Grizzlies defeat Vandals handedly

By Thomas Andrew Mendyke
Kaimin Sports Editor

The Montana Grizzlies' match-up zone defense and good shot selection earned them a 28-20 half-time lead and an eventual 58-49 victory over the University of Idaho Vandals last night in the Dahlberg Arena.

The Grizzlies beat Idaho at their own game--defense. Montana out rebounded Idaho 21-10 in the first-half and held the Vandals to a minuscule 31 percent field goal percentage for the game.

Doug Selvig exploded for 23 points and 5 rebounds. He also had three steals in the first-half and five rebounds for the night. It was Selvig's best offensive night of the season.

"It feels real good," said UM Coach Mike Montgomery. "We hit the boards and just played really hard. The team has a right to feel good. Idaho is a good team."

The Grizzlies controlled the tempo from start to finish, and in the second-half, led by as many as 13 points. "We gave up a golden opportunity in the first-half to really put them under," said Montgomery. "The real key to was not to let them get down the floor after a rebound for their fast-break offense. The guys played aggressive, with a lot of confidence and Idaho could not get back in it."

Idaho did have one bright spot in the evening. With 1:56 left in the contest, 6-foot-5-inch senior guard Brian Kellerman, on his last successful attempt of the night, became the all-time Vandal scoring leader with 1,359 points.

This was the last home game against Idaho for seniors Brian Morris, Craig Larsen, and Derrick Pope. "It's kind of weird, it really hasn't hit yet," said Larsen. "We can't afford to let down against Boise." Pope said that beating Idaho the last time home was important to him, and that Griz played the way they should on their home court.

The seniors were thinking about the conference championship. "That's what it's all about," said Pope. "We don't play for second."

Nuclear vigil marks first testing

By Lance Lovell
Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA — Yesterday marked the 32nd anniversary of the first nuclear test explosion fired in the Nevada desert north of Las Vegas.

For eight years after that, residents and military personnel were exposed to lethal levels of radiation emanating from the test explosions.

About 50 people, including legislators and aides, attended a small gathering organized by the Helena Last Chance Peacemakers Coalition to commemorate those who died and those who are suffering from radiation poisoning contracted from the tests.

The vigil featured speakers and local musician Scott Crichton, who opened the event with his performance of "Accept the Risk," a song written by Charlie King about Paul Cooper, a young soldier who died from radiation poisoning as a result of the tests.

As Crichton's voice and the music from his six-string guitar echoed through the rotunda, several passersby stopped to listen to the emotional ballad of Cooper's death.

Many listeners wiped tears from their eyes as Crichton performed.

Jan Whitman of the Plymouth Congregational Church in Helena said that government officials assured military personnel who took part in the tests and the American people that the tests were safe.

The officials knew about the lethal radiation being emitted by the explosions and covered it up until the 1960s, she said.

The contamination and effects of the explosions linger on today, she said.

Another speaker, South Dakota rancher Marvin Kammerer, who went to Russia two months ago as a delegate of Ranchers for Peace, said he is convinced that his efforts to stop the nuclear arms race and nuclear testing are just and right.

"I am a grass-roots rancher," he said. "I consider myself a steward of the soil."

Kammerer said the U.S. Government went against every American principle when it knowingly sacrificed the well-being of hundreds of lives and families for the test explosions.

"It's genocide and we just damn well better admit it," he said. "It's up to us to stop it (further nuclear testing)...The burden is on the decision-makers. Don't let them forget it. Don't let them use national security as a guise for their sins."

Kammerer said he was reminded of his granddaughter when he saw a young girl in the audience. He said that "our decisions" will be ones that the young people of today will have to live with or die because of.

Candles were lit as participants spent a few moments in silent prayer.

Rep. John Vincent, D-Bozeman, said nuclear arms reduction is an issue that transcends all other issues this Legislature faces.

Free tax help program offered

By Tom Harrington
Kaimin Reporter

Students and other individuals who might have trouble filling out their income tax returns can once again rely on the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) program for help.

VITA, formed six years ago, is an Internal Revenue Service-approved program designed to help people with a yearly income of $12,000 or less file their tax returns. The service costs those people "absolutely nothing," said Pete Price, a VITA coordinator.

Price, a senior in accounting at UM, said VITA is composed of accounting majors who have completed an IRS training program. The students have been trained in all aspects of preparing tax returns 1040 and 1040A, he said, and the prepared returns will be reviewed by certified public accountants, who are also "volunteering their time."

