Jogging through air pollution may be unhealthy, Curry says

By Laura Harrawood
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Warning: Exercise may be hazardous to your health.

The difference between living in Missoula's polluted air and jogging in it can loosely be compared to the difference between the effects of smoking two cigarettes a day and smoking two packs, according to Dr. Bob Curry, director of the Health Service at the University of Montana.

Jogging during a Stage I alert can increase inhalation of particulates "probably twenty-fold," he said, adding that it may be related to other health problems.

No data exist proving a correlation between jogging in pollution and pulmonary disease, Curry said, because people have not been jogging long enough to conduct research. When the data is in, Curry said, he thinks the findings will indicate a correlation because other air pollutants, such as cigarette smoke and coal dust, are linked to pulmonary disease. There is no reason to believe wood smoke and automobile fumes would be less of a problem, he said.

There may be no concrete data, Curry said, because air pollution studies don't have as much funding or interest as do diseases like cancer. However, more people are sick or hospitalized in Missoula during times of high pollution levels.

The benefit of exercise in cardiovascular fitness is undeniable, but the risk of outdoor exercise during pollution alerts can counteract it, Curry said. It would be better, during times of high pollution to skip a day if you can't exercise indoors or away from the valley, he added.

The UM football team has some outdoor physical education classes and has not been able to move practice indoors during Stage I alert conditions because there is not local facility large enough to accommodate them, according to Mike Van Diest, strength and conditioning coach for the football team.

Everyone is affected by bad air. The Missoula air pollution study done by Dr. Kit Johnson of Missoula and others for the state legislature is limited, but significant, Curry said. Basically, it determined that "kids here are sicker than other kids" tested in Local particulate control seen as solver of problem

By Jim Marks
Kaimin Reporter

Only a few Missoula area residents participated in the Clean Air Week forum last night, in which several speakers said air pollution is worse than it was in the 1960s and 1970s.

Richard Steffel, a University of Montana graduate in environmental studies who is involved in working on air pollution issues, said, "We are in a worse pollution situation, as regards particulates, than we were in the bad old days."

According to some of the other speakers, the solution lies in giving local governments more flexibility in setting policy concerning air pollution.

The forum, which was held in the Red Lion Inn, was attended by only about 50 people. The forum was part of the Clean Air Week activities, through which the City/County Health Department is trying to inform people about air pollution and to rally support for individual action.

The speakers were: Ken Alkema, head of the air pollution division of the Environmental Protection Agency, Hal Robbins, chief of Montana Air Quality Bureau, John Duffield, UM assistant professor of economics, Ann

Columbia is up and away, but it may be back early

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia, a ship of Earth born for work in space, catapulted back into the heavens yesterday, momentarily flooding a blue Florida sky with light to rival the sun.

It then ran into a fuel cell problem that may force NASA to shorten the mission from five to two days.

NASA said that while the astronauts are not in danger, the schedule has been pushed so that, if necessary, the Columbia can be called home after 54 hours instead of the originally planned 124 hours.

The fuel cell developed high alkaline content, indicating seepage that was mixing oxygen and hydrogen. At the same time, there was a reduction of one-half volt in the cell's output and Mission Control ordered the cell shut down.

Because of uncertainty concerning Columbia's power generation, officials delayed an engine firing that would have raised Columbia's orbit 19 miles to 157 miles.

The shuttle settled easily into orbit 138 miles high, and as pilot Richard Truly tinkered with problems, he dropped his business-like manner and told Mission Control: "You won't believe this, but this is fun."

"We'll see you in about a week," commander Joe Engle told launch control shortly before blastoff.

Columbia's second blastoff, a spectacular event after a plague of pre-launch delays, made history. Never before had a ship of any flag tasted space a second time.

Engle and Truly, military test pilots who had awaited space flight a combined 31 years as NASA astronauts, were matter-of-fact, although Columbia's throbbing liftoff sent Engle's heart racing at 120 beats a minute, while Truly's beat registered a relatively calm high of 94.

Eight days' wait ended at 10:10 a.m. EST when the shuttle's three main engines and two solid rocket boosters fired with 6.4 million pounds of thrust.

Launch control's clock stood at 10:09:59.887 when the 184-foot shuttle lifted off on what was to be an 83-orbit, five-day tour. The crowd at the launch site, sparse by past standards, watched in awe as the trailing column of white smoke snaked through one lone cloud and then far into the sky.

Truly turned 44 yesterday and the launch crew had put a huge "happy birthday" sign over the shuttle's entry door.

The journey is officially designated by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration as STS-2 (for Space Transportation System, mission two). It is the second of Columbia's four scheduled test flights. The vehicle is to go operational late next year carrying three communications satellites.

Today's launch was delayed from 7:30 a.m. to 10 a.m. so technicians could fix a data relay unit with a part scavenged from the shuttle's half-built sister ship in California. Repair was completed this morning just after midnight and the signal flashed to start the final countdown hours.

Then, nine minutes before scheduled liftoff, there was one last, brief, delay — with launch director George Page telling his control team, "Let's take our time and do it right." They did and the launch was picture perfect.

Engle was here

One of the two men orbiting the Earth today visited the University of Montana 13 years ago.

Commander Joe Engle, who is manning the spaceshuttle Columbia along with pilot Richard Truly, was only a major when he appeared at UM Oct. 9, 1968. Engle was a replacement for another astronaut, who was unable to attend because of a change in mission assignments.

Nathaniel Blumberg, former dean of UM's School of Journalism, arranged the visit so journalism students could confer with a NASA astronaut.

Engle appeared two days before Apollo 7 lifted off in 1968.

In a lecture at UM, Engle said it was difficult to predict the future of the U.S. space program because "it depends on how far we can develop technology with the available funds," he said.

He also said it was hard to tell whether the United States would beat the Soviet Union to the moon. Engle predicted the United States might have a man on the moon by late 1969; the first manned moon landing was July 20, 1969.

At the time, 52 astronauts were in training for possible manned expeditions and Engle said he didn't know when he would be selected. "But I'm doing everything I can to make myself as qualified as possible," he said.

Funding method to be decided by MontPIRG

By Bill Miller
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

To refund or to waive.

That is the question facing the Montana Public Interest Research Group — a student-run, non-profit corporation that helps students pursue consumer and environmental issues.

MontPIRG is trying to decide whether it wants a refundable or a waiveable fee system to finance its operation. Either system MontPIRG chooses would require approval by the Board of Regents at its regular meeting Dec. 11.

The refundable fee system, preferred by MontPIRG, would charge each student $2 at registration. Upon request of the student this money would be refunded.

The other option is a waiveable fee system. In this case the students could refuse giving MontPIRG the $2 at registration by checking a box on their registration form. However, even if they didn't waive this fee at registration, the students could still request a refund and will receive it.

"We prefer to negotiate for the mandatory system, but we see the waiveable system as an acceptable option," said Bob Anderson, junior in zoology and a member of the MontPIRG steering committee.

Anderson said MontPIRG wants a refundable fee system for two reasons. First, it was the system endorsed by 3,700 University of Montana students last spring when they signed a petition supporting MontPIRG. For this reason, Anderson said, the

Not a creature, nor UM, was stirring

'Twas the eve before the special session and all through the University of Montana, not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse.

