Legislature misses self-imposed deadline

By Greg Gadberry
Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA — They almost ended the Montana legislators' special session last night. Almost ... but not quite.

After hours of political caucuses and drawn-out debates, the House and Senate had still not agreed on terms for passing new tax penalty and county welfare relief proposals. And the House has yet to tackle amendments to the massive legislative appropriations bill.

Early yesterday morning, legislators, reporters and other capital workers were trading bets and predictions on whether the session would end by afternoon.

But as a light snow began to sink slowly onto the capital city at about 11 a.m., expectations for a Monday adjournment began to sink as well.

In the House, much of the early debate was over a controversial bill offered by Rep. Paul Pistoria, D-Great Falls. The bill would have the state shovel more than $20 million of its coal severance fund into the state highway system.

The bill was designed to provide construction funds for the Highway Department, which faces about $26 million in federal budget cuts.

Neither party had a clear position on the bill, so both the Democratic and Republican caucuses disagreed over it.

Leading Democrats, such as Rep. Dan Kemmis, D-Missoula, and Rep. Francis Bardanoue, D-Harlem, damned the proposal, insisting that the coal severance funds should be saved for future fiscal emergencies.

Republicans like Rep. Ken Nordtvedt, R-Bozeman, and Rep. Robert Sivertsen, R-Havre, defended the bill, claiming that coal severance money had to be invested.

After hours of debate, the House voted the issue down.

In the Senate, legislators debated the merits of two different bills — both of which were designed to help Montana counties meet the expected financial crunch on their welfare systems.

The first bill, proposed by Rep. Kathleen McBride, D-Butte, would offer fiscal aid to county welfare systems only after those counties had levied at least eight mills in taxes for their country poor funds.

Each county that accepted the aid offer would be required to start a "workfare" program in which welfare recipients would trade their labor in exchange for county money.

The proposal, supported by House Democrats, had squeaked by in a close House vote earlier in the session. The plan would cost the state about $1.9 million.

The second proposal, a bill by Sen. Pat Regan, D-Billings, would help the counties by paying 50 percent of county welfare costs. The proposal also required counties to establish workfare programs. The Regan proposal would cost the state anywhere from $2.3 million to about $5 million.

After battling over the Regan proposal, the Senate voted to send it to the House for consideration, leaving the McBride bill to die in a Senate committee.

The House is expected to take action on the Regan bill today, and neither Democratic nor Republican legislators are predicting how the bill will be received.

But if House members are silent on the way the welfare proposal will be treated, they made no secret of their displeasure over amendments made by the Senate on a proposed change in the state's income tax law.

The proposal, made by Rep. Jay Fabrega, R-Great Falls, would

Central Board slashed funding for UM debate team—now it's 'dying a slow death'

By Pam Newbern
Kaimin Reporter

The University of Montana Debate and Oratory Forensics Team will not hold the annual Big Sky Speech and Debate Tournament this February.

It doesn't have enough people to come to the tournament, from other schools or from UM.

The lack of people is due to a lack of money, according to Jim Polsin, associate professor of interpersonal communications and faculty advisor to the debate team.

There are four active members on the team and two freshmen who have not yet competed. Last year, nine people were on the team.

Polsin said he did not know how much funding the speech team would get this year until August, when the UM administration donated $3,000 to the team.

"By the time I found out how much funding the team was going to have, I was already scheduled to teach a full course load," Polsin said. "It was too late to submit applications for entrance in some tournaments."

Total funding for the debate team this year totals $3,200. That includes the $3,000 grant from the administration and $200 from ASUM. Last year ASUM allocated $4,000 to the team.

"Funding isn't a problem for the Big Sky Tournament itself," Polsin said. "That almost pays for itself. The problem is that we don't have the funds to make trips to other speech tournaments. No one comes to your tournament if you don't go to theirs."

The debate team is scheduled to attend only two speech tournaments this year. In 1975, it took part in 11.

"The debate team is dying a slow death," said Jean Strobe, junior in English and a member of the team. "We're having recruitment problems. It's hard to convince people to do things on the team when you only have two tournaments. We're not attrac-

First snow may allow two ski resorts to open

Missoula got its first dusting of the year yesterday, as snow fell on the city and surrounding areas.

Snow showers and cooler temperatures are expected to continue through today and tomorrow, and travelers and hunters' advisories have been posted in all mountains and passes in the area.

High today 38, low tonight 28.

The airport reported an inch of snow yesterday, and several flights to Missoula had to land at other airports because of poor visibility over the city.