Price said there is "potential for us to have a ton of people this year" who could need tax help, because the IRS has cut back on its help, limiting the number of places a confused taxpayer can go to receive aid in preparing his tax returns. He said he and the other students involved are looking forward to the valuable experience that will be gained from working with VITA.

VITA coordinator Judy Inman, UM accounting major, said the volunteer students (five coordinators and about 50 aides) will receive one or two credits from the School of Business Administration, depending on "how much they put into" the program.

Price and Inman said taxpayers seeking help should bring their tax packages, W-2 forms and other necessary tax information to the VITA center, located in the Community Room at Southgate Mall. A VITA outlet for senior citizens will be at the Senior Citizens' Center, 705 South Higgins Ave.

VITA, which is sponsored by the UM School of Business Administration, the Missoula Chapter of the Montana Society of Certified Public Accountants and the Beta Alpha Psi accounting fraternity, will begin Feb. 1 and end March 12.

Sessions at Southgate Mall will be every Tuesday and Thursday from 6 to 9 p.m., and every Saturday from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Sessions at the Senior Citizens' Center will be every Saturday from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. No appointment is necessary.

For more information concerning the VITA program, phone 728-9226, 243-6539 or 243-4182.

Write for lighting

Students should be writing to the Montana Legislature. The University of Montana needs funding, and UM students who care about the education they receive and the conditions under which they receive it need to help convince legislators to allocate the needed funds. Areas that especially need funding include the state work/study program and campus lighting.

Kaimin editorial

The state work/study program needs to be funded to help fill the gap that has been left by cuts in federal student financial aid. This would benefit the entire Montana University System — and in turn benefit the state; an educated populace is a good investment for the state's potential.

Though not a statewide problem, the campus lighting situation is by no means unimportant. Present lighting on the UM campus is inadequate, leaving students unsafe. Students should be able to walk through the campus at night without fear of assault or rape.

Roof repairs, computer equipment and radio equipment are all good, even important — but improved campus lighting is vital.

Nancy and John

John and Nancy are so different that they often marvel at how they ever got along. John is a Catholic. Nancy is an avowed atheist. John is a self-proclaimed 'red-neck'. Nancy is a 'women's libber'. In spite of all this, they have been going together for about two years.

Nancy is pregnant and can't decide what to do. She knows that she does not want the baby. Her only concern is whether she should get an abortion or have the baby and put it up for adoption. John is violently opposed to the idea of an abortion. He is not too hot on the adoption idea either. He has always wanted a child. He would like to raise the child himself, since Nancy doesn't want it.

What should John do?

If Nancy insists on getting an abortion, there is nothing that John can do. Even if he were married to Nancy, his approval would not be required in order for Nancy to have an abortion. John's only hope is to convince Nancy to carry the baby full term.

A child relinquished for adoption by an unwed mother may not be adopted until the parental rights of the father are terminated. The court will hold a hearing to determine the identity of the father and either determine or terminate his rights. If the alleged father appears at the hearing and requests custody of the child, the court will inquire into his fitness and his ability to properly care for the child. The court will give special attention to his effort or lack of effort to make provision for the mother while she was pregnant and for the child upon birth. The best interests of the child will be the court's main consideration.

If John wants to adopt the child, he will need to pay the expenses of the pregnancy and make provision for the care of the child after it is born. He should have his name placed on the birth certificate as the child's father. The court will then contact him to appear at the determination hearing. Before the hearing, he should consider what facts would support a determination of his fitness as a parent. He should also rally evidence that would convince the court that it would be in the child's best interest to be placed in his custody.

Evangelists preach campus rockers on music's evil ways

(CPS) — Former University of Maryland student Sharon Sadeghian was nervous as she stood in front of the school's Hornbake Library on an October morning last semester.

Flanked by three friends holding hammers and record albums, she bravely told the crowd of 200 before her, "The Lord is giving me all the strength I need."

Moments later, after evangelist Tom Short preached that "rock 'n' roll leads to death," Sadeghian began smashing a Led Zeppelin album with a hammer. By the time she and her friends were done, dozens of records were shattered on the library steps.

Preacher Greg Anthony announced his visit to the University of Washington with handbills asking, "Could it be that someone is trying to brainwash you through your stereo or the cassette recorder that's plugged into your ear?"