Not UM President Neil Bucklew, not ASUM President Steve Spaulding, not the ASUM Legislative Committee.

No one at UM is prepared for the special legislative session, scheduled to begin Monday. Bucklew, Spaulding and chairwoman of the Legislative Committee Jeanne-Marie Souvigny all complacently state that since the Legislature will be dealing with block grant questions, the university system budget is safe from prying hands.

Wrong. They don't know that.

It is conceivable that the state House and Senate will vote, by a majority, to open up the session. And if Schwinden decides to toss the whole appropriations bill on the floor, the university system budget, which received a whopping 33 percent increase, will be subject to the same scrutiny given other state programs.

Even if the Legislature is not opened up, who's to say that students won't be affected when there are numerous and obvious examples to the contrary. Consider:

- limiting eligibility for Medicaid and welfare.
- restricting eligibility for food stamps.
- reducing the amount of the state student loan budget.

A majority of students at UM do not come from middle class families and live safe, warm and well-fed in a dormitory. Many use, and depend on, these forms of aid, and these students are being ignored by this university.

It is the university's and particularly ASUM's, responsibility to protect the interests of the students, and if the lack of concern being exhibited toward the upcoming legislative session is any indication, they are sadly neglecting their duty.

The claim is that what will soon be on the table for discussion does not immediately and directly affect the university. This short-sightedness will eventually lead to downward spiraling enrollment and unrealized revenues for the university as students use tuition money for other things that do affect them immediately and directly—such as food and medical care.

UM continually professes a desire to be part of, and interact with, the Missoula community. How dare the university set itself apart from the community by refusing to involve itself in legislation that will affect, in a number of ways, that entire community?

Simply, it is arrogance and hypocrisy.

All of UM's officers have, at one time or another, warbled that UM is a vital part of this community, and they have, on occasion, used that argument to their, and the university's, benefit.

Now, however, these same officers are turning their backs on the community. Would it not be impressive to see a university delegation actively participating in budget proposals, proposals which will deeply affect its community?

To be prepared for the Legislature could do no harm and not to be prepared could be disastrous. Now, however, we can only wait and hope that the actions of our myopic "leaders" do not come to haunt us later.

Movie isn't objective

Assignment: Life, to be shown in the University Center Ballroom Monday night, purports to be an objective look at both sides of the abortion issue. It is not.

The film, sponsored by the Missoula Christian Action Council, uses a pretense of objectivity to make its propaganda palatable. Most of the movie presents the right-to-life view, and the portion on the pro-choice view is calculated to discredit it.

If you watch this movie, do so armed with the knowledge that it is not what it claims to be. It cannot, perhaps, teach you much about the abortion issue, but it can be a valuable example of deliberate distortions made by the "new right."

Editor: "Nuclear war would be the ultimate human and environmental disaster. The immediate and long term destruction of human life and health would be on an unprecedented scale, threatening the very survival of civilization. The threat of its occurrence is at a dangerous level and steadily increasing. Physicians in all countries must work for the prevention of nuclear war and for the elimination of all nuclear weapons."

From the First International Congress of Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War, March, 1981.

Freedom, the hope for its realization, the struggle to actualize it around the globe, so that all people may share in its bounty and glory; there can be no doubt that this is what the fight is all about. Both the Soviet Union and the United States lay claim to its guiding light, and both succumb to the perverse illusion of freedom through force. Both are quite prepared to sacrifice all of life to further the freedom of death. The bespectacled, colorless, ghostly men who perpetuate the mindless race to nuclear oblivion need not be scrutinized here, nor the enigmatic motives that propel them into such lunacy.

What remains imperative is self-scrutiny. As the inheritors of the capacity for universal death, our generation is faced with questions often posed in the past, but never with such force or urgency. Is there, a purpose, or meaning to our lives? What responsibilities and obligations does the human species obtain for the rest of life and the earth as a whole? What part does the individual person play in the life of the whole, and what does the course of the whole signify for the individual? Such basic questions have all but lost their power in the shadow of academic non-think and political doubletalk. Yet their elementary appeal is evidenced by the millions of lost souls who wander through the smorgasbord of new consciousness techniques or those who lose themselves in the obsessive compulsion to accumulate wealth and thereby find security amidst the madness. Then there are those of us who feel the continual, ill-defined dread painting our daily lives "grey and grey," coloring even our deepest laughter and joy with an inarticulate resignation that is on the edge of eternal hopelessness.

Where does our meaning dwell, and what sort of plague is this that weights so heavily upon our happiness?

In what way does life call to us, how are we to remain open to the unbounded presence that greets us, the wondrous divinity which remains, calm and poised, above our fleeting, petty storms? We are not ignorant of the human condition, the sweet efflorescence of beauty that surrounds us, the mysteries that await us in tomorrow. Each dawn draws the veil aside so that we may witness the day and all that it provides.

The day dictates our path, its light queries us, expectant and concerned, peering deeper within us than we ever dare. With all the eyes that partake in its glory, it studies us, hopeful, calling us to task, demanding we take stock of who we are and recognize the role we are impelled to play.

The days of the past have further demands. We stand, as Newton said, on the shoulders of giants; their lives flow through our veins, their dreams dwell in our happiness and growth. Our indebtedness to the millions of lives that were spent, in celebration and tragedy, rapture and grief, only so that we may live, all this denies calculation. And yet, in our day, the whole of their harvest lies beneath our thoughtless heel to be crushed, contemptuously, arrogantly, with no regard for the ineffable immensity of the crime.

We must meet the world on its terms and remain faithful to the demands of life. The whole of Nature stands before us, terrified and speechless, awaiting judgment. We are summoned to speak for all that has lived, all that is, all that is not yet born.

This is the task demanded of us, and we must rise to it. To gather ourselves within and among ourselves, pass beyond what we merely are, and become what we must. Without acting in concert to overcome the threat of universal death, we only deny our own lives, trapped by heinous lies that encapsulate our existence, oblivious to the light of the day. We must live up to this truth, or we will surely die, whether the bombs fall this year or next. The malignancy of falsehood and deception will eat at our hearts, our minds, our bodies, until we are nothing but the silhouetted apparition of life. Our experience will be empty and hollow, but mere fantasy, a reckless flight from our truth.

To reclaim our truth and our lives, we must take it upon ourselves to work for the elimination of all nuclear weapons. There simply is no other way.

Listen to the voices that sing to us in the silent terror of the night. Let the music of their suffering melt into us, let them fashion our voices into a chorus, our lives into the task before us.

But, as they say, you gotta be able to walk before you enter the race. The convocation was an adequate beginning, but far from what is finally required. You are needed.

Don't be taken in

Editor: This letter refers to "Please write" in the Oct. 29 issue of the Kaimin, page 3. I realize the intentions of Kaimin editors were pure, but they were a little naive.

Readers may recall Steve Smith's column in the Oct. 17 issue of the Missoulian. If so, they know what I'm addressing.

Here's the story: prisoners everywhere are sending sentimental letters to uninformed newspapers across the country. Letters beseech innocently for correspondence. They ask for anything from pastries to money to stamps. What's wrong?

Well, in Pittman's case (Oct. 17, Missoulian), he sold form letters to inmates who would copy them into their own handwriting, imploring unaware citizens. If stamps, for instance, were returned, inmates would use them as money, in prison, to buy contraband, dope, cigarettes, etc.