Two area ski resorts, Discovery Basin in Anaconda and Big Mountain in Whitefish, accumulated up to two feet of snow yesterday and will be open this weekend if conditions persist.

Snow Bowl will not be open for Thanksgiving, but reported four to 12 inches of snow yesterday, and Marshall Ski Area, which will not open until mid-December, reported about an inch of snow.

ASUM accountant Czorny resigns so he can concentrate on graduating

By Karen McGrath
Kaimin Reporter

ASUM accountant Andrew Czorny, senior in finance, resigned his position with ASUM last Thursday, saying he wishes to concentrate on school so he can graduate this spring. His resignation is effective Jan. 1.

"Originally, I committed myself for two years for my term," Czorny said. "I've been real lazy the last few quarters because I haven't been enrolled."

Czorny, 25, who was selected as the ASUM accountant in April 1979, was then the only applicant for the job who promised to stay at least two years.

He said the beginning of his ASUM term was exciting, but the rest turned out to be "bittersweet."

"I've been caught in a weird position here," he said. "I've been caught in the middle of the faculty, the students and the administration. The people that came in (to office) with me aren't here any more. There's always people coming in with different ideas. It makes it a little tough."

Steve Spaulding, ASUM president, said that Czorny has been a good accountant. "We appreciate him notifying us way in advance so we can prepare for hiring a new accountant," he said.

ASUM Vice President Eric Johnson said he understood Czorny's school priorities. "His presence will be missed by many," he said.

ASUM Business Manager Carl Burgdorfer said Czorny's resignation would not hurt the ASUM administration, but that it would make the financial workload more difficult for Burgdorfer to handle.

As ASUM accountant, Czorny is an employee of the state. State employees are paid through a grade system. The system moves employees up the grade depending on seniority and the amount of people working under the employee. Czorny is a Grade 11 employee, making about $15,000 a year.

Czorny said working for the state carries its own problems.

"It doesn't seem like you're working with any people for goals or the light at the end of the tunnel," he said. "A lot of times, that light is an oncoming train."

Working for the state often leads to concentration on moving up the state grade system, and not on the state or the university, he said.

Czorny said he hopes to work for an investment brokerage firm in San Diego after graduation. He added that he hopes to eventually be a certified public accountant and continue work in a masters' degree program in California.

The new ASUM accountant will be interviewed by a selection committee consisting of the ASUM officers, a member of the Budget and Finance Committee and the university controller. ASUM secretary Brenda Perry and receptionist Carole Henegar also will have input on the selection committee because the accountant is their direct supervisor.

Applications for the positions are not available yet, but will be soon.

ANDREW CZORNY waves goodbye.

There's so much to be thankful for

More than three hundred years ago, the pilgrims sat down to several tables of meager offerings to give thanks for their successes during the past year.

Facing the hardships of harsh weather and climate, limited crop successes and no luxuries, the pilgrims were lucky to be alive and had much to be thankful for.

Now on the eve of another Thanksgiving, we should reassess our social and political surroundings and also give thanks. Pause and contemplate for a few minutes, we have:

- a government that won't let the commies push us around anymore.
- "loose talking" officials to enhance the credibility of the government in the eyes of the public.
- a new philosophy that best determines the way our environment can be put to use for us.
- a government that can operate just as efficiently when it is out of business as it can when it's business as usual. Apparently we should be thankful that there is little discernible difference.
- a progressive view of human rights in the world.
- a government official who can keep accurate time on not one but two watches.
- a CIA director who will never have to worry about having enough money to tip at Sardi's.
- organizations that willingly lift the burden of deciding what television programs to watch and what books to read from us.
- a growing interest in the welfare of our senior citizens.
- a secretary of state who has adopted an effective and intelligent philosophy of using limited nuclear warfare to show others we mean business.
- a president who can still remember his days as a working union man.
- a first lady who believes our policy toward China should extend to the White House dinner table.

Most of all, during this time of reflection, we should give thanks for our sanity.

Send Champion back to Japan

Editor: Well, as of Nov. 11, I guess Clean Air Week was working; it was a sunny day at least. But, just as Scott Church said that "he had nothing to do with setting up the air conditions that prompted Stage One Alert," maybe the holding of Clean Air Week had nothing to do with yesterday's sunshine working its way through the smog.

Clean Air Week should turn into Clean Air Year with media bombardment at the community — don't let the folks forget that they should drive less and walk, ride their bikes or take the buses more. That'll help out.

As for wood burning, let's see what happens in the middle of January when it sometimes gets below zero, ooh. And what about Champion International's three plants in the area, two in the valley and one at the mouth of a canyon. They pump out the pollutants, come on.

