that LePiane wants the ordinance repealed. LePiane is a co-owner of Walford Sign Co.

A crane operator at the Champion Packaging, Potts is involved in Friends of Youth, is on the board of Missoula Community Hospital and is currently serving on the Governor's Aging Services Advisory Council.

Missoula is a "geographical situation and no النظر criteria can correct that," he said, adding, "I don't think you could walk? LePiane said.

But LePiane said air pollution at a "geographical situation and no geographical situation can correct that," he said, adding, "I don't think you could walk? LePiane said.

But LePiane said air pollution regulations are "worthy of pollution time to a point." For instance, he supports more rigid inspections of vehicles before their installation.

The sign ordinance and the required landscaping of new developments are examples of "restrictive" measures the council has adopted that hinder business growth, LePiane says.

As for the claims being made by challengers of incumbent council members that the City Council has anti-business, Potts said, "I don't think you could accuse this council of being anti-business."