More importantly, if the prisoners can secure wishes from some suckers, and then convince prison authorities that they have a sponsor, a job and housing, they could get paroled!

I'm not suggesting all newspaper-writing prisoners are so licentious, but let's not have the Kaimin contributing to the possibilities.

And after all, they are in prison. Maybe they're innocent? If so, they wouldn't be writing to exchange pictures and "past experiences."

New restaurant and bar to open at Milwaukee depot

By Ace Ramel
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

The Clark Fork Station, a new restaurant being built in the old Milwaukee Road depot is scheduled to open Dec. 7, according to Terry Sweeney, a manager of the restaurant.

The restaurant will have an atmosphere reflecting Missoula's past, Sweeney said. Pictures and other features of the restaurant, which was built in 1908, will depict important people and events of Missoula's history, he said.

He said the restaurant will feature menu items such as steak and seafood and also will have live entertainment. It will be a "classy place," Sweeney said.

Rich Harrington, the other manager, said the restaurant will be in the main waiting room of the old depot, while the baggage room will be made into a bar. Harrington said a passageway connecting the two areas is being built.

The owners of the restaurant are Jack Nelson, Bruce Peterson and Chris Crawford, Harrington said.

Harrington said the opening of the restaurant was postponed for more than two-and-a-half months by "legal delays." He said a protest was filed in July over their liquor license because the building is close to a church.

Although the protest was withdrawn after about two weeks, Harrington said there was a "need to get new financing" after the withdrawal.

Phone directories are free this year

The new University of Montana phone directories should arrive before Thanksgiving, and this year they will be free.

Hart Enterprises Inc. of San Diego, is publishing the directories and sold ads to Missoula businesses to pay for them, according to Bill Brown, publications editor for UM.

Last year the directories were sold for $1.50 apiece because the firm, which had previously sold advertising to cover the costs of printing, did not make enough profit, Brown said.

Last year's directory sales were poor, even after the price was reduced to 75 cents. Less than half of the 6,000 directories were sold.

Brown said the plan for distributing this year's 6,000 directories is tentative. One directory will be delivered to each dorm room and married housing unit. Faculty members also will receive directories.

The information desk in the University Center Lounge has directories for off-campus students.

Poorly-lit streets add to womens' fears

By Rita Munzenrider
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Many women are afraid to walk alone at night on poorly-lit streets near the University of Montana because of the high rate of rape and assault in the area.

The fear is understandable, considering the alarming statistics. In 1980, 47 assaults, rapes and sexual assaults — 41 percent of Missoula's reported crimes against persons — occurred in the university area, which is bound by the Clark Fork River, Mount Sentinel and Higgins and South avenues.

The university area is an older section of town. The street lights are far apart and their light is blocked by huge, thick trees which have grown up around the poles. It is hard to tell that street lights even exist in some neighborhoods.

Darkness is the major contributing factor to the high crime rate, according to Detective Mike Weigel of the Missoula Police Department's Crime Prevention Bureau. Improved lighting would cut the number of assaults and rapes in half, he said in an interview last week.

Kelly Rosenleaf, a volunteer at the Women's Resource Center and a member of the Rape and Abuse Task Force committee, said darkness gives men a chance to hide in bushes and fewer opportunities for people to see them. "They wouldn't be as apt to attack people in lighted areas," she said.

Others, including residents of the area, agree and are trying to generate more interest in upgrading the lighting system. Members of the University Homeowner's Association and Ward 4 alderman Francis Superneau are working on estimates of the methods and costs of upgrading the lighting, since residents of the area most likely will have to pay the expenses.

Superneau said the area may not need many additional lights if the ones there now could be made more efficient. But the improvements must be made on a voluntary basis, he said.

According to Superneau, many homeowners are positive about making lighting changes. But, he said, there are people who feel the situation doesn't affect them, because they don't "go out in the evening and walk alone."

But there are many who must walk alone at night because they have no other means of transportation. A majority of those are female students, Weigel said.

Two recently reported assaults were in early October when two women were jumped from behind in separate incidents. The first assault occurred at about 8 p.m. Oct. 7 in the 300 block of Eddy Avenue. The other occurred Oct. 8 at about 9:30 p.m. in the 200 block of Daly Avenue.

The woman who was attacked on Eddy Avenue went to the Women's Resource Center shortly afterward to inquire about improving the lighting in the area, according to Rosenleaf.

While better lighting won't eliminate the problem of rape and sexual assaults in the area, it will cut down on them, Rosenleaf said.

Anna Lisa Saulwick, a rape counselor at Women's Place, doesn't agree completely. "It's a fallacy that men only rape in the dark," she said. "They rape whenever they can. It's probably hard to tell whether it (better lighting) would help."

Saulwick suggests that other alternatives might be more effective. Neighborhood groups could establish a "safe house" every two blocks, where women could go if they're afraid or suspect they might be in trouble, she said.

If a woman is attacked and knows there is a safe house nearby, she would think, "yes, I could run that far," Saulwick said. "It would give her more incentive to run if she knows she has only a block to go to get to safety."

Neighborhood patrols, either by bicycle, foot or car, also would be effective, she said. Winter is a scary time, she said, adding that women often must walk to or from class in the dark. Men know the patterns and the times the women walk home, and to have a car of citizen volunteers cruising during those times could help, she said.

Saulwick isn't the only one advocating alternatives. A group of male residents of Craig Hall has begun to organize an escort service for women who must walk at night around campus or nearby areas. (See related story on this page.)

"It's a good idea," Saulwick said, "but, women should start their own escort service. Women can protect themselves."

She is all for educating women on rape. In fact, Women's Place will be conducting classes for that purpose in all residence halls before the end of the quarter. Self-help will be emphasized, Saulwick said, and both men and women are welcome to attend. She said she also would facilitate neighborhood meetings upon request.

There is some disagreement on whether the UM campus is dangerous because of its lighting. Ken Willett, chief of Campus Security, said last week that the campus is as well-lighted as any other section of the community.

Weigel said sexual assaults don't occur on campus often. "Contrary to popular belief, the campus is not a high crime area," he said.

But, Saulwick and Rosenleaf say it can also happen on campus and women should take precautions. The most recently reported assault on campus occurred last year in a dark stairwell in Jesse Hall, when a young woman was sexually assaulted by three or four men.

Willett said Campus Security has regular foot patrols of the campus at night and cars patrol areas when possible. He added that cars periodically drive down poorly-lighted streets in the area, past the fraternities, sororities and UM President Neil Bucklew's house.

And, the police department always has one car on patrol in the university area, Weigel said. It would help to have more patrols in the area, he said, but the city doesn't have the manpower to do it.

Rosenleaf said she is opposed to the idea of having "safe lanes" — areas that have better lighting than others — on campus because, "at the same time you're telling women it's safe to walk here, you're also telling where the women are going to be."

Saulwick said people who leave the library at the same time each night may live in the same general area and should walk home together. "A rapist is most unlikely to rape four women who are walking together," she said.

Rosenleaf and Weigel urge women not to walk alone, but to walk with a friend whenever possible. And if they must walk alone, they should walk down the middle of the street in poorly-lighted areas because people hiding behind cars and bushes can't jump out as easily, they said.