Rock 'n' roll, it seems, is getting some hard knocks on campuses from coast to coast from Bible-waving, record-smashing evangelists warning students of what Anthony, for one, calls music's "Satanic influence."

Almost out of the blue last term, the preachers began showing up on campuses everywhere.

Georgia evangelist Billy Adams, for instance, has destroyed more than $200,000 in rock vinyl "because it preaches the use of drugs, illicit sex, the occult and rebellion."

Adams preaches on campuses throughout the South, often playing music by AC-DC, Kiss and The Beatles to demonstrate his point.

Jed Smock, perhaps the dean of the campus circuit-riders, has recently added rock 'n' roll to his already-impassioned anti-sex and -drug sermons at schools from Virginia to Kentucky to New Mexico State.

Illinois State students got to hear a last-minute debate in November between Jefferson Starship guitarist Paul Kantner and local minister Wesley Ates. Kantner had arranged the debate after Ates had urged students to boycott a Starship concert and "burn your Starship records on the front steps of the courthouse."

None of the anti-rockers have trouble drawing crowds. Some evangelists have even enjoyed bigger crowds by specializing in the evils of rock.

Nick Pappis, a "Christian record producer" from Florida, conducts college discussions about musicians using symbolism and subliminalism to "brainwash" listeners.

Many album covers, Pappis explains, show occult symbols such as pentagrams, pyramids and broken crosses that can coerce young people into evil deeds.

The Electric Light Orchestra, Black Oak Arkansas and other groups, he charges, use backward masking — recording messages backward on a record — to convey demonic urges to unwary listeners.

"Another One Bites The Dust" by Queen, Pappis says, actually says "Satan must have no limit" when portions of it are played backwards.

Greg Anthony contends that the Rolling Stones' "Sympathy for the Devil" and "Dancin' with Dr. D" in addition to songs by Led Zeppelin and AC-DC, are similar "tributes to Satan."

"Stairway to Heaven" sounds like "My sweet Satan, no other made a path, for it makes me sad, whose power is Satan" when played in reverse, Anthony claims.

"We're concerned not only with the lyrics and album covers, but also with the lifestyles of the musicians and their intentions," says Dan Peters, who along with his two brothers lectures students about rock 'n' roll.

"Many of the rock musicians today enjoy singing about things that are immoral and illegal, such as drugs and sex. The Village People, for instance, have publicly said that they want to make gay people more acceptable through their music."

No one is precisely sure why the anti-rock crusades have appeared now.

"I guess it's an offshoot of the New Right and various fundamentalist Christian movements that have become popular recently," says George Ward of Bowling Green University's Center for the Study of Popular Culture.

"I can see where a lot of people — particularly fundamentalist Christians — might say rock 'n' roll is offensive, but it's a long way to say that there's some kind of plot to convert people to Satan through music."

"And as far as little devils and demonic signs on the album jackets go," says Warner Records spokesman Bob Merlis, "you can see them, so how could they be secret attempts to brainwash people?"

Merlis calls satanic backward masking "a bogus science," adding that the crusades haven't affected record sales.

But after the Kantner-Ates debate at Illinois State, local record stores sold an additional 2,000 concert tickets.

And after Anthony's anti-rock visit to Washington, local record-store owner Bill Larsen says he even sold a few Led Zeppelin and Queen albums to people who wanted to hear the alleged backward masking for themselves.

"Most of the groups that do bizarre-type things like that are only doing it for promotion and attention anyway," says Davis Joyce, a rock and roll historian at the University of Tulsa.

He says he believes the crusaders are "right-wing crazies putting down anything that doesn't fit their tight little value systems." He calls most of their charges "off-the-wall paranoid beliefs."

Milltown water source found contaminated with arsenic

By Jerry Wright
Kaimin Reporter

Since state health officials told them 13 months ago that their tap water was unsafe to drink, Melody Fuchs of Milltown and her family have been hauling drinking water to their home from a gas station about a half mile away.

To bathe, they've had to go to the University of Montana or to homes of friends outside their neighborhood. They have also been unable to use their washing machine, since clothes come out with brown splotches all over them.

The Fuchs's problems are not unique to 32 other Milltown households serviced by four wells that in the spring of 1981 were found to be contaminated by large amounts of arsenic. One of the wells had arsenic levels 10 times higher than levels recommended by the federal Environmental Protection Agency.