Listen, I still point up and down the valley and say, "They're doing lots of polluting."

Why aren't the professionals taking a stand against Champion's pollution? Of course this monopoly is our main industry. Well, I think it's about time the city try to lure in some clean industry to the Missoula valley. Maybe then we can send Champion back to Japan.

Realize the inadequacies

Editor: When it was recently announced by state agriculture officials that a Pesticide Advisory Council was going to be set up to study the use of pesticides in Montana I was overjoyed. The indiscriminate use of pesticides by the Montana Agricultural Industry was recently brought into the spotlight by the endrin issue. A panel to study the use of endrin and other toxic substances on Montana farmlands is a welcome idea that is long overdue.

However, upon hearing the choices for the members of the Advisory Council, my hopes for more environmentally sound agricultural practices in Montana were shattered. The twelve member council is composed of fine and outstanding citizens I'm sure, but they certainly do not adequately represent all the interests involved in pesticide application problems. Pesticides are extremely complex substances and the secondary and tertiary effects of pesticides like endrin are not well understood even by experts. These issues require the expertise of professionals to be properly analyzed.

How does State Agriculture Director Gordon McOmber justify his choices? The Wildlife problems are being represented by an attorney, an optometrist and an insurance salesman. I also question the qualifications of the three panel members representing the health aspect. Agriculture and the pesticides manufacturing industry are indeed well represented. How about a biochemist, an ecologist, a wildlife expert or an entomologist? I realize that the role of the council is strictly advisory, but this is an important issue to all of us. We must take a very serious and complete look at the problem in order to insure a healthy environment in which to live. My only hope for the council is that they realize their own inadequacies and hold public hearings so that some professional advice can be offered.

Act peacefully

Editor: I'm writing this letter in response to a call for talk and action at the Nov. 11 nuclear convocation in the UC Mall.

A speaker named John Smith presented an idea which not only has meaning of itself, but appears to be the only real hope in building up the majority of this country's population against nuclear weapons. Mr. Smith simply spoke of peace; what it is, why it is important to discuss it, and why we need to think positively about peace rather than negatively about destruction.

No, this isn't a letter from John Smith's public relations man, but it is my plea to all of you reading this to think peacefully, to act peacefully.

As with many things, there are two sides to the nuclear weapons controversy. There needn't be. As an example, a gentleman was talking at the forum of the need for nuclear weapons as a deterrent to world-wide Soviet domination, and short of being harassed, the gentleman's opinions were challenged by the majority of people in attendance, most of whom appear to be on the other side of the fence (anti-weapons). When a majority of people believe in something, and are willing to work and sacrifice for it, then why bother trying to change one man's mind? The challenge should be addressed to the other "group," and with the nuclear controversy, to those in power. When a majority stand united, they cannot be defeated.

I would wager that there are a majority of students on this campus who are opposed to nuclear weapons. That majority must organize itself now, before it is too late. A level of activism is entirely up to you. A letter to an editor, an letter to a senator, a signature on a petition to stop the bombs, all make a difference. Voice your opinion, but don't necessarily fight the opposition, for they are as stubborn and as sure of their beliefs as you are. But when the majority of people in this nation are truly organized, and let those in power know that they will not stand for nuclear weapons, then the "other side," and the problem itself, will be extinguished peacefully.

Let us paint

Editor: Re: "Dorm dwellers want painting rights," (Kaimin, Nov. 6).

I can certainly relate to the plight of the students who are living in the institutional decor of the dorm rooms. The argument Brunell was quoted as rationale for refusal of painting requests (campus buildings are painted on a 5-year cycle) leaves a credibility gap. I have had the same colorless drapes in my office and pale puke-yellow paint for 26 years. It's no wonder I spend only as little time in my office as necessary. They won't even let faculty paint their offices!

Get the facts

Editor: I didn't know that you went for name calling in your paper (Montana Kaimin). That is alright tho, because both side can play that game. I am starting to believe that the staff of the Kaimin is nothing but a group of DUMP-FOOLS, and Jack Asses. But you are still young and have never really seen live (or death). You all remind me of a peace-loving-nut (who was to dump to burn his draft card) that got drafted and sent to "Nam." He believed that if he layed down his weapons and walked up to the Viet Cong and talk peace. Well he got his peace: after over 18 hours of "Interrogation" by the Viet Cong. We found parts of him all over a 400 yard area. Putting down our nuclear weapons (or falling behind in the arms race) would be just like that peaceful dead kid over in Nam. One thing you did forget to call us that believe in the US of A and want to keep our freedom is "kill crazy" or "war lovers." As an ex-soldier (who went into the Army way back when and stayed) I been called more names then you can think of. I been there and I had training you kids don't even think there is, so I believe I know a little bit more about arms and war then you. One thing I ask is that you get your facts right because some poor young kid may believe you as be gospel; which you ain't always.