Saulwick said she encourages women to practice a self-defense. But, she said, one way — such as a self-defense class — is not for everyone. "Women should use whatever weapon they choose," she said.

Many people advocate the use of mace, a low-potency chemical which can be bought in small cans in many local stores. If sprayed into the eyes, it is painful and can distract the attacker long enough for the victim to get away.

But women should not rely completely on it for protection, Weigel and Saulwick said.

"If a guy has raped quite a few times before, he has it down and he knows what he is doing," Saulwick said. "He's not intimidated by these things."

"You have to be ready with mace all the time," Weigel said. "If a guy is drunk, or on drugs, mace could aggravate him even more."

"It doesn't work that well," he added. "It might help, it might not. But, you should never get a false sense of security from it."

New Escorts Unlimited offers dusk-to-2 a.m. service

By Doug Decker
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Perhaps you've felt the fear of not knowing who is following you. Perhaps you've put off going across campus at night because of fear. Maybe you are looking for a sense of security while traveling on campus at night. If so, there is a new, on-campus organization, called Escorts Unlimited, that may be able to help you find that security.

Mark Dean, freshman in computer science at the University of Montana and representative for Escorts Unlimited, calls his organization "just a bunch of people doing what ought to be done." The service, new to UM, will be available to anyone from dusk to midnight during the week, and dusk to 2 a.m. on weekends.

Escorts Unlimited will operate free of charge on campus and will charge a 25-cent fee for runs off campus — to fraternities and sororities, for example.

Other members of the service are Nick Marchi and Porter Sanford, both UM students.

According to Dean, the main purposes of the service are "to instill a feeling of security for campus travel and to deter would-be assailants and acts of violence."

"Missoula has one of the highest incidences of violent crime in the state," says Ken Willett, UM Manager of Safety and Security.

The university has been no exception. There have been several rapes and assaults in the area during the last few years.

Dean says the poor record of escort services on campus in the past doesn't bother him. Several escort services have been organized in the last few years, but have not lasted. Not so with his service, says Dean.

"We're serious about this, and have good reports from the right people," he said.

Dean submitted a proposal for his organization to Ron Brunell, director of residence halls at the university. The proposal was met with approval.

"There is a real need for one (escort service)," says Brunell. He emphasizes the need for planning on the part of the service, and maintains that the university needs and would use such a service.

"We're glad that Ron Brunell is excited about our service," Dean says. "We hope to work with and through his residence halls staff."

Dean also has talked to Eric Johnson, vice president of ASUM. "We've gained Johnson's support, and we've been added to ASUM's Rape and Violence Task Force," says Dean.

Posters with more information will be put up in residence halls and in all buildings on campus within the next two weeks. The service should be in operation by Nov. 12.

Monday rape occurred downtown

The Missoula police are investigating a rape that occurred Monday at about 10 p.m. in a downtown alley east of Higgins Avenue off Broadway.

The 20-year-old victim was attacked near her place of employment as she approached her car to leave, according to police.

The assailant forced her to the ground, police said, then raped her. The victim received no other major injuries.

The assailant is described as being about 6 feet tall, 180 pounds and in his 20s, and as having brown medium length hair. He was wearing jeans and a dark colored jacket, police said, adding that he escaped on foot.

According to Detective Pete Lawrenson, investigating officer, the assailant's description is similar to the description of the attacker in the Oct. 7 assault near the University of Montana campus in the 300 block of Eddy Avenue. The police are investigating the possibility that the same man is involved in both cases.

Grizzlies close home season against Weber

By Scott Turner
Kaimin Sports Editor

The Montana Grizzlies host the Weber State Wildcats Saturday in what may be their last home game of the season. Kickoff time is 1:30 at Dornblaser Stadium.

The "may be" part comes about because of the clouded playoff picture in the Big Sky Conference. Montana, Idaho State and Boise State are tied for the lead with 5-1 records. Big Sky Conference officials announced last week that, in the event of a tie at the end of the season, co-champions would be crowned. A tie-breaking procedure would then be applied to determine who goes to the playoffs. The Big Sky is keeping the formula secret until the end of the season.

This means the Grizzlies could conceivably host a playoff game. But first they must beat Weber State who, with a 3-2 conference record, still has an outside shot at the playoffs. First year Coach Mike Price has turned the Wildcat football program completely around. Last week Weber defeated Augustana, S.D. 27-7 to assure their first winning season since 1971. The Wildcats' overall record stands at 6-3.

As far as the Grizzlies are concerned, they played two games last week against the Nevada-Reno Wolfpack. They lost the first one 16-7, turning the ball over four times in the first half. The second half started out much the same way and the Griz found themselves staring at a 26-10 deficit with 7:08 to go in the third quarter.

Enter Bobby Connors.

The freshman quarterback from Glasgow completed eight of 10 passes in the second half for 116 yards and a TD. More important, though, was the fire Connors breathed into the rest of the team. Tailback Rocky Klever, who had only 35 net yards rushing in the first half, finished the game with 105 on 21 carries and earned the Big Sky Offensive Player of the Week award for the second time in 1981.

But the biggest turnaround came on defense. Plagued by a poor pass rush in the first half, the line started putting pressure on Reno quarterback Marshall Sperbeck, and the results were impressive. Add some superb plays in the secondary and a linebacking corp that stopped the run cold, and the Grizzlies completely stymied the Reno attack the rest of the game.

Klever needs only 11 yards to become the all-time leading rusher at UM. He now has 2,066 yards. Sophomore tight end Brian Salonen, who leads the team with 26 catches, is already 10th in career receiving at UM with 546 yards.

Linebacker Curt McElroy leads the defense this season with 71 tackles, followed by Pat Curry (68), Scott Gratton (67), Dennis Bowman (60) and Dave Chaplin (60).

Mickey Sutton ranks eighth in Division I-AA with an 11.1-yard average on 18 punt returns.

The Wildcats are lead by tailback Kelvin Matthews, who has 464 yards on 57 carries (an 8.1-yard average) and five TDs. Quarterback Milt Myers has connected on 164 of 310 passes for 1,791 yards and 16 TDs.

Seventeen different Wildcats have caught passes this year, a fact that worries the Grizzly coaching staff. Assistant coach Bob Lowry said that Weber has so many different offensive formations that "we haven't even come up with names for some of them."

Quarterback Marty Mornhinweg, nursing a badly bruised shoulder, is listed as doubtful for tomorrow's game. Bobby Connors will start.

The Grizzlies silenced a lot of skeptics with last week's dramatic win. All season long they have proven that you don't need a lot of highly talented players to win football games, just a bunch of guys that want something so badly that they'll do anything to get it.

Fall sports update . . .

• The men's cross country team travels to Pocatello, Idaho for Saturday's NCAA District 7 Championships. Coach Larry Heidebrecht lists Texas-El Paso, Idaho State, Nevada-Reno, BYU, New Mexico, Northern Arizona, Air Force and UM as the favorites in the 16-team meet. The top three teams will qualify for the NCAA Championships to be held Nov. 23 in Wichita, Kansas.

The Griz will be trying for a return trip to the nationals without Jim Coombes, who has a hamstringing injury.

"I think our chances would have been better if Jim hadn't gotten hurt," Heidebrecht said. "However, I still expect us to do well. Mike Brady, Jack Ramsey, Kevin Dille and Ron Johnson are all running very well right now."