Fuchs's house sits at the end of a street overlooking the Clark Fork River and in the distance the Milltown reservoir, suspected origin of the arsenic. While sitting on her kitchen counter, she pointed to ugly brown stains in her sink from the minerals that, along with arsenic, are in some Milltown residents' water.

The only thing her family uses tap water for is to wash dishes and flush toilets, she said. All drinking and cooking water is brought home in five-gallon jugs. An empty jug sat next to her on the sink as she spoke. There is an old woman in the neighborhood who has to rely on the local kids to bring her water because she can't carry it, she said.

Though sediments in the Milltown reservoir are the main suspect for the contaminated water, the source of the contamination has not been definitely determined. In February 1982, UM geology professor Bill Woessner was given a $3,000 grant by the state and the EPA to study groundwater flow patterns in the Milltown area. The study was to try to find the source of the arsenic. Woessner hired environmental studies graduate student Marin Popoff as a research assistant.

From February to May 1982, Woessner and Popoff measured and monitored the groundwater levels in the Milltown area, which are at the confluence of the Blackfoot and Clark Fork rivers. The groundwater system is fairly complex, Popoff said.

Woessner's report to the state said that there were five possible sources of the arsenic: arsenic-laden sediments in the Milltown reservoir, which Popoff said are the most likely source; the Champion pulp mill, an old dumpsite up the Clark Fork River, a natural source or some unknown source.

Since working on the report, Popoff has begun a detailed study of the hydrogeology and hydrochemistry of the area as his graduate thesis. He is taking monthly water samples from wells in Milltown to see if the concentrations of arsenic, manganese and other heavy metals change with time because of influences such as spring run-off. He is also studying the geophysical characteristics of the area to see how they affect groundwater.

Popoff said he wants to concentrate on the Milltown reservoir as the possible source of the arsenic problem. "The longer we work on it the more it seems that's the case," he said.

However, "Milltown is not an isolated problem," Popoff said, "the whole Clark Fork may have arsenic in it."

For now the residents of Milltown must deal with the state and federal governments to see that their problem is taken care of. The EPA in December 1982 listed Milltown and 417 other contaminated sites as having the worst hazardous waste problems in the country.

But before a new well is dug, more studies need to be done so that a solution to the problem will not create more problems later, Popoff said. By shutting off the contaminated wells now, groundwater may rise and contaminate other wells that are now clean, he added.

When a new well is finally dug, Fuchs said, she would like the well to be tested fairly regularly.

"I don't think I'll ever trust water like I used to," she said.

Lady Grizzlies play Idaho tonight, Boise State tomorrow

By Thomas Andrew Mendyke
Kaimin Sports Editor

The University of Montana Lady Grizzlies will play two of the better teams in the Mountain West Athletic Conference when they face the University of Idaho Vandals tonight and the Boise State Broncos tomorrow night in the Dahlberg Arena.

It will be the first time in five years that Montana will play Idaho. Before joining the newly-formed Mountain West Conference this year, Idaho was an NCAA Division II school for women's basketball.

The Vandals are just coming off an upset win over Weber State. They have an overall record of 7-5 and are 2-2 in conference play. Idaho is a good team with size and experience, according to UM Coach Robin Selvig, adding that its main strength is Denise Brose, a six-foot senior forward who is averaging 16.8 points and 6.8 rebounds a game this year.

Brose was a Division II All-American last year for Idaho, and Selvig says that his team has been working on being aware of Brose's location during the game. "It's easier to stop one man," said Selvig. "But to do that you have to give up something on defense, and if another of their players gets hot, you can find yourself in trouble."

Boise, on the other hand, is a more balanced team than Idaho and harder to defend against, said Selvig. "Boise is much like our club," he said. "They play well as a team and have the ability to beat any team in the conference."

"It's gonna be real tough at home this weekend," he said. "Both teams are capable of beating us; it all depends on what we can do."

What the Lady Grizzlies can do was illustrated in the Division I leaders statistics that came out this week. The Lady Grizzlies are second in the nation in scoring defense, allowing opponents an average of 53 points a contest this season.

They are also second nationally in defensive field goal percentage at 34.6 percent. In win-loss percentage, a good indicator of a team's play, the Grizzlies are 12th in the nation with a 13-2 record for a winning percentage of .867.

