Group says I-91 to be violated

By Pam Newbern
Kaimin Senior Editor

A Missoula-based group claims the U.S. Air Force will violate Initiative 91 next spring.

Initiative 91, passed in the last election, puts Montanans on record as being opposed to the placement of MX missiles in the state and also states their opposition to further testing, deployment or development of nuclear weapons in any nation. The initiative has no legal effect.

Montanans Against the Freeze Violation, a recently formed group, contends the Air Force will violate I-91 by replacing 50 Minuteman missiles near Lewistown with 50 Minuteman IIIs next spring when the snow melts.

Minuteman II missiles each have the capacity for one nuclear warhead, while the IIIs have the capacity for three nuclear warheads each. The Minuteman II missiles are older than the Minuteman IIIs.

According to Sue Silverberg, an organizer of the group, there are already 150 Minuteman IIs and 50

Minuteman IIIs in Montana. By replacing 50 of the older missiles with the newer ones, Silverberg said, the Air Force is actually bringing 100 new nuclear weapons into the state.

According to Capt. Janis Witt, chief of public affairs for the 341st Strategic Missile Wing at Malmstrom Air Force Base in Great Falls, the planned replacement has nothing to do with I-91.

Witt said since I-91 has no legal effect, the Air Force will not be violating any rule. She said the Air Force announced plans to replace the missiles last spring, before I-91 was passed.

The Air Force has run out of Minuteman IIs to test, Witt said, and so was removing 50 of the missiles in order to use them for testing. She said the Minuteman IIs would be replaced with 50 Minuteman IIIs because of their greater accuracy and because they're more modern.

Silverberg said that regardless of I-91's legality, the Air Force is still "violating our code" by going against the wishes of Montanans as expressed by their passage of I-

Montanans Against the Freeze Violation was formed after I-91 was passed on Nov. 2, and has about 10 members. Silverberg said she was aware of the Minuteman conversion plans prior to the election, but because people were wrapped up in the I-91 campaign, nobody had time to devote to the issue until now.

The group is organizing a statewide phone campaign Dec. 6 to 10 to alert Montana representatives, senators and congressmen about the issue. Silverberg said U.S. Rep. Pat Williams and Sens. John Melcher and Max Baucus had pledged, prior to the election, to work towards nuclear disarmament.

Collector lines front yard with cars

By Doug Decker
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Most people have grass in their front yards. However Vern Sautler has 25 Cadillacs in his.

Parked fender-to-fender, the 25 Cadillacs look like a museum exhibit. The dashboards are covered with crumbling copies of old Missoulians. Old license plates cling to crooked bumpers. Some of the old cars lean wearily to the left or right. A broken headlight here. A shattered windshield there. They sit unused but not unwanted — waiting for a chance to become sparkling, clean and elegant once more.

Sautler, 61, has collected old cars at his west-side home since 1964. To keep the 25 Cadillacs company, Sautler has 13 Chryslers and five Buicks. None of the 43 cars is in great shape, but "they can all be fixed," said Sautler. His dream is to have all of them repaired and running well. But he said his job keeps him too busy to accomplish that.

Sautler and his wife, Myrna, are the landlords for 23 residences on their property off Russell Street. Between fixing furnaces and mending leaky roofs, Sautler doesn't have much time to devote to his car collection. He said he's glad his house is hard to find because he's embarrassed the cars don't look as good as they could.

Some of the old Buicks haven't been moved in years and Greg Oliver, environmental health aide for the Missoula City-County Health Department, said they may be in violation of the junk auto law.

Oliver said that due to complaints he's received, he will go to Sautler's home sometime this week to check for violations. If Oliver writes a citation, Sautler has two weeks to comply with the law which states that all junk cars must be either hidden from public view or fixed and licensed.

Sautler said because he owns all the land and all the cars are hidden from public view, he isn't in violation.

Even though it takes some hunting to find his house, Sautler said at least one person a week asks about the cars. Recently he sold thirteen 1961 and 1962 Cadillacs to someone who just stopped by to look.

Although Sautler does sell cars, he said emphatically he doesn't sell parts, adding with 25 cars, he can never tell when he'll need a part.

The 23-foot-long cars seem unending compared to today's compacts. "I don't like cars that look like a million others," says Sautler. "I like an artistic car."

Sautler talked about his cars the way an art historian might talk about a great work of art. "It's the line," he said. "The artistic shape of them 59s . . . it's mostly the high tails and length that does it for me." Most of his Cadillacs are 1959 models. Sautler said he started collecting them and he has so many today just because of the way they look. "They look like they're moving even when they are standing still."