• The women's cross country team has the week off to prepare for the AIAW National Championships Nov. 21 in Pocatello.

The Grizzlies earned the trip by winning the Region 9 championship last Saturday.

Deirdre Hathorn won the individual championship with a time of 17:40.6. The next three spots were taken by Grizzlies Laurie Holm-Johnson, Bridgette Baker and Gretchen Goebel.

"The top four had their best total performance of the year," said Coach Dick Koontz. "I couldn't have asked any more of them. They just went out and took control."

• The women's volleyball team closes out the season on the road this weekend.

The most important contest is tonight against conference foe Portland State.

"Portland State is the team we really need to beat because they're in our conference," Coach Dick Scott said. "We have to beat them to have a shot at the conference title."

UM is 4-1 in conference play while Portland State is 4-0. The regular season champion will host the conference tournament next Friday and Saturday.

"We've been playing with much more consistency in the last few matches than we had been earlier in the season," Scott said of the team's recent five-game win streak. "We have to maintain that consistency if we're going to do well this week."

UM is 22-12 on the season and has already tied the school record for wins.

• The women's swimming team has the week off after opening the season with a fourth place finish in the Idaho Relays.

The 200-meter relay team of Tracy McLean, Beth Henkelman, Kim Shaw and Edie Van Buskirk set a new meet record with a time of 1:43.42 that was only .42 seconds away from the national qualifying time.

"I was very pleased with our performance this weekend since it was our first meet of the season," Coach Doug Brenner said. "We're still a little rusty because we haven't competed, so I expect us to improve as the season goes along."

The next meet is the Great Falls Invitational next Saturday and Sunday.

NOW to solicit support for ERA

Members of the National Organization for Women will be conducting a "message brigade" across campus between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. today and Monday to support their efforts to pass the Equal Rights Amendment nationwide.

Caroline Hartse, sophomore in anthropology and a worker for Missoula's message brigade, said workers dressed in NOW's green and white colors will be asking for $2 donations. Contributors' names then will be put on a computer mailing list.

Hartse explained that these people then will each receive five pre-written letters, called "action alert messages," addressed to legislators in states that have not yet ratified ERA. People will sign the letters and have a chance to add their own feelings to each letter before sending it to the target legislator.

Hartse said the message brigade is saving people time and trouble in voicing their opinion on ERA.

"We're doing the footwork," Hartse explained. "How many people take the time to write their legislators?"

"We do this so people don't have to say, 'Who do we write to?'"

Montana, Curry said.

A synopsis of the study said high particulate pollution levels lessen the breathing ability of normal school children, and adults with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, including emphysema, bronchitis and asthma. High levels of some air pollutants could possibly decrease the growth of lung tissue in children, it said, or destroy lung tissue at any age. "These changes," it said, "would be chronic and partially irreversible."

Fine respirable particulates are more apt to reach the lung than coarse ones, which are trapped by cilia in the nose during normal breathing, according to the synopsis. It also said the effect of air pollution on the lungs may be cumulative and a "function of both dose and time."

Clean air can be brought about by education and constant conditioning, Jim Ball, director of Leisure Services, said. It is an individual effort, he said.

In an interview last week, Ball said it is "our responsibility to make people aware" of the pollution problem and possible dangers of exercising when there are high particulate counts. Leisure Services will begin posting signs on campus indicating the daily particulate level by Monday, Ball said.

Mary Dussault, state legislator, D-Missoula, David Feffer, Missoula City/County Health Officer, and Steffel.

The reason that air pollution has got worse and that local government must be given more policy-making power, the speakers said, is that air pollution has switched from being caused mostly by industry to being caused by individuals. During the winter, residential woodsmoke contributes over 50 percent of the total suspended particulates in the air.

Most residential woodsmoke particulates are smaller than those particles from industrial waste, Steffel said. Because the particles are smaller, he said, the danger to human health is increased because smaller particles can be breathed in more easily than larger particles. Once inhaled, smaller particles stay lodged inside the lungs, he said.

Many students drive cars on high particulate days because they are warned not to jog or ride bikes, Ball said. Although automobile emissions are a small part of the pollution problem compared to wood smoke, Ball suggested that students carpool or use public transportation.

steering committee is obligated to strive for that fee system.

The other reason, Anderson said, is that the refundable system will create less paperwork when it comes to giving money back to students.

But according to Anderson, the steering committee had been considering the waiveable fee system since last spring and does not want to appear inflexible on this matter. "We want to set this (MontPIRG) up in the most equitable way as we can," Anderson said.

MontPIRG is trying to gain more support before the Dec. 11 regents meeting. Tanya Holonko, a senior in biology and a member of the steering committee, said about 50 people have attended organizational meetings this fall. She added that from this group, committees have been set up with the intent of reaching more faculty members and students.

MontPIRG has the endorsements of Central Board, the University Teachers Union, the Executive Committee of the Faculty Senate and has gained strong support from the Staff Senate.

Holonko said that the steering committee is meeting regularly with UM President Neil Bucklew and is hopeful of gaining his support.

The special session: what will it solve?

By Greg Gadberry
Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA—The kid in the wheelchair clearly didn't want to be here. He fidgeted, stared off into space; he tugged at his mother's sleeve.

Every now and then, one of the legislators who sat at the long table across from the little boy would wink or smile at him. The kid would sit up straight for a minute and smile back. Then, he'd grow restless and start to fidget again.

Regardless of whether he knew it, the kid was here on a mission. He was here, sitting before one of three special subcommittees of the Montana Legislature, because his parents were afraid. Just like the parents of the other handicapped children sitting in the conference room.

The parents came to beg for money. They feared that programs for handicapped children were being sliced away by the massive budget tax of the federal government. These parents had come, and brought their kids, to show Montana legislators that budget cuts meant more to them than numbers on a ledger. They wanted the legislators to know just how scared they were.

It seemed a strange scene for a budget hearing. But scenes like this have happened for almost two weeks, ever since members of the House Appropriations and Senate Finance and Claims committees met to work out how the state would handle almost $70 million in budget cuts over the next two years.

It probably seemed stranger still to many legislators, who, when they had envisioned a special session early this spring, probably hadn't planned on mending a tattered budget. And they probably also hadn't planned on watching parents beg for money for their handicapped or hungry kids.

The Legislature last met in special session in 1975. They met for single day, in order to change state tax laws and to give the Montana University System enough money to operate.

When the state Legislature and the governor first started talking about a special session this year, they probably expected it to be as short as the previous one.

Because when this winter's Legislature considered a special session, they weren't talking about the cuts . . . they were talking grants. More precisely, block grants.

Early this year state officials began to get wind of a new federal program, which would offer states new ways in which to spend federal money. These block grants would free the states to use federal money in ways they had not seen before.

But during the last session, budget cutting was just starting at the federal level. No one knew when these block grants would come. Legislators feared these grants might be offered to the state while the Legislature was out of session. So into the states' major appropriations bill, the Legislature entered a clause: the governor could not allocate block grant money to the state government without the Legislature meeting to talk it over.

And that's what happened. During the summer, it became apparent that the block grants were on the way. Gov. Ted Schwinden called for a session starting Nov. 16.