SAC was outstanding

Editor: The recent Bob Marshall Benefit sponsored by SAC was one of the most successful I've ever seen. Hundreds of people had a great time and about $2,500 was raised towards the expenses of the Bob Marshall Alliance, the group heading up the defense of this great Wilderness Area.

SAC did an outstanding job, and Barry Adams gave the whole program direction. The BMA is fortunate to have supporters like this, we deeply appreciate it.

Bob Marshall Resolution is called unconstitutional

By Jim Marks
Kaimin Reporter

Should oil companies be allowed to take oil from wilderness areas at the expense of damage to the flora and fauna of those areas?

This is the basic question of a complicated legal issue that will be debated in a Billings federal court Dec. 1.

A congressional committee acted last May under the Federal Land Management Act to bar oil and gas leasing and exploration from the Bob Marshall, Great Bear and Lincoln Scapegoat Wilderness areas. The committee action, sponsored by Rep. Pat Williams, D-Mont., is called the Bob Marshall Resolution.

Mountain States Legal Foundation and Pacific Legal Foundation — two law firms that represent industry and oil and gas companies — have challenged the resolution on the grounds that it is unconstitutional.

The industry representatives are suing the Department of the Interior to overturn the resolution.

But Mountain States Legal Foundation was headed by James Watt before he became the secretary of the interior. This makes environmentalist nervous.

Because of Watt's involvement with both parties in the suit, the Bob Marshall Alliance and the Wilderness Society requested and received from a federal court the right to intervene on behalf of the Department of the Interior. Even though the department is named as the defendant in the suit, the Bob Marshall Alliance and the Wilderness Society will be the main parties defending the resolution.

William Mellor, a spokesman for Mountain States Legal Foundation, said that the resolution is unconstitutional because a congressional committee does not have the power to make what should be an executive decision.

When the committee barred exploration from the three wilderness areas, it infringed on the constitutionally mandated balance of executive, judicial and legislative power, he said.

But Jim Brogger, president of the Bob Marshall Alliance, said that the resolution is constitutional. A statute of the federal lands and policy act does empower the committee to put the resolution into effect, he said.

Hank Fischer, a member of the Bob Marshall Alliance and the Montana representative for the Defenders of Wildlife, said that if oil and gas leases and exploration are allowed within the wilderness areas, the areas' ecosystems would be badly damaged.

"It's (the attack on wilderness areas) a recurring problem all over the country now," Fischer said. "It's hard to find people who are for it other than Secretary

The people who do the exploring and leasing are trying to take advantage of the resources within wilderness areas before the areas are closed off entirely, Mellor said.

If the resolution had been an act of Congress signed by the president, he said, the companies he represents would not have had legal grounds for dispute.

All of the parties interviewed agreed that no matter what the Dec. 1 decision is, it will be appealed and is likely to go as far as the Supreme Court.

If the resolution stands under a final court test, the struggle to protect the three wilderness areas

Watt."

Only .2 percent of the nation's oil reserves are located within wilderness areas, and this small amount does not justify damaging them, he said.

When asked about the .2 percent figure, Mellor replied: "At best it is anyone's guess. At worst, it is an unfounded estimate."

The nation-wide push for allowing oil and gas exploration and leasing within wilderness areas is the result of economic need and a clause within the 1964 Wilderness Act that bars all further exploration and leasing after December 1983, Mellor said.

The clause means that if oil and gas companies are not granted exploration and leasing rights before the 1983 deadline, they cannot get the rights. If the rights have been granted before the deadline, a company could continue to explore and lease wilderness areas specified in contracts.

He who begins by loving Christianity better than Truth, will proceed by loving his sect or church better than Christianity, and end in loving himself better than all.

—Samuel Taylor Coleridge

from oil and gas exploration and leasing will be over, Fischer said.

But if it is defeated, the people who do the exploring and leasing will be able to develop areas that would otherwise be closed to them, Mellor said.

The question really being debated is whether to preserve wilderness with all of its elements intact or to take out some of the elements while disturbing the rest.