The Lady Grizzlies have a 3-0 mark so far in conference action and are looking to improve it to 5-0 by the end of the weekend.

Selvig says that one of the big keys to the team's success this season is its balance, and the fact that he has the same players as last year in the key positions. "Balance is definitely our strength," he said. "The girls have played together long enough that they know what each other will probably do and that makes a big difference."

"I think that we need to improve our offensive consistency, and look to increase our field goal percentage," he said. "Also, we are averaging about 18 turnovers a game and I want to see that come down to somewhere around 12."

Selvig said he is not disappointed that the team is not ranked among the nation's top 20, despite their statistics. "We did receive some votes this week but we must win the conference and the conference tournament if we hope to be ranked this season."

Former forestry school dean's arrest shocks colleagues

By Patricia Tucker
Kaimin Reporter

Some University of Montana forestry professors reacted with dismay to the recent arrest in California of Robert Wambach, former dean of the UM forestry school.

Wambach, also a former director of the Montana Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks, was arrested Tuesday in San Luis Obispo, Calif., on two counts of possession of stolen property, conspiracy and the cultivation of marijuana. Wambach, professor and former director of the Natural Resources Management Department at California Polytechnic State University, is accused of possession of a stolen typewriter and an electronic scale together valued at about $2,680, according to security officials at Cal Poly.

The IBM typewriter was allegedly stolen from the wildlife department during June 1980, and the scale, equipped to weigh minute quantities of substances, was stolen in October, according to James Landreth, security director at the California school. Similar charges were filed earlier this month against Margery Ann Miller, a graduate student at Cal Poly and an administrative assistant for Wambach.

Landreth said the allegedly stolen property and two marijuana plants were found by university police officers at the home of Margery Ann Miller. He said officers obtained a search warrant after receiving an anonymous tip.

At UM, Arnold Bolle, forestry school dean emeritus, Wambach's predecessor, said in an interview Wednesday, "I'm just very sorry for him." He said he felt it was "totally impossible" that the charges could be valid, based on his long friendship and professional relationship with Wambach.

"He (Wambach) had a very high sense of right and wrong,"

Bolle said. "He set very high forestry standards for faculty and students. He had a top record and is an extremely gifted man in the whole field of forestry."

Richard Shannon, another UM forestry professor, called Wambach a "close and dear personal friend" and said, "I've been from the Canadian border to the Gulf of Mexico with him (Wambach), and on all occasions he has operated on the highest ethical levels without a exception, from tipping waitresses to always being polite and always considerate and always trying to build people up. I'm very high on him. He was as great a boss as I've ever had in my life."

"It's sad — super, super sad," Thomas Nimlos, UM forestry professor, said in an interview Wednesday. "I think that those of us that worked with him in school have really been shocked" (by the charges leveled against Wambach). "I'm just overwhelmed." Nimlos later said of Wambach: "He's very controversial, no question about it."

When contacted by the Kaimin yesterday, Wambach would say only that his attorney has instructed him not to comment on the charges.

While Wambach was dean, the UM forestry school funds were audited two times, once in 1975 and again in 1977, because of alleged financial irregularities claimed by John Schultz, his associate vice president. Wambach was later cleared of any wrongdoing. While being considered for UM

Wambach was formally admonished by the National Society of American Foresters for remarks he made to a Minneapolis Tribune reporter about another forester, Harold Anderson, who was to be appointed supervisor of a Minnesota national forest. A committee of the foresters' society found that Wambach's recommendations were not based on a "fair and unbiased evaluation."

On another occasion, Richard Landini, then academic vice president at UM, requested in 1974 in a letter to then-UM President Robert Pantzer that Wambach be dismissed as dean. Among the charges Landini listed were Wambach's remarks to the University of Washington that a UM geology professor was a "constant source of irritation and embarrassment."

The comments, which were later reported in an article carried by the Associated Press, stemmed from Robert Curry's attack on the competence of the research programs at the University of Washington and Oregon State University.

Wambach resigned from his post as director of the Montana wildlife department in June 1980.

Americans are so enamored of equality that they would rather be equal in slavery than unequal in freedom.

UM security system "somewhat" understaffed

By Ann Hennessey
Kaimin Reporter

The University of Montana security department is "somewhat" understaffed for its size, but, under present economic conditions and budget restrictions, "I'd say we're OK," said Ken Willett, UM security manager, yesterday.