Schwinden said the session should be tightly controlled, however, so that while adding these grants to the state's coffers no one could mess with the state's budgeted funds. So early on, legislators and the public figured block grants were the major reason for sending legislators back to Helena this fall.

But during the summer, the state of Montana learned what Reaganomics were all about. They discovered that along with the grants, the state would receive close to $70 million in federal cuts as well. From there the issues have grown.

Starting Monday the Montana Legislature will have to deal with more than simple block grants. It will be faced with a massive federal budget cut. At the same time, the Republican-controlled Legislature will have to deal with a $25 million plan created by a Democratic governor to deal with budget cuts created by a Republican president.

So what will happen Monday? No one will say for sure. Chances are Schwinden's plan for salvaging the state budget will face a major overhaul by the Republican majority. Some Capital watchers think that the Republicans may offer a brand-new plan for dealing with both the cuts and the block grants. Others claim that the Republican majority may decide simply to accept federal block grants, close the session and go home.

So where does this leave the parents of the handicapped kids? Apparently it leaves them in an economic limbo, which the state Legislature may or may not solve.

Governor's budget draws GOP fire

By Greg Gadberry
Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA — With the state having to face about $70 million in federal budget cuts over the next two years, a lot of state agencies are preparing to bite the financial bullet. But some won't have to bite as hard.

Under a proposal announced last week by Gov. Ted Schwinden, the state would use about $25 million to help several agencies face the federal financial crunch.

Along with that budget plan, the governor has also proposed an increase in the state's gasoline tax and diesel fuel tax to help the financially assaulted highway department.

As expected, both of these proposals have come under considerable fire from Republican leaders, who will probably lead the fight against them.

The $25 million plan would require tapping a number of financial sources.

The funds would come from a $15.9 million appropriation from the general fund and from a $9.1 million accrual account already established by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services.

This accrual is made up of money that was set aside by SRS to pay bills between fiscal years. For example, if an agency contracted a service during one fiscal year but expected to pay for the service later on, this could be set aside in an accrual account. SRS, through budget tightening, has managed to pay its bills without touching its accrual account. Now, SRS wants permission to use the money for something else.

Under the Schwinden plan this $25 million would be spread among a small number of agencies.

SRS will get the biggest chunk — about $21.9 million — to help make up an expected $31.8 million cutback in federal funds. See related story p. 11.)

About $16 million will be spent in the following manner. About $7 million would be used to make up cuts in services such as Medicaid. About $9 million would be given to county welfare programs to help them serve the estimated 1,700 families per month that will be dropped from state welfare rolls because of federal cutbacks. The Office of Public Instruction would receive about $2.6 million of the $25 million appropriation. That money would help the office make up a $5.7 million in federal cuts in programs such as the school lunch, vocational training and handicapped students' programs.

The remaining money from the $25 million appropriation would be split between the Crime Control Board, the state Department of Agriculture, the state Department of Health and Environmental Sciences, the state Department of Justice and the Legislature.

Already, Republican legislators in pre-session subcommittees have blasted several of the governor's budget proposals. GOP legislators are recommending that the $5 million SRS contingency fund and the $9 million county welfare program be axed.

Schwinden's other major funding proposal — the so-called nickel-per-gallon gasoline tax — is also drawing fire from state legislators.

Under this proposal, the state would increase the tax on a gallon of gasoline by five cents. The tax on a gallon of diesel fuel would rise by six cents per gallon.

Schwinden claims the tax would raise about $40 million. This money would go to the Department of Highways, which faces at least $26 million in federal budget cuts over the next two years.

Block grants—latitude or financial headache?

By Greg Gadberry
Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA — When legislators sit down to start dickering Monday morning, one of the major things they will talk about is the new way the Reagan government plans to giftwrap its money. In other words, they will talk about the eight federal block grants that Montana state agencies want to receive.

One of the main reasons Gov. Ted Schwinden called the special legislative session is to discuss these grants and to allow the state agencies to juggle their budgets so they can receive them.

What's a block grant?

Basically, it is a sum of money offered to state and local governments that can be used to fund government programs. These grants come with few rules or regulations attached.

While block grants are nothing new, most federal dollars come in the form of categorical grants — cat grants for short — which are awarded for specific programs and with very specific rules attached.

Block grants, however, allow states more latitude in the way they spend federal money.

A block grant could be awarded, for example, for "community services." Such a grant could fund anything from health centers to welfare programs. It would be up to the states to decide what programs deserve the money.

Sounds simple, right?
Well, maybe.

Financial headaches

Accepting federal block grants can lead to financial headaches.

First, states that want block grants must apply for them, usually a month before the beginning of each quarter of a fiscal year. If a state does not apply for a grant until late in a year, it only receives money for the upcoming quarters.

While the federal government claims that block grants give states less funding hassles, these grants may also bring in less funds as well.

For example, one major block grant — which provides money for social services — offers the state about $7.4 million less than the state expected to receive from social service cat grants.

Montana expects to receive eight federal block grants this year. They are:

- The Small Cities Community Development Block Grant. This grant was initiated in 1977 by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. The money can be used for park and street construction and rehabilitation of substandard housing. The block grant is made up of funds formerly given to the state through cat grants.

In fiscal year 1982, this grant will provide $4.7 million and in federal year 1983, $6.3 million.

- The Maternal and Child Health Block Grant. A combination of old cat grant programs, this new block grant would be administered by the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences. Programs that can be funded under this grant include a crippled children's health program and a diagnosis fund for mothers and small children. The department expects to receive about $1.4 million in both fiscal year 1982 and 1983.

- The Primary Care Block Grant. This is a new grant, which the state will receive beginning in fiscal year 1983. The funds would help community health centers. The grant will provide about $66,000 in fiscal year 1983.

- The Preventive Health Service Block Grant. Another new block grant created by pulling together cat grant funds, this money will be administered by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services. The money will fund programs for health education, hypertension control, fluoridation, education for diabetics and training of emergency medical technicians. This grant should provide about $774,000 during fiscal year 1982 and $992,000 during fiscal year 1983.

- The Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Block Grant. This is one of the most wide-ranging of the eight block grants, giving funds for programs such as community alcoholism treatment and mental health centers. The grant will provide about $1 million in fiscal year 1982 and about $2.1 million in fiscal year 1983.

- The Low Income Energy Assistance Block Grant. Run by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, this grant will pay heating bills for many needy Montanans households. The grant will provide anywhere from $10.3 million to $13.7 million for both fiscal years 1982 and 1983. Ten percent of this grant can be transferred to fund other social services.

- Community Services Block Grant. This would be used to fund a number of poverty programs including many of those implemented by local Human Resource Development Councils. The grant will provide about $1.4 million for both fiscal years 1982 and 1983.

- The Social Services Block Grant. This may be the most important block grant received this year as it funds a wide range of social and welfare services. This money had formerly come in cat grants and was known as Title XX funds. The state had expected to receive about $21 million this year in Title XX money. But when the federal government switched to a block grant system for these funds, it cut them back by $5.1 million.

On top of that, the state would have to make up a $2 million loss for fiscal year 1982. This loss comes because of the difference in the federal and state fiscal years.

The two fiscal years are a quarter different, that is, the federal government will have given out one quarter's worth of money before the state is ready to receive it. Thus the state will have to make up that money in 1982.

The Social Services Block Grant will cost the state about $7.4 million.