JULIE CHRISTIE IN PETULIA

Richard Lester's Petulia (1968) wasn't especially popular at the time of its release, but its reputation has grown with each passing year. (So much so, in fact, that a 1978 survey of twenty-one leading film critics placed Petulia third behind The Godfather and Nashville) on a list of the ten best American films of the decade. Filmed in San Francisco during 1967's Summer of Love, Petulia stars Julie Christie as a kooky, uninhibited young woman, bored with her marriage of six months, who meets a recently divorced surgeon (George C. Scott) at a whacked-out charity ball and promptly turns his life inside out and upside down. An offbeat love story and freewheeling social satire, Petulia is notable for good performances from the entire cast (which also includes Shirley Knight and Richard Chamberlain), as well as for director Lester's dazzling cinematic style which combines past with present and flash-owns of subconscious thoughts. With Big Brother & The Holding Company, The Grateful Dead, and members of The Committee. Plus, Colour Abstractions, landmark animated experiments from the great Oskar Fischinger! Color.

Legal help a plus at UM

By Karen McGrath

Kaimin Reporter

According to the people who work there, few students know that ASUM Legal Services exists, where it is located or what services it provides.

But when a student does need legal help, the service provides assistance such as drafting a "simple letter," going to court or "going to the Supreme Court if we have to," Bruce Barrett, director of Legal Services, said.

Located on the first floor of the University Center, the service provides legal assistance to students in landlord-tenant cases, automobile accident cases, insurance cases and minor crime matters, such as shoplifting, traffic tickets and misdemeanor drug arrests.

The University of Montana's legal service operation is one of only a handful of its kind in the nation, Barrett said. Only 150 colleges have some type of legal service, and some of those offer only advice and referrals, he added.

What Legal Services does not provide, Barrett said, is assistance to students in profit-seeking activities, business ventures, corporate business matters, real estate transactions, felony criminal matters or tax matters.

Referrals to Missoula lawyers are available in cases that the service does not accept. Appointments must be made for any type of service.

Barrett said that along with students, ASUM and student organizations also receive assistance.

Central Board member Jim Brennan, who is also a member of the Library Fee Committee, said that the committee once needed a library fee proposal drafted and that he found the service "really helpful."

Ed Bender, a senior in journalism, said that about two months ago he moved from his apartment without giving notice to his landlord. Bender said he moved because his landlord refused to heat or keep up the apartment.

Bender asked Legal Services for advice on what would happen to him when he moved without giving notice. Legal Services told Bender he could move if the landlord was not keeping up the rental agreement and sent a letter to Bender's landlord asking that Bender's $100 deposit be returned.

Bender said he received $100 Wednesday and added that Legal Services was prepared, if necessary, to go to court against his landlord.

Legal Services also offers clinical training to third-year law school students. Law students assist clients and engage in most of the work done in the service, Zimmet said Legal Services is a credit to UM. "This university is in the clover as far as getting legal help is concerned," she said.

Fees for a downtown attorney average $50 per hour, Zimmet said.

Legal Services was allocated $36,000 for this school year. That amounts to about $1 per student per quarter for the service.

Barrett receives a $21,000 salary.

The internship program helps not only students, Whetstone said, but also the interns themselves.

"I think it's criminal for a law student to graduate without this kind of experience," she said. "Sitting in a classroom just doesn't do it for me. The experience is absolutely invaluable."

Along with the law internship program, Legal Services also has an internship program for undergraduates. The service accepts a limited number of undergraduate interns who perform work related both to their major and to law.

"The program has been quite successful," Barrett said. "The work has come out surprisingly good, and the research findings are used in our legal battles."

Barrett said that space in the UC for Legal Services is one of the problems the service faces. "We are vastly under-spaced," he said.

The office is divided into two areas. One area serves as an office for Barrett and a secretary. The other contains three conference areas for attorney/client discussions.

"There is a definite problem of privacy in these offices," Barrett said. "Some clients have very delicate matters to discuss."

Barrett said many students often wait until a problem is critical before consulting the service. Students should feel free to come to Legal Services, he said, because the atmosphere is informal.

More than $200,000 has been returned to students through cases handled by the service since it was started in 1976, Barrett said, adding "UM Legal Services is a shining example of a positive thing student government can do when given the autonomy and funding."

DIRECTOR OF LEGAL SERVICES, Bruce Barrett said his office can provide legal assistance to students involved in landlord, insurance, automobiles and minor crime cases. This service costs about $1 per student each quarter. (Photo by Kinney.)

under the supervision of Barrett.

Six law interns are working at the service this semester, and each intern is required to take three-to-four clients a week.

One of the interns, Janice Whetstone, said most students must wait about a week before their case can be handled, but that in emergency situations, a case is handled immediately.