Because Sautler said he considers himself somewhat of a connoisseur of older Cadillacs, he said he can "spot 'em coming a mile down the road."

Sautler's trained eye has been an asset in finding Cadillacs, he said. He has been as far as British Columbia in search of the "artistic line." Most of the other cars are from Montana, Idaho or Washington. He even found one while on vacation in Nebraska.

"I haven't found anymore lately," he said. "I still keep looking though."

"They just don't make 'em like they used to," he added, as he affectionately patted the fin of a 1959 Fleetwood. Sautler said although Cadillacs are the top of the line, he wouldn't own a new one. "They look like every other car on the road," he said. "Cadillac has really missed the boat lately."

Sautler keeps his favorite car, a 1959 Cadillac Eldorado convertible, in a garage, swaddled in a green tarp. It is one of only 1,200 made. "This car is tops . . . tops," he said. However, he is not completely happy with his gem car. "It rides too high," he said. "I need to adjust those springs."

Sautler will retire in a few years, and said he looks forward to getting the cars "into shape" again. He said he won't be happy until they are all perfect: "You've got to have the top of the line in whatever you have."

UM students can fast to help feed the hungry

By Jerry Wright
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Aside from your main meals, how many times do you grab a cookie, candy bar, apple or something else to munch on while passing the time of day? It might surprise many people if they realized how much of the day they spend eating, said Lynne Fitch, campus minister at the Ark and a coordinator for this week's Fast for a World Harvest.

Students with a meal plan will get a chance to donate one or more of their meals to the Fast tomorrow. The Food Service will donate the cost of the meals skipped to be split equally between the emergency meal program of the Missoula Poverello Center and the world hunger projects of Oxfam America.

Tables will be set up outside the Cascade and Treasure State dining rooms today and tomorrow where students may sign up to fast. Students without meal plans may sign up to skip a meal or may make a contribution today and tomorrow at the fast table in the University Center.

"I don't think someone who skips one, two or even all three meals will experience what real hunger is," said Fitch. But by fasting, those who are hungry will be helped, and the fast may help raise the consciousness of those who participate to the plight of the world's hungry, she said.

Last year the fast raised $843 on campus, and a related skate-athon raised an additional $576.

Oxfam, short for Oxford Famine Relief, is a non-profit international agency that supports self-help development projects in Third World countries.

Oxfam does not send many people into the field, said Fitch, but funds locally sponsored projects instead of trying to establish projects of its own. By providing relatively small grants of no more than $20,000 to these projects, Fitch said, most of the Oxfam money gets used for the purposes it was intended. Many relief programs often have their funding diverted to munitions and political groups, and the intended recipients get little or nothing, she said.

Oxfam was established at Oxford, England in 1942, and has second-hand stores throughout Great Britain roughly equivalent to the Goodwill stores of the United States, said Fitch.

The local planning committee for the Fast has pledged 50 percent of the Fast's proceeds to the Poverello Center to combat hunger locally, said Fitch.

The Poverello Center aids Missoula's needy.

The University of Montana is one of 2,000 groups (mostly college and university groups) across the nation which will be participating in the Fast, said Fitch.

There will be a noon forum tomorrow in the University Center Mall on the question "Why are People Hungry?" Panelists participating include: Peter Koehn, UM professor of political science, Jim Morton, executive director of the District XI Human Resources Council, and Minkie Medora, a dietitian at Missoula Community Hospital. Fitch will moderate the discussion.

The Fast is being sponsored at UM by ASUM, the Student Action Center and several campus ministry organizations.

Woman chased by man near UM yesterday

A man chased a woman from the corner of Beckwith and Maurice Avenues to the Health Sciences Building yesterday morning, according to Ken Willett, University of Montana police chief, department of security.

The woman, whose name was unavailable, was on her way to work at the university when the man began chasing her. He grabbed her by her shoulders and tried to get her to go with him, security reports say.

The man used "very foul" language, according to the reports.

The woman escaped, ran into the basement of the Health Sciences Building and called UM security at 7:16 a.m.

The woman described the attacker as weighing 160 to 170 pounds and estimated him to be 20 to 25 years old. He wore a blue stocking hat, blue scarf, black leather gloves, blue waist-length parka and jeans.

The victim also said the man had not shaved for a couple days.

Two women living in Craig Hall reported a prowler in their room Nov. 12. No suspect has been found in either case. Security officials said they don't know if the incidents are related.