The norm throughout the country, Willett said, is a ratio of one security officer for every 1,000 people at the university. However, he added, this is not a university standard.

In addition to Willett, who is also trained as a police officer, UM employs eight security officers. There are about 9,000 students enrolled at UM this quarter.

The number of officers on patrol at any one time varies according to the time of day and activities planned. One to two officers are on duty during the day shift, while two to three patrol during the night hours. When an event is planned that will bring a large number of people on campus, such as a concert or athletic event, three officers are on duty.

If he could, Willett said, he would like to increase on-campus training sessions for the security staff, crime prevention education programs and investigation. Coordination between the UM security office and police departments downtown is important, Willett said. UM security has jurisdiction over all UM property, including land around Fort Missoula, and a mile radius surrounding those areas.

"I think we probably don't have jurisdiction over Burger King," Willett said. This amounts to a large area to cover, but the Missoula city and county police departments provide a lot of support, Willett said.

UM security officers attend the Montana Law Enforcement Academy in Bozeman for six weeks of basic training. The students spend more than 250 hours in training, he said. Officers may also enroll in various short courses dealing with specific incidents in law enforcement. Short courses taken by UM security staff last year included courses about sexual abuse of children, bomb investigation and executive management.

The training UM security officers receive is the same training given to city and county police officers throughout Montana.

Presently, three of the security officers are retired Missoula City Police Department officers, giving UM security a total of more than 60 years experience. The officers have held "just about every position" in the city police department, Willett said, giving them a good background in police work.

Training isn't left behind in the academy, though. Because UM security officers carry guns between 5 p.m. and 8 a.m., they must pass an annual shooting test. On January 11 to 13 the officers, including Willett, were tested on both slow-fire and fast-timed shooting. A 70-percent success rate is required to pass. This year the lowest score was 86. Each officer's lowest score is dropped, so that, according to the records, no one fired under 90 percent. If an officer fails the test, he doesn't carry a gun on campus, Willett said.

As far as he knows, Willett said, there has never been any shooting incidents on campus by a UM security officer.

Willett and other UM Physical Plant personnel have submitted a proposal to the university planning council asking that a "sizeable" number of work-study students be hired to act as an escort service and to conduct a peer group program on fire and crime prevention.

"You can't beat peer pressure for getting the point across," Willett said.

across," Willett said.

UM security already employs work-study students for writing tickets, telephone operators and locksmith employees.

Hospice—Working to change attitudes on death

Hospice is an organization helping the terminally ill and their families cope with death and change the attitude in general.

Death "is a part of life," said Kathy Mensing-Rehbein of Hospice of Missoula. Mensing-Rehbein has been a volunteer with Hospice for two years and will soon take over as executive director. "It's just as normal as birth, and yet, for the past 50 to 75 years we have taken our patients — our dying and old people — and put them in institutions and have forgotten how to deal with this aspect of living. Seventy-five percent of all deaths in the United States occur in institutions, which is a horrifying number when you think about it in terms of it being a normal act of living."

Hospice of Missoula began operating in September of 1980, said Kathy Mrgudic, who started the organization and acts as executive director. She is leaving shortly and Mensing-Rehbein will take over.

"There was a bad need in the community for it," Mrgudic said. "There was a large void in the medical system for dying people."

The staff of Hospice includes a director, who oversees the administrative tasks, a nurse coordinator, who oversees the patients, and volunteers, who staff the office and work with patients in the home. The director and nursing coordinator are the only two who are paid.

An interdisciplinary team of professionals donate their time twice a month to review all the cases in consultation with the patients' doctors, Mensing-Rehbein said. Each member of the team evaluates the case from his or her point of view, she said. On the team are a psychologist, a physical therapist, a social worker, a dietitian, a registered nurse, two doctors, an assistant professor of pharmacy and Hospice's nursing coordinator.

At these consultations, things are discussed that could make the patient's situation better, Mrgudic said. For instance, she said, the pharmacist gives suggestions on better ways to ease pain for the patient or the psychologist gives ideas on new techniques for opening communication in the family.

Volunteers work directly with the patients, Mrgudic said. They go into the home and assist the family and patient in whatever ways they are needed, Mrgudic said. Help can range from feeding the patient to listening to a family member. Mrgudic said there are both lay and nurse volunteers and at least one nurse volunteer is assigned to each case to deal with any medical needs a professional would have to handle.