"We prioritize the real big things," Whetstone said. "Sometimes, you do have to wait a week to see about your case, but we do flip out the work."

Whetstone said she is handling about 30 cases at present. Carolyn Zimmet, another intern, is handling about 15 cases.

Ting trial set for Dec. 8

Jacob Ting, a former University of Montana student who is charged with assault and attempted murder of a deputy sheriff, waived his right of a jury trial Nov. 19 in Los Angeles County Superior Court.

Ting, 35, will now receive a court trial Dec. 8 in front of U.S. District Judge Richard Montes in Pasadena (Calif.) Superior Court.

Ting is being held in the Men's Central Jail, Los Angeles. Bail has been set at $100,000. He was arrested Sept. 22 in the Angeles National Forest near Pasadena, while fixing his car.

A deputy who stopped to help him found that the license plates on Ting's car were registered for another vehicle.

Ting is accused of pulling a gun on the deputy when the deputy asked for his vehicle registration. Ting was arrested and charged with attempted homicide and assault with a deadly weapon.

Ting was a graduate student in microbiology at UM and served as president of the International Students' Union last year.

Cracked kilns keep art students 'heated'

Could it be the ruins of ancient dungeons on the University of Montana campus? No, just what's left of the kilns in the ceramics department in the Art Annex, which is located in the same building as the Grizzly Pool.

Kilns are large ovens in which objects of soft clay are baked at very high temperatures. The process, called "firing," hardens the clay.

Ceramics students at UM have to contend with four obsolete kilns, the fronts of which are pitted with holes. Some of the holes are 10 inches wide.

"You have to fight the kilns here," said Steve Braun, a general studies major who has worked in ceramics at UM for two years. "My pieces usually crack in the kilns because cold air flows in through the holes while the pieces are still hot. I have to fill the cracks with auto body filler or glue pieces back together with epoxy."

Last year, an exhibit of Braun's work in the University Center Gallery featured a ceramic sea monster more than six feet tall.

Two professors from the Art Institute of Kansas in Kansas City saw his work and offered him a scholarship to attend the Institute.

Braun, frustrated with the poor ceramics facilities at UM, will leave for Kansas sometime this

Campus offices to trade space

By Deb Thiele
Kaimin Reporter

A flip flop of office space will take place between the University of Montana's Financial Aids Office and the Admissions Office during the week of Dec. 7. The decision to change the location of the office was made to give the Admissions Office a more visible location.

"It has been a problem for prospective students and visitors of the campus to find the Admissions Office," said Mike Akin, director of admissions. By changing the location of the Admissions Office to the first floor of the Lodge, instead of the second floor, Akin hopes it will provide easier access to the office.

"I don't think exposure is a problem for Financial Aids," Akin said. "The students are more familiar with the campus than the visitors, and when you're talking dollars, grants and loans to the students, they'll find you."

Financial Aids will receive an office area which is designed to handle larger amounts of traffic, according to Fred Weldon, director of Student Affairs. The Admissions Office has a longer counter area where several people can wait on students and a larger reception area where students will have room to wait, Weldon said.

"I wasn't given a choice in the matter of the move, but I didn't object, either," said Donald Mullen, director of Financial Aids.

"We're squashed now," Mullen added.

Financial Aids will be moving into a space about 200 square feet smaller than the space it is now in.

One concern Mullen has about the move is what is to be done with the job opening board. Now, job notices are posted in the windows of the Financial Aids office.

"I have requested a bulletin board incased in glass to be put up along the stairway to the second floor," Mullen said, "but we (Mullen and the Physical Plant) haven't reached an agreement on the size as of yet. But we'll have a bulletin board."

Also, Mullen added, if a problem develops with Financial Aids' new location, the space committee agreed to consider another move.

The move should be completed within a couple of days, according to Weldon, and is scheduled for the end of the quarter because it is less busy time for Financial Aids and gives both offices enough time to prepare for Winter Quarter.

According to Mullen, the decision to move the offices was discussed among Weldon, Akins, the members of the Space Committee, and himself. But the decision to move was the Space Committee.

Members of the Space Committee are: Paul Wilson, associate professor of geography; Patricia Douglas, vice president of fiscal affairs; Donald Habbe, academic vice president; and Ted Parker, Physical Plant director.

The Physical Plant will conduct the move and do a small amount of remodeling. The estimated cost of the move is $6,200 and it will be paid for out of the Space Committee's allocating fund.