Giving up food and cigarettes

A week from tomorrow is Thanksgiving, a day set aside to give thanks — to whomever you give thanks to — for what you have (material possessions or otherwise). But tomorrow, one week before Thanksgiving, you can express thanks for your health in another way, by giving things up. And in so doing, you can help others and yourself.

Kaimin editorial

Tomorrow is the Fast for a World Harvest. University of Montana students (and faculty, staff and anyone else) are encouraged to abstain from one or more of their meals — both to get them to think about those who cannot eat because they do not have the food, and so that the money they would ordinarily have spent on the meals can be used to help alleviate hunger in Missoula and in the world.

The money raised will be split between Oxfam America and the Missoula Poverello Center, a volunteer association that aids the local needy, mostly with free hot meals and emergency housing.

Oxfam is a non-profit international agency that uses its money not to simply ship food to those in need, but rather to fund local self-help projects in Asia, Africa and Latin America. Oxfam America, founded in 1970, is one of six autonomous Oxfam groups. The group works with the people of developing countries, encouraging and aiding long-term development projects so that those projects can become self-sustaining and the people less dependent on outside help.

Students (and others) with UM Lodge Food Service meal plans can sign up today at tables in the Lodge to omit one or more meals tomorrow. The Food Service will in turn give the money saved to Oxfam America and the Poverello Center.

Those without meal plans can also participate in the Fast for a World Harvest by skipping meals tomorrow and donating the money that they would have spent on the meals at a table in the University Center.

Tomorrow is also a day for giving up cigarettes.

The Great American Smokeout is not a day for lectures. Smokers, for the most part, already know (and are constantly being reminded of) the health hazards that smoking presents — both to themselves and those around them inhaling the smoke. The Smokeout is a day for encouragement. Smokers are encouraged to do without tobacco for one day.

Tomorrow is the sixth annual Smokeout. The idea is for smokers to go from midnight to midnight without taking a puff — though the American Cancer Society, which sponsors the Great American Smokeout, has pointed out that it is quite all right for late risers to extend the ending point if they want to make sure they get a full smokeless day.

And since many people find that quitting cold turkey is the best way to stop smoking, participation in the Smokeout may be the key for current smokers who are trying to quit.

A week from tomorrow is Thanksgiving. Participation in tomorrow's Fast for a World Harvest and Great American Smokeout could give you and many others much more to be thankful for.

changes of the "Little River Band," we feel it was unjust to review the band as they were 2 years ago when Mr. Swagerty last saw them. He didn't even attend the concert this last Sunday.

As stated in our ads, this was truly "A NIGHT TO REMEMBER" and in our opinion, Mr. Swagerty's review was truly "AN ARTICLE TO FORGET."

losing hope in the ability of our national leaders to stop the arms race. Citizens across the country, including Montanans, last week approved nuclear freeze referendums. Is the will of the people overshadowed by the dictates of our national leaders. Can we stop this madness, maybe, just maybe but we must continually express our will to those who test, produce, and deploy our nuclear arsenals. Can we stop these new, highly sophisticated weapons of mass destruction from being placed in Montana? Initiative 91 is non-binding but it does express the will of the majority of those who voted. Initiative 91 is just one step in the direction of trying to stop the arms race, much more must be done, probably without much help from our national leaders.

Apology due

Editor: We at Glacier Productions feel that an apology is due to those students who decided not to attend the "Little River Band and Randy Meisner" concert due to the unjustified review written by Shawn Swagerty prior to the concert.

In this article, Mr. Swagerty stated "Little River Band having undergone as many personnel changes as a cesspool cleaning service have managed to retain their limp sound on record. It remains to be seen, whether, new lead singer John Farnham can stagger around the stage as well as Glenn Schorrock could."

Having personally spoken to all members of the "Little River Band," they assured us that none of them have ever worked for a cesspool cleaning service. Further more, judging from the crowd's reaction to "Night Owl," "Man on your Mind" and "Take it easy on me," there were no limp sounds to be heard. Instead of staggering, John Farnham and the entire band moved gracefully on stage to the enjoyment of the entire crowd.

Having known about the personnel

Much more must be done

Editor: Former Secretary of State Edmund Muskie sure does talk highly of the nuclear freeze movement but when asked to endorse a movement by Montanans who are "trying to stop the arms race," Sen. Muskie magnificently evaded the question like any good politician would. He said he could not support every little splinter group but was working at the national level. What is happening at the national level? They're building more advanced weapons. In Great Falls our national leaders are planning to replace Minuteman II missiles with Minuteman III missiles which can be seen as first-strike weapons. They're not increasing the number of missiles but they are increasing the number of warheads. Maybe the decision to place Minutemen III missiles in Montana was made when Muskie was secretary of state.

