University named by Friday’s blizzard

The University of Montana and the Missoula valley were hard hit by Friday’s blizzard. A storm front that hit the area Friday afternoon.

Missoula police chief of general security, said only one casualty was reported during the storm. A male student was grazed by the tree that fell near the Journalism Building, sustaining cuts on his face and some scratches. Willett said the student, whose name was available, was treated and released by the University Health Service.

Willett also said that a power pole behind the field house blew down and caused a 45-minute power outage before it could be fixed.

"We had some fender-benders and some trees falling down," Willett said. "But after it was over, things got back to normal." Willett said the storms didn’t affect the activities that were planned for the weekend. Three basketball games and the Foresters’ Ball all took place as scheduled.

However, Willett said, “I hadn’t seen a storm like that in 10 or 15 years.”

Reagan asks Congress to disallow exemption

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan asked Congress yesterday to bar him from granting tax-exempt status to colleges that discriminate against blacks.

Reagan asked Congress, through a letter to Speaker Tip O’Neill, to require colleges that seek tax-exempt status to prove they do not discriminate against blacks.

Reagan’s request was part of a larger effort to persuade Congress to fund his proposal to cut the U.S. budget deficit.

The White House said the president had lost patience with what he considered the slow pace of progress in Congress on his proposals.

Reagan’s letter was the third in his series of 'weekly addresses' to the American public, and it came three days after he signed the budget-balancing law into law.

Reagan’s letter to Congress was sent to O’Neill, a Democrat from Massachusetts, and Minority Leader Tom P. O’Neill Jr., a Democrat from New Hampshire, and other top House leaders.

Reagan also asked Congress to pass an anti-terrorism measure and urged Congress to pass a constitutional amendment that would give the president more control over the budget process.

Robert Ream, an assistant professor of forestry at the University of Montana, yesterday filed for nomination for the position of representative of Legislative House District 90.

House District 93 covers an area that borders the northern, eastern and southern Missoula city limits. It includes the Rattlesnake Valley, East Missoula and the south side of Pattee Canyon.

The district’s incumbent, Ben Hanson, said that he will not seek re-election. He said that he enjoyed serving on the Legislature, but once was enough.

Ream, a Democrat, has put together a campaign staff comprised of some UM students and some of his friends and neighbors. “I’m going ahead and getting geared up for the campaign,” he said.

The primary election will take place on June 8, and Ream wins the Democratic nomination, he will compete with the Republican nominee at the general election on Nov. 2. The newly elected legislator will serve District 90 for two years.

Ream said that because of his background and training in resource management, he has an interest in the proper use of Montana resources. “I think we should strive to use those resources to get an economically sound job base,” he said.

In a press release prepared by Ream he further states: “Our resources must be developed at a speed and pace that provides a stable base of jobs over the long haul, while not depleting the state of its agricultural and resource base.”

To this end, Ream said, he will make a major issue of “the Bonneville Power Administration’s proposal to build power lines through the Missoula area.

Ream said there may be little that can be done to stop the proposal, but that changes in the eminent domain law and improvements of the Montana Major Facility Citing Act could help.

Ream also said he would support House Minority Leader Dan Kenniss’ proposal to invest more of the coal tax trust fund in Montana’s enterprises, rather than in out-of-state corporations.

Ream, who has a doctorate in botany from the University of Wisconsin, has been a member of the UM faculty and a resident of the Rattlesnake area for six years.

Kettenering expected to officially resign

Central Board member Paul Kettenering, a Democrat, said he will resign from CB, effective immediately.

Spaulding said he talked to Kettenering’s sophomore in economics, yesterday afternoon, at which time Kettenering showed Spaulding a rough draft of a formal resignation letter. The letter has not been officially handed in yet, but Spaulding said Kettenering is planning to give copies to the ASUM office and to the other CB members.

Kettenering could not be reached immediately.

Spaulding said Kettenering decided to quit because he didn’t have enough time to devote to CB activities and his private life.