Schwinden is asking the Legislature for $5.1 million to help make up this loss. (See related story page 00).

Agencies facing budget ax must dance the estimate song

By Greg Gadberry
Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA—It's no secret that the state of Montana will lose a lot of federal dollars over the next two years. The question is how many?

Right now, analysts from the governor's budget office and the office of the Legislative Fiscal Analyst estimate that Montana will lose roughly $70 million in federal funds over the next two years. But analysts admit this estimate can change at any time.

So how did they arrive at such a figure?

Since Congress started wielding its budget ax this year, state offices and agencies have been adding up cuts they expect to receive. Estimates change as new information comes in. But since federal dollars don't only come in lump sums, the estimations become complicated.

Some agencies — like the Environmental Quality Council, for example — don't figure to lose any federal dollars.

Others — like the university system — get federal money from special grants, such as those for research. University system officials say it is difficult to judge how these special grants will be affected.

And some agencies, such as the departments of Administration, Agriculture, and Commerce plan for cuts ranging from a couple of thousand to a couple million dollars.

On a few agencies, however, the budget hammer is expected to come down hard. These are:

- The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services.

Of all state agencies, SRS figures it has the most to lose this biennium. SRS estimates place federal cuts at close to $31.8 million. These cuts could affect a variety of SRS services such as Medicaid, food stamps, care for the developmentally disabled and Air to Families with Dependent Children.

Some of the cuts come as the federal government tightens eligibility for Medicaid and AFDC programs. About $10 million comes because of a switch to block grants. (See related story p. 10).

- The Department of Highways.

The folks who pave our roads are facing an estimated $26 million in federal cuts over the next two years.

The agency is proposing to cut out about 200 full-time positions to make up for the cuts. Gov. Ted Schwinden also has proposed an increase in state gasoline and diesel oil taxes. (See related story p. 9).

- The Office of Public Instruction.

This office, responsible for everything from teacher accreditation to school lunch programs, faces an estimated $5.7 million cut.

Programs affected will include vocational education, school lunches and administration.

- The Department of Labor and Industry.

The departments' employment security division, which runs job service and unemployment insurance programs, faces about $3.5 million in federal cuts. To deal with them, the agency is proposing to ax about 150 to 200 full-time positions.

Each state agency has outlined its new budget plans in the Amended Montana Executive Budget, a 218-page outline compiled by the governor's budget office. In this budget document, the governor outlines his proposals to deal with budget problems.

For some agencies, Schwinden proposes to fill in budget gaps with state money. (See related story p. 9.)

For others, cutting personnel will do the trick. Under the governor's budget plan, almost every state agency will try to trim back its number of employees. Under the budget proposal, almost 880 full-time job positions would be eliminated over the next two years.

Budget amendments are another way agencies hope to cope with federal cuts. The budget proposal states that almost every agency receiving cuts is asking permission to juggle funds to cover holes left as a result of cutbacks.

Finally, some agencies will see direct cuts in programs — such as the tightening of eligibility in Medicaid — as a result of budget cuts.

But the best laid plans of the governor and of state agencies may all change next week as the Legislature begins to scrutinize the amended budget proposal.

The governor's $25 million plan to aid agencies with state funds already faces stiff opposition. (See related story p. 9.)

Other plans for amending agency budgets may also come under legislative fire.

What's worse, Washington may deal out yet another hand of budget cuts after the special session is over. In that case state agencies can only hope to stretch their dollars enough to make up for lost money or face cutbacks in staff and programs.

Schedule controversial

HELENA (AP) — Democratic legislative leaders said yesterday they are concerned an accelerated schedule for the upcoming special session will not allow sufficient public participation in hearings on state budget changes.

Senate Minority Leader Chet Blaylock, D-Laurel, and House Minority Leader Dan Kemmis, D-Missoula, said they had doubts that scheduling final committee action on amendments to the state appropriation bill for Tuesday will give the public much time to comment.

But Rep. Gene Donaldson, R-Helena, who heads the House Appropriations Committee, said the Legislature will be operating under tight time limits.

"In all honesty, the public has had a greater opportunity to participate than ever before," he said.

Rep. Harrison Fagg, R-Billings and House Minority Leader, said the past two weeks of hearings have permitted "an incredible amount of public input." Legislation will contain nothing that has not been discussed in the hearings, he added.

Azzara claims proof for two college degrees

By C. L. Gilbert
Kaimin News Editor

Rep. Jim Azzara, D-Missoula, claims he now has proof that will clear up some of the questions raised last spring about his academic credentials and he will take that proof to the special legislative session in Helena Monday.

The questions were raised after The Great Falls Tribune was unable to confirm that Azzara had received any of the college degrees he claimed he had earned. The degrees were listed in a booklet titled Lawmakers of Montana. The booklet, which gives biographical information about all state legislators, stated Azzara received bachelor's degrees in philosophy and political science from Rutgers University in New Jersey in 1970, as well as a master's degree in philosophy from Rutgers in 1972 and a diploma from the Julliard School of Music in New York in 1973.

Silence to protect co-workers

Azzara said he completed the school work under a fictitious name because he was involved in various anti-war activities in the early 1970s and so could not use his real name. If he revealed the name he used and the details surrounding the anti-war activities, he said there may be legal problems for him and for people he worked with then.

Azzara admitted the anti-war activities included destruction of federal property and "juggling of records." He described them as "an effort to thwart what I saw as terrorist behavior on the part of the U.S. government."

In an interview this week, Azzara said he now has proof that he did complete all the course work for the two bachelor's degrees at Rutgers. Though he would not permit anyone from the press to see it, he said he would take the proof to Helena and would show it to any of his fellow legislators who wanted proof.

The proof, he said, consists of notarized transcripts from Rutgers and affidavits from faculty members stating that he did complete the work.

Azzara said, however, that he does not have proof that he completed the course work for the master's degree or the diploma from Julliard. "They (Rutgers and Julliard) are very pissed at me," he said. "I'm going to have to reveal information to them they didn't know."

In May Azzara withdrew claims to all his college work though he still maintains he did complete all of it.

Economic hardship

Withdrawing the academic claims has caused him some economic hardship, he said. Azzara makes his living as a piano teacher, and he said that since he no longer advertises as a Julliard graduate, business has fallen off.

The controversy over Azzara's degrees arose after the legislative session this spring and so was not a factor during the lawmaking process then. With a special legislative session starting Monday, Azzara said he is not sure whether the problem will be an issue. He said he has the support of his constituency in Missoula, and said he received many letters of support when the problem surfaced in May.

Legislative support evident

He also said he has the support of many other legislators at the capital. "I've been advised by several leaders of the House to go up there and go about my business," he said. "If my creditability is at stake I'll hear about it."

House Majority Leader Harrison Fagg, R-Billings, said he would not bring the issue up at the session. "He (Azzara) is sincere, articulate and bright. He does a fine job as a legislator," he said. "I don't think mistakes in the past should be carried over in the future. Everyone has a ghost in his closet."

Speaker of the House Robert Marks, R-Clancy, was more cautious. "His credibility could become an issue," he said. "It's certainly not going to help his image. I would think a person would try to clear up a problem like that if possible. These kind of things come home to roost."

Marks said he would not ask Azzara to leave the Legislature because of the problem. "I believe in our system better than that," he said.