World News

THE WORLD

- Thousands of Protestants walked off their jobs yesterday in support of the Rev. Ian Paisley's call for a 12-hour general strike to protest British policy in Northern Ireland. As they did so, the IRA again struck at the British mainland with a booby-trapped bomb planted outside the British Army barracks at Woolwich, southeast London. The bomb injured two soldiers' wives.

- Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev yesterday rejected President Ronald Reagan's proposal for eliminating European-range nuclear missiles, but offered a reduction of Soviet missiles as a "gesture of good will." He also made clear that the United States would be expected to follow suit.

- Britain, France, the Netherlands and Italy announced yesterday that they will take part in a U.S.-sponsored force to patrol the Sinai after Israel completes its withdrawal from the war-torn Egyptian territory in April.

- Greece's first Socialist premier, Andreas Papan-dreu, told Parliament that he will set a timetable early next year for the withdrawal of all U.S. military bases from Greek territory, one of his chief campaign promises.

THE NATION

- Congress voted yesterday to restore the government to normal, approving a Republican proposal to continue federal spending at the old level until Dec. 15. The move came as hundreds of thousands of government workers were being laid off, after President Reagan vetoed an emergency spending resolution to restore funds to federal agencies and told his Cabinet to begin shutting down non-essential government services.

- An ex-Brink's guard, George Manuel Bosque, charged with taking $1.85 million from his own armored van Aug. 15, 1980 in the second-largest Brink's theft ever, was quietly arrested by FBI agents near a busy San Francisco supermarket.

MONTANA

- The largest clandestine drug laboratory ever found in Montana has been discovered in the Trego area of Lincoln County, following the arrest of four people on drug possession charges, Flathead County Sheriff Al Rierson said yesterday.

- The second week of the Montana Legislature's special session began yesterday, following a weekend failure by lawmakers to meet a self-imposed Saturday deadline to complete action on state budget amendments and key taxation issues.

Runners fourth in nation

By Scott Turner
Kaimin Sports Editor

The University of Montana women's cross country team ended the season in a big way last Saturday, running to a fourth place finish in the AIAW Division I Nationals.

The lady Grizzlies were led by freshman sensation Deirdre Hathhorn, who placed fifth overall with a time of 18:04 on the 5,000 meter course. Also cracking the 19-minute mark were Bridgette Baker, who finished 27th with a time of 18:38, and Gretchen Goebel (29th, 18:41). Laurie Holm-Johnson placed 64th in the 25-team meet, Kathy Reidy was 85th, Lisa Franseen 108th, and Carol Tipton 134th.

Coach Dick Koontz was extremely happy with his team's performance.

"This is a great thing for the team, the university and the state of Montana," Koontz said. "This team has worked very hard all season. They couldn't have been more deserving."

The meet, held in Pocatello,

Lady Griz tip season opener Saturday night

The University of Montana women's basketball team is just a little over a week away from the Idaho, was won by Iowa State, who finished with 80 points. Next came Purdue (110 points), Wisconsin (114) and Montana (148).

"We hadn't gotten a lot of national attention this year, but this performance should open some eyes," Koontz said. "We defeated several nationally ranked teams so I think people will start to realize that we have a very strong program."

start of its 1981-82 season and Coach Robin Selvig said the Lady Grizzlies are anxious to get started.

"We've been practicing for six weeks now, and the girls are anxious to play against someone else," Selvig said. "Our scrimmages have been intense, but I think we'll play with more intensity once the season gets underway."

Selvig has been pleased with the overall progress the squad has made in practice.

"We still have some areas we need to work on, but overall I think we've made a lot of progress," he said. "Our outside shooting and fast break are both looking better than they have in the past."

Selvig said the squad still needs to work on its defense.

"We should be a very deep club this season," he concluded. "Everyone will be vying for playing time, and I think we'll be able to go deep into the bench this season without getting hurt."

The Lady Grizzlies open their 1981-82 season Saturday at home against the College of Great Falls. Tip off is at 5:15 p.m. in Dahlberg Arena.

Men's BB starts Saturday

The 1981-82 version of the University of Montana men's basketball team is just a week away, and, according to Grizzly Coach Mike Montgomery, what his team needs now is a game.

"Our practices have leveled off a little bit and will probably stay that way until we start playing games," said the fourth-year coach. "We've had good practice sessions, and the kids have worked very hard."

"Physically speaking the kids came to play, and the result is a few aches and bruises," he continued. "We need to play someone else to see how we do, and what kind of adjustments we need to make."

"When you have 13 guys fighting for positions against one another it makes for a very competitive situation," he said. "Now we need to come together as one."