Our national leaders have been trying to stop the arms race while we, "learn to live with it." The nuclear freeze movement is composed of concerned citizens who have been

Poor coverage

Editor: In an article entitled "Regents discuss handicapped," Melinda Sinistro purports to have covered the Board of Regents' meeting here last Friday, which I am told she did not attend. However, she did attend a "part" of the open-question session. Her article covered the part of the one-and-a-half-hour session she did attend.

In her coverage, she managed to misquote Marquette McRae-Zook. Marquette asked if they had investigated other alternatives to raising tuition. She did not suggest to the Regents that they should levy special fees. Miss Sinistro also used quotation marks, indicating a direct quote not a paraphrase. My journalism professor Jerry Holloran, says it is "irresponsible" to put quotes around anything but exact words. I agree, Miss Sinistro seems to have a problem with quotes—Re Dr. Tom Payne same paper.

The Board of Regents' meeting was a very important event. Students were given an opportunity to express their concerns. The impression created at that meeting could reflect on UM in future dealings with the state. I do not feel that, Miss Sinistro, as the Kaimin reporter, walking out during the middle of the only meeting she attended gave a good impression of the student newspaper to the Board of Regents. Besides, how does the Kaimin reporter think she can cover a news event when she missed half of it? There were more issues and more comments that could have been relevant to her article. A good journalist would never walk out during the middle of a news event.

As a reporter for the Kaimin, she represented the students of the University of Montana. If she did not have enough time to stay for the whole session, the Kaimin should have sent another reporter. It surprises me that the Kaimin would treat the regents' meeting so carelessly. Since the regents are the governing board for the entire University system, what they say and do has a great effect on students, especially since they are considering

Alternative needed

WASHINGTON — The post-election analysis, stocktaking and punditry have mostly been efforts to interpret Election Day's message to the president and his party. That's fair enough, considering that Reagan sought — and in a number of places, succeeded — in making the election a referendum on his presidency.

But somewhere among the electoral entrails, there is also a message for the Democrats. The message: Offer us an alternative.

So far, the Democrats have been busy congratulating themselves on their "win" — a gain of two dozen seats in the House and a draw in the Senate, though the Republicans have only half as many seats at risk.

Not bad, they are saying, pointing out that the average off-year gain for the party out of power is about a dozen House seats. I don't put any more stock in that than I do in the White House claim that the Republicans won because they lost the fewest seats of any party in power in an off-year election during which unemployment was above 10 percent.

If the Democrats had proposed any sort of alternative to Reaganomics, rather than mere opposition, their modest and unsurprising victory might have been a rout.

The polls — including the exit polls on Election Day — indicate that the American voters like President Reagan but not his economic program. If you buy that, and buy also the notion that Reagan managed to make the election something of a referendum on his presidency, then it seems fair to ask why the Democrats didn't do better. It isn't as though Reagan himself were on the ballot, in which case his supposed personal popularity might have been a factor.

To the extent that the Republicans who were on the ballots were seen as prospective supporters of the president's policies and programs, it must be said that Reagan didn't fare all that badly.

Which is precisely what his top aides are saying. The day after the election, one senior White House official was observing that "the other side missed a pretty good opportunity . . . the president came out very well." Another remarked that there was little in the election results to suggest that the voters want a major change of direction.

If that is so, then it is because the Democrats failed to propose a new direction — for the simple reason that they have yet to devise one. They know better than to propose a return to the Great Society programs, characterized by Reagan as "tax and tax and spend and spend." The American consensus appears to be that the Great Society approach had reached the limits of its effectiveness and, besides, its resuscitation would cost more than we can afford. But if the Democrats feared to revive their old approach, they lacked the vision to come up with a new one. Listen to their proposals, and what you hear sounds like Reaganomics with a heart.

Even in the face of record unemployment, the Democrats could not even agree on an attractive jobs policy. Newsweek magazine, in its Oct. 18 special issue ("How to Get America Back to Work"), put together a more cogent, more pragmatic, and more "Democratic" employment package than the Democrats themselves could manage.

Even so, the Republicans lost 26 seats in the House — a message they are certain to read with some care. The message for Democrats, which I am not certain they have yet recognized, is that opposition isn't enough.