Minority leader Dan Kemmis, D-Missoula, would not comment on the situation other than to say he didn't feel the issue would be a liability to Democrats in the House.

Withholding information painful

The real problem, according to Azzara, is not his academic credentials but the fact that he has to withhold information from the public to protect himself and others. "If it was just a question of my falsifying academic claims, it would have been over long ago," he said.

If he revealed some of the information, Azzara said he could possibly be subject to an extension of the statute of limitations for charges in the case. The statute of limitations provides that charges in a case can be held for a certain length of time and then will be dropped. University of Montana law professor William Crowley said the statute of limitations runs out in five years in most felonies except homicide, in which it never runs out.

'No good would come of it'

"I have indications nobody would bother with it," Azzara said. "It's a fifty-fifty chance. It's fairly old, but if it was brought up, it would have to be run through the legal process and other people might have their professional standing called into question. No good would come of it for me or others."

Azzara is troubled by the controversy. "It's been very traumatic," he said. "I've been shaken personally. I've made errors. I was a complete asshole to list credentials after 1971. I regret having done that. I'm culpable of a technicality, but I haven't made up a body of work."

Azzara said he has to decide how much of the problem he can clear up and that "will depend on my political ambitions."

Bucklew is an interested observer

By Doug O'Harra
Kaimin News Editor

If the Montana Legislature begins discussing the approximately $225 million university system budget, and subsequently the University of Montana budget, UM President Neil Bucklew said he'll "be over there quickly."

But Bucklew, who attended last Monday's hearing on university system finances held before a joint legislative subcommittee, said he doesn't think that will happen.

"I don't believe that the idea of redoing the budget is seriously being considered by anyone," Bucklew said yesterday.

No adjustments or changes in the U-system budget were asked for at the hearing, Bucklew said, because the cuts the special session was called to discuss do not directly effect the U-system.

Bucklew, who said he has met about 50 legislators since becoming president of UM last summer, plans to attend the session Monday. While there, Bucklew said he also will address the Helena Kiwanis Club.

"My role (at the Legislature Monday) will be strictly as an interested observer," Bucklew said.

But while the cuts being addressed this session do not affect the U-system directly, Bucklew said, proposed cuts in various federal program eventually will affect UM by reducing the amount of federal money available for research, sponsored programs and student financial aid.

But, because UM competes with other universities and agencies for federal grants supporting research and other programs, Bucklew said the reduction in funds available only means the competition will be tougher, and UM will not necessarily receive less federal money.

"You can't guess how it will turn out," he said.

On the other hand, Bucklew said it is clear that less federal money will be available for student financial aid. That means the 1983 Montana Legislature is going to have to "reassess" its commitment to "financial aid support for students and their families."

ASUM legislative group intends to keep ears open

By Karen McGrath
Kaimin Reporter

The ASUM Legislative Committee has decided not to hire a student lobbyist for the Montana legislature's special session because university funding is not under attack, committee chairman Jeanne-Marie Souvigney said yesterday.

However, Souvigney added, the committee is in contact with Jack Noble, deputy commissioner for financial affairs for the Montana University System, and Dan Kemmis, a Democratic representative from Missoula, in case anything concerning the university does come before the Legislature.

Committee member Ruth Sjelvik attended a meeting last Monday in Helena in which Irving Dayton, acting commissioner of higher education, along with a group of college and university presidents, briefed a joint legislature subcommittee on university system finances.

UM's enrollment decreases

Though the University of Montana's enrollment decreased slightly for the 1981-82 year, Montana State University's enrollment had an unexpected increase of 442 students, and the session could be opened up to deal with any funding problems.

Souvigney also said that ASUM President Steve Spaulding is in contact with several legislators. "We are keeping our ears open," she said.

Spaulding said that he is working with Kemmis, Democratic Rep. Steve Waldron and Sen. William Norman, whose districts covers the UM area.

"I don't think we need a lobbyist over there," Spaulding said. "They're just dealing with block grants that won't affect the university system at all."

This is the first year that the committee has existed in a non-legislative year. "We decided that it was just too frantic to meet only in legislative years," she said. "We're going to meet every year from now on."

The committee was allocated over $11,000 for the 1980-81 legislative year to pay for two ASUM legislative lobbyists. The committee was not allocated any money for the 1981-82 year, but is operating on a $3,269 surplus left over from 1980-81 expenses.

Committee members, along with Souvigney Sjelvik are Mike McAndrews, Mike Copeland, Dan O'Fallon and Dorothy Simpson.

"It's a good opportunity to get involved in politics on any level, city, county and state," Souvigney said. "People get out of it what they put into it."

City legislators cautious about session

While three of Missoula's legislators seem to think that the special legislative session, to begin Monday, won't be opened up to more than block grants, Representative Ann Mary Dussault said that, "in reality, it appears that the governor has already opened up the entire appropriations bill" to discussion. In an interview yesterday, the Missoula Democrat said that the discussions by legislators will be broader than just the block grants and will include anything in the appropriations bill.

But, she added, to deal with any other topics, such as the proposed gasoline and diesel tax, requires a two-thirds vote of the Legislature in order to be brought onto the floor for discussion, and she said that that process is "very difficult."

Democratic Sen. Bill Norman, said yesterday that the Legislature will be considering only the block grants and perhaps some codes in the Montana statutes relating to the eligibility of applicants for social programs. He added that, once the Legislature is in session, the "scope of the call," those areas which the governor proposes for discussion, cannot be narrowed, only broadened.

Norman said that Gov. Ted Schwinden is considering "two or three things" other than block grants, among them the governor's proposed five-cent-per-gallon tax on gasoline and the 55-mile-per-hour speed limit.

Not enough time

Mike Halligan, Missoula's freshman Democratic senator, believes that the session should not be opened to other topics because there isn't enough time now for citizens, lobbyists and the legislators to adequately prepare for discussion in areas other than block grants. The deliberations must be "methodic and pragmatic" in order to be the most beneficial.

Republican Budd Gould said he doesn't think the session should be opened up because "it might be hard to control" if other issues are introduced.

Both Halligan and Gould agree that the budget cuts proposed by Schwinden are fair, especially in their attempts to reduce state bureaucracy.

However, "I don't know a legislator who will go home and feel good about (the budget cuts)," Norman said.

Precursor of annual sessions?

When asked if this special session is laying the groundwork for annual legislative sessions, neither Norman, Halligan nor Dussault thinks that it will directly lead to annual sessions, but, as Dussault said, it could "be setting up a structure that would be used if we go to annual sessions." However, both Norman and Halligan said that, if the special session functions responsibly and frugally, the public would be more apt to approve the proposed constitutional amendment for annual sessions, to be voted on during the 1982 general elections.

Gould, on the other hand, said that annual sessions to deal with budgeting probably are inevitable. However, he said he had "mixed feelings" about that because of the added expense to the taxpayer. Budgeting, now done every two years, requires an "astronomical" amount of man hours to complete, he said. New budget procedures involving block grants now will require annual budgeting, he said, which will double the amount of time — and money — spent by the state.

IT'S ABOUT TIME.

Your time. That's what it takes to help others through Peace Corps. To pass along skilled trades like carpentry or welding. To demonstrate better methods of farming or family planning. To work on schools and irrigation systems. A year or two can make a world of difference. Don't you think it's about time you called?