Some CB members weren’t surprised by Kettenering’s resignation. “It’s kind of a surprise, but then again it really isn’t,” said CB member Jennifer Eversman, a freshman in business administration.

“His problem was not with us, but with himself,” she said. “I didn’t think he was going to unseat his campaign manager.”

CB member Ken Dermer, a senior in forestry, said he expected Kettenering to resign, because he had heard him talking about it.

Kettenering has been a member of CB since March 1981 and is the third CB delegate to resign since the March 1981 election. Robin Castle, who was a sophomore in biology, resigned her CB seat last spring to change schools, and Garth Ferro, a sophomore in business administration, quit his position in November because he thought CB was getting “too political.”

SPURS wants more

Editor

I would like to take this opportunity to invite sophomore males to become involved with campus and community activities. How? The answer is to join SPURS.

SPURS is a group of male and female sophomores who carry out service and money-making projects for the community, such as blood drives, helping at nursing homes, and doing a Teeter for Toto marathon, as well as carrying out campus events such as helping with homecoming, Sadie Hawkins dance, and Western basketball games. What's great about SPURS is that you can do in a safe and organized setting and feel good helping someone else.

SPURS isn't just a group that does things on campus; we do community activities that are for fun too. The more people who come, the more fun we have, the more we can do. We urge any sophomore males to come to the Montana Rooms 1 and 2, Thursday, January 20, at 5 p.m. We will be tapping any males who we feel are interested in being involved with SPURS. We'll have refreshments and energy. Refrigerants will be on hand too! If there are any questions, just call Harolda at 243-4154 or Darla at 721-3692. Hope to see you there.

Flasback interpreted

Editor: This letter addresses John Kappes, whose review of the movie, Taps appeared in the Jan. 15 edition of the Kaimin. Kappes questions the bravery, the integrity of the final scene) of the parade sequence we see earlier in the film. May I suggest that Becker's (the final scene) of the parade sequence flashes on with all of its full awareness of what lies—or doesn't lie—behind it.

I would welcome any response to this interpretation.

Editor: On behalf of the Montana Masques, I would like to extend our gratitude to all our groups for their generous support which will enable us to take our production of The Merchant of Venice to the regional competition at the Colorado College in Salt Lake City Jan. 27-30. There it will be voted on by national judges and may be selected to be one of eight productions by colleges and universities from around the country to be presented at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C.

Thanks to you, the students, ASUM awarded us $1,500 from the special allocation funds. Thanks to Mascula Liquid Soap, the Student Fire Department, the School of Fine Arts, the Graduate School and the central administration of the University of Montana. In other words early in the movie we view the parade for the first time: George C. And, as Becker on the last scene: 'You have a right to be proud. And the parade sequence flashes on with all of its full awareness of what lies—or doesn't lie—behind it.'

Editor: Once again the world is outraged at the imposition of martial law in Poland. The self-proclaimed moral leaders are castigating the military regime in Poland for denying freedom to the Polish people. President Reagan has reminded us that "the torch of freedom is hot; it warms those who hold it high and lights those who try to extinguish it." The U.S. government dispatched Assistant Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger to seek Europe to drum up support for concerted punitive measures against the Polish military government. The magnanimous words are accompanied by tougher measures against the Soviet Union for its complicity in the events currently unfolding in Poland. The crisis in Poland has captured headlines in the newspapers. The events are confronted with an alarming scale of information pollution and an information explosion...

An average American, who normally is either apathetic, nonchalant or ignorant about world events, suddenly becomes aware of a situation when the events that are presented in the newspapers are slammed down his throat by the press and media.

The U.S. government is once more in delaying in a devastating self-flattery as the champion of morality and freedom. The defection Polish Ambassador to the U.S. Mr. Spasowski, compounded the self-delusion by calling the U.S. "defenders of freedom."