Montgomery praised the play of juniors Derrick Pope (6-6) and Craig Larsen (6-11), the Grizzlies' two returning starters.

"Derrick and Lars have established themselves as steady players as we knew they would based on their performance from last year and based on the fact that they are our two returning veterans."

Montana opens its 1981-82 season Saturday at home against Stout State. Tipoff for Grizzly home games is at 7:30 p.m.

Central Board . . .

ting students from the high schools, either. Why should they come here when there's no funding?"

ASUM funding for the debate team was cut to $200 last spring after a dispute over the team's budget. One person contended that the budget was the same one that had been submitted the year before, and for that reason was fraudulent.

A Central Board subcommittee cleared the budget after changing some discrepancies, but CB voted to allocate the team only $200.

"A couple of people said that if the team was just going to submit the same budget, they didn't deserve to have any money," said Carl Burgdorfer, ASUM business manager. "They were cut to $200 because of that."

Marquette McRae-Zook, CB member, said that the allocations against the budget were a "case of sour grapes."

"The subcommittee found the budget was basically sound," McRae-Zook said, "but before the CB even heard the subcommittee's report, seven or eight CB members had already decided to zero the team out. It was an unfortunate happening."

The big problem is not funding, Polsin contends. Rather, it is that ASUM is not consistent with its funding procedure.

"Every year there's a fight over funding with ASUM," Polsin said. "Last year, we didn't even know how to apply for funding. ASUM didn't even publish a list of criteria for funding."

"Unless there's some consistency in funding from ASUM," Polsin said, "there's no way I can continue to do this (advise the debate team)."

He says he understands ASUM's reluctance to fund the debate team.

"On a per capita basis, the debate team is very expensive to fund . . . because of our big travel expenses," Polsin said. "If it's a choice between funding the College of Arts and Sciences for more teaching help, or the debate team, what do you do?"

Legislature . . .

change the way county tax collectors punished people who turned in late tax payments.

The bill would create a 2-percent penalty on late taxes and add a 1-percent per month interest charge on top of that.

Fabrega offered the bill in response to claims that many citizens are deliberately waiting to pay their taxes, putting their money instead into high-paying stocks or bank funds and later paying both taxes and penalties.

He said the bill is an attempt to take the profit out of such tax-dodge schemes.

A Senate committee amended a small portion of the bill, lowering the amount of interest it proposed to charge. While only a small change, the House reacted quickly by ditching the proposed amendment. The House then sent the bill to a conference committee, where House and Senate members are expected to pound out a compromise.

House speaker Bob Marks, R-Clancy, had hoped to finish all the legislators' business by late last night, but the Senate grew tired of the debates and at about 8 p.m., closed up shop. The House a half hour later did the same.

University presidents get raises in midst of massive budget cuts

College Press Service

As all of Michigan's state colleges and universities stagger to cope with massive state budget cuts that have forced lay-offs and curricular cutbacks, at least four university presidents have gotten raises.

Most recently, it was belatedly disclosed that John Jamrich, president of financially beleaguered Michigan University, recently got a 12.5 percent pay hike even as the state legislature slashed NMU's budget by $679,000.

Similar reactions followed chief executive pay raises at other public colleges in Michigan, probably the most fiscally troubled state in the nation. The auto industry depression has disrupted the entire state economy, cut tax revenues and forced state legislators to slash appropriations to state schools.

Nevertheless, University of Michigan President Harold Shapiro received a 5 percent pay raise last spring, shortly before announcing that budget cuts would force the university to close its geography department and dramatically reduce its work force.

Western Michigan's John Bernhard got a hotly contested 10 percent hike, while Michigan State President Cecil Mackey was given two increases in as many months last summer, despite a self-proclaimed state of economic emergency on the campus.

Michigan and Michigan's State's budgets were cut by some $4.6 million each, while Western Michigan sustained a $1.4 million loss.

Helena National Forest needs summer employees

The Helena National Forest is recruiting persons to fill temporary jobs for the 1982 summer season. Bob Lousen, Forest Personnel Officer, estimates that there will be about 100 positions open in the Helena Forest in Helena, Townsend and Lincoln, Mont.

In the past seasons there has been a shortage of qualified applicants for these jobs. Specific shortages have been in surveying, fire suppression, timber management and range analysis. Persons with experience in these fields are encouraged to apply.

Application forms are now available from any U.S. Forest Service Office.

Applications should be completed and sent in starting Dec. 1 and no later than Jan. 15.

For more information, write to the Personnel Office, Helena National Forest, Room 328, Federal Building, Helena MT 59626 or call 406-449-5097.