THE WORLD

• Three Americans held prisoner in Angola arrived in Lusaka, Zambia yesterday in a Red Cross plane as part of a complex exchange for three Soviet prisoners, a Zambian government official said. Two white Red Cross planes landed late in the afternoon from the Angolan capital of Luanda, but reporters were kept away from the scene by police and troops. Security was very tight. The Zambian official, who refused to be identified, said the three Americans were shepherded into a VIP lounge to await the arrival of the plane bearing the three Soviets. The exchange was expected to be completed last night.

THE NATION

• Hunters surrounded an elk herd and chased the panicked animals off a cliff to their deaths in what a Wyoming game official calls an

"inexcusable" display of un-sportsmanlike behavior. "I don't know what was going through their minds," Terry Killough, district supervisor for the Wyoming Game and Fish Department, said of the hunters. "It's kind of inexcusable." According to Warden Dave Bragonier, about 50 elk were feeding in a hay field Sunday on a mesa up the South Fork River, 30 miles southwest of Cody, when hunters "spooked" them. Hunters apparently fired at them, killing three or four elk, and the rest fled, Bragonier said. Killough said yesterday his staff knows of 24 elk that apparently ran down a narrow ridge to escape the hunters and found themselves at a 100-foot cliff. And with nowhere to go, they jumped.

MONTANA

• State government is not attempting to deprive farmers of their private property rights, said Jim Flynn, director of the state Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks. He told the annual Montana Farm Bureau convention Monday that two court battles over public access to streams "are not the first step in a big plot" to interfere with property rights. The litigation revolves around whether the streambeds of the Beaverhead and Dearborn rivers are private or public property, and therefore, whether the rivers are navigable waterways.

United Way funding down

Employees at the University of Montana had contributed $10,378 to this year's United Way campaign as of Nov. 12, a decrease of over 13 percent from figures last year at this time.

However, according to John Hunt, campus coordinator for United Way of Missoula, this year's campaign started two weeks later than did last year's and 16 UM departments have not yet reported their contributions.

"Usually, university contributions come in later than the others," said Hunt. "Last year's total was an increase over previous years, and we hope to at least match that this year."

The total amount contributed by UM last year was $16,650. Hunt said final figures for this year's campaign should be in by next week.

Any student or faculty member interested in contributing to the United Way campaign should contact Hunt at 243-4911 or 243-4913.

Agreement may end NFL strike

NEW YORK (AP) — A tentative agreement was reached last night to end the 57-day-old National Football League strike, the longest and costliest walkout in sports history. The season is to resume Sunday, limited to nine games with an expanded and juggled 16-team playoff format.

The settlement, subject to ratification by player representatives...

tatives of the 28 clubs and the owners' NFL Management Council, and then three-quarters of the owners and a majority of the 1,500 players, was confirmed by management negotiator Jack Donlan, union director Ed Garvey and union president Gene Upshaw.

"I think we have a tentative agreement," Donlan said. "I am hoping it can be ratified tonight. I am happy and elated."

Paul Martha, a former NFL running back and now a lawyer who served as mediator in the final round of negotiations, said the tentative contract totals $1.28 billion over five years.

Donlan said that Super Bowl XVII will be played Jan. 30 in Pasadena, Calif., as originally scheduled.

comment, but late last summer on the floor of the House during a debate, he said the proposed conversion of the missiles would be a good opportunity for President Reagan to stop the project and convince the Soviets to not replace older warheads on their missiles with newer ones. He said he preferred the Air Force not go ahead with the conversion.

A spokesman for Melcher said the senator is in "favor of a bilateral freeze between the U.S. and Russia, to be followed by negotiations to reduce the numbers of actual nuclear weapons in each of the arsenals." Baucus was unavailable for comment.

Jeff Cochran, a spokesman for Gov. Ted. Schwinden, said the governor neither opposed nor favored the conversion. He said the governor had said he did not have adequate information to make a judgement on the issue.

Silverberg said the group needs help in order to prevent the conversion. She said she contacted Beth Loehnen, the representative to the statewide coordinating committee for the I-91 campaign, and a member of Citizens for an MX-free Montana.

Loehnen said her group had formed a committee to decide what to do about the issue and had asked Silverberg to be on it. Loehnen said the committee will not make a decision about the issue for several weeks.

Silverberg said she didn't think it would be possible to stop the Air Force from going ahead with the planned conversion.

"It really depends," she said. "The group is still small. It depends on how committed the state Legislature people and congressmen are. If we don't work, our government's not going to do what we want."