Individual freedom is and should be an inalienable right, but the question is: can the U.S. impose the requisite qualifications to judge or condemn any people for repression. Broadly speaking, the parade start to set the world aright, with others, or with itself. As Asa定期ies in Matthew, Chapter 7, verse 7-8, "But notice the splinter in your brother's eye without noticing the log of beam in your own eye? Or how can you say to your brother, 'Let me extract that splinter from your eye?'" The U.S. government and its operations throughout the world are unabashedly cooperated with the ultraconservative government in South Africa. Opinion of the U.S. government in South Africa is blacked in the hands of the world in the most basic human rights. The same attitude is reinforced on the part of the government in South Africa, Pakistan, Afghanistan or El Salvador. It makes no difference if it perpetrates it or the victims are. The American family has un­dertaken many changes in the past 15 years. The diverse tasks of skyscrotting, an increasing number of working mothers are finding that they have many parental roles to fill and not enough time to care for all of them.

In an effort to alleviate this problem, Big Brothers and Sisters of Missoula attempts to match children of single parents with caring adults who can be friends and role models. Big Brothers and Sisters was established in Missoula in 1970. Volunteers from the University of Montana sociology department ran the program. Five years later, Big Brothers and Sisters added the program and a full-time staff took over. Almost half of the funding for the program comes from donations and fund-raising activities. United Way and government sources supply the rest.

There are two requirements for becoming a big brother or sister. The applicant must be 18 years old and must make a one-year commitment to the program. The applicant then fills out an application and goes through two interviews. If the applicant is accepted as a big brother or sister, a trial match is set up. If the match goes well, it is made permanent.

Gail Every, caseworker for Big Brothers and Sisters in Missoula, said that a big brother or sister must be a "mature, responsible" person that is able to build relationships with kids. The ability to promote the self-esteem confidence and trust of the child is very important, she said.

Activities are set up once a month by Big Brothers and Sisters, but the rest of the time it’s up to the "bigs" and the "littles" to decide what they want to do.

Milt Thomas, a teaching assistant in inter-personal communications at UM, said that he and his "littles" will be life-long friends. Although there is a minimum requirement of being together for three years, he said he tries to spend a Full day per week with his "little". "It’s a real change from school," he said.

Thomas said it is not the responsibility of a big brother or sister to be a parent to the child or to have some type of caretaker relationship set up every time they meet. "The main thing is to make sure there is time set aside when just the two of us can go out and do something we like to do," he said.

"We need big brothers desperately," said Sylvia Smith, secretary for Big Brothers and Sisters of Missoula. "We have 16 big sisters waiting, but 36 little boys who still need matches."

Thomas said that people should investigate the possibility of getting into the program. Many people would be surprised at how much they enjoyed it if they would just give it a try, he said.

Big Brothers and Sisters is looking for four or five more members. If interested, call into the office or by calling 721-2360.

Hang-gliding isn’t as dangerous as believed, says hang-glider

By Kyle Albert
Kaiser Reporter

Hang-gliding’s death-sport image is unrealistic, said Missoula Hang-gliders’ Association President Bruce Bardo.

The accident that killed former mountain climber John Stover in Missoula last year was the only one of 300 to 400 successful flights made by club members, Bardo said, adding that he felt the media blew it out of proportion at the time.

According to Bardo, Stover’s accident is an example of not respecting with a storm that forced him to crash in Helena Canyon. To counteract this bad image, Bardo’s organization will publish a newsletter and sponsor hang-gliding activities in the Missoulian starting this April.

Hang-gliders are statistically safer than light aircraft, Bardo said.

Missoula is an especially suitable place for hang-gliders because of two main factors, Bardo said. One, the weather is usually good for hang-gliding, three out of the past three years, he said, adding that he flew at least once every month last year.

The other advantage is the access to Mount Sentinel. It takes about two hours to lug the necessary 75 pounds or so of equipment up by foot, but people can usually get a ride from a four-wheeler for about two dollars, Bardo said.

Successful flights are rated by either time aloft or gain of altitude from the starting point. A brief five-to-10-minute glide down a "kite" is a "light ride." But Bardo said he’s heard of four-hour flights from Mount Sentinel when conditions were right.

The longest hang-glider flight recorded ed was a 20-hour one in Hawaii, he said.

Hang-gliding is time-consuming and expensive. Of the 39 members of Bardo’s organization, only 10 were able to hang-gliding on a regular basis. A flight takes about three hours of preparation and lasts two or three hours in the air, taking an entire afternoon.

A good "kite" can run you around $500, and the harness and helmet cost another $200, Bardo said.

A relatively new innovation in hang-gliding equipment is the parachute worn on the belly of the pilot. In the two years it has been used, it has saved about 50 lives, Bardo said.

Last year Bardo’s organization sponsored the first annual Air, Earth, & Water Race in addition to its annual Flying Festival. The race was run over a 25-mile course, beginning with hang-gliders and progressing in relay fashion to bicycles, canoes and finally, canoes. The best time was one hour and 50 seconds, and one individual ran the entire race by himself.

The Missoula Hang-gliders’ Association plans a party/meeting for Jan. 28 at 516 E. Front St. Plans for the Seventh Annual Flying Festival, the next Earth, Wind & Water Race and a possible film festival to be held later this winter will be discussed.

Mansfield collection ‘priceless,’ says professor

By Melinda Sinistro

“To Mike, who always knows what he wants and when to get it.” Thus reads the greeting on the 4-
by-9-foot photograph, signed by himself and John Kennedy in 1962 and sent to then-Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield as a thank you.

The piece is part of the Mansfield collection, located in the archives on the first floor of University of Montana’s Mansfield and Mike Mansfield Library. Historical records and collections stored in the archives are accessible to all students, though most of the materials must be used in the research room adjoining the archives.

Mansfield, who spent the U.S. ambassador to Japan since 1977, began donating some of his personal items to UM’s library in 1970 and has continued to donate papers and other memorabilia since then, according to University Librarian Dale Johnson.

Johnson is a U.S. senator from Montana in 1962, and was Senate majority leader from 1981 to 1987. From 1935 to 1942, Mansfield was a UM professor of history and political science.

“The Mansfield collection is priceless as far as I’m concerned,” said Charles Hood, a UM associate professor of journalism who is on sabbatical this year to study Mansfield and his research projects. “He was one of the great leaders of his generation, and his papers are of great value not only to American scholars, but to foreign scholars,” Hood said. The archives houses 30 years’ worth of correspondence with Mansfield from all over the world, Hood said.

The Mansfield collection also includes a mahogany desk presented to Mansfield by the president of the Philippines, several objects of Oriental pottery and chinaware that belonged to him. The archives on the first floor of Montana contains rare books and state documents that are difficult or impossible to replace, including old historical photos of early Montana. Eight-by-10-inch reproductions of the photos can be bought from the library for $5.

Johnson said the pictures are widely used to make posters, and that some have been purchased by local restaurants for decorations.

The archives contain an oral history collection of taped speeches that are also available to students. This includes a women’s oral history collection of speeches and a recent series on the 20th century for trade.

“This is my kind of party,” Birkenbuel said.

Economic report sparks Republican dissension

By The Associated Press

As the government reported the nation's lowest factory use in nearly seven years, dissection heightened among Republicans yesterday over proposals to raise taxes to reduce soaring federal deficits that many economists fear threaten economic recovery.

The Federal Reserve Board said yesterday that factory utilization plunged to 72.9 percent of capacity in December from 74.8 percent the previous month, while factory use in the departmental durable industry slid below 50 percent.

Factory use never fell below 75 percent since the 1980 recession, but dropped as low as 69 percent of capacity in March 1975, during the depths of the 1974-75 recession.

Sluggish sales, attributed in part to interest rates, have prompted manufacturers to idle work forces and in an attempt to reduce stocks of unsold products. Yesterday's factory-utilization figures heightened prospects for further increases in the Federal Reserve's discount rate, which stood at 8.9 percent in December.

Projections of record federal deficits and fears that heavy Treasury borrowing during the 1983-84 budget period are reducing the Federal Reserve is following a restrictive monetary policy will lead to another surge in interest rates, dampening prospects for sustained economic recovery.