The volunteers "go through 20 hours of pretty intensive training," Mensing-Rehbein said. "They get a lot of theory and information on death such as what to look for both physically and mentally from a terminal patient, she said. They are also encouraged to think about their own feeling on death and the value of life to help them deal with the situation, she said."

Jeannie Collins, a student at UM, volunteered with Hospice last year as part of a social-work practicum. She said the experience didn't change her views on death so much as it changed her views on life.

"Living for the moment — it made me see life should be lived in the present," she said. "I guess I really wasn't all that fearful (of death) but it just confirmed those feelings."

Collins said she isn't volunteering right now but is still working with a 10-year-old leukemia victim that she started working with last spring.

The girl went into remission during the summer and is now out of remission and in her "final lapse," Collins said. "I'm just there for her," she said. "I'm there for her mother too. Her daughter is all she has."

On the psychological side, volunteers are trained in the stages involved in dying and what family members go through.

Elisabeth Kubler-Ross, an expert on death and dying, identified five stages in dying and Mrgudic described them with statements. Those stages are 1) Denial — "Not me." 2) Anger — "Why me?" 3) Bargaining — "Yes me, but..." 4) Depression — "Yes, me." 5) Acceptance — "My time is very close and it's all right." Hospice volunteers are trained to look for these stages and how to deal with them.

As for the reactions of family members, volunteers look for shock, anger, guilt, panic and depression and help support them through whatever feelings they have.

"We work with them roughly for a year or until they don't need it anymore," Mensing-Rehbein said.

"You can't teach someone how to help somebody," she said. "All you can do is hope that you have volunteers who are knowledgeable in the current philosophies, I guess, on death...Listening is the big thing we stress in the training — how to talk to people to get them to talk."

"The patient will, often-times, need to ramble on about his or her life and what it has meant and where it's gone wrong and they can't say those kinds of things to friends or family. It's got to be someone who's a little bit more removed and someone who is, they feel, anyway, just more knowledgeable — kind of an expert."

Volunteers try and open the lines of communication in the family, she said. "We can't work miracles," she said. "If things have been bad in a family for 30 years, just because a person is dying they probably won't change. But a lot of times we can help people open up and say a few of the things they've always wanted to say but couldn't."

Hospice has trained more than 175 volunteers, Mensing-Rehbein said. Many of them have had someone close to them die and take the training to help clarify their feelings and learn more about death, she said.

"We get people who are real peace and spaceship types and we get people who are real down-to-earth rollers in the community," she said.

Hospice believes involving the family in the death process relieves much of the guilt family members sometimes feel when a loved one dies, Mrgudic said.

"The family can say we did everything we could," she said. "They're not denying their feelings because they participated in the process and have already begun grieving."

Mrgudic said people fear death because they are ignorant about it or they don't want to face it.

"A concept people don't want to face is the fact that they're not immortal," she said.

"I'm scared to death of it (death)," said Debbie, a 26-year-old graduate student. She said she's never been close to death so has not thought much about it.

Terry, a 24-year-old student whose father died suddenly two years ago and whose aunt died in a hospice in Minnesota last September said this:

"When my dad died, it took me awhile to get through all the feelings I had — his death was so unexpected. With my aunt, it was different. She'd been in and out of the hospital with cancer and had lived much longer than she was expected to. When she went into the hospice, we knew she wouldn't live much longer and the whole atmosphere of the place made it easier to take."

A rainbow is used as a symbol for hospice as a symbol of "passage." Easing that passage for everyone involved is what Hospice tries to do.

"We can't relieve the pain and sadness over the loss but we can make the experience a good one in the sense that it can be," said Mrgudic.

Ruby Schmidt's husband died at home in November of 1981. He was 48 years old and had cancer. Schmidt said they knew about Hospice through their church and that it was a "family decision" to go there for help. Schmidt has two college-age daughters.

"What they did for us is much more than I thought," Schmidt said. "What they really are is a tremendous support group." She said Hospice helped prepare them all for the death.

"Because of having my husband at home, I learned a lot about the terminally ill," she said. "I realized that terminally-ill people like having people around...There's no harder work in the world than going to the hospital night after night and coming home wondering when something will happen."

Hospice also helped Harold Anderson, 78, when his wife died of cancer in May 1982. She was 77 and had had cancer for eight months. They were involved with Hospice for the last three weeks of her illness, Anderson said.

"They were supportive," he said. "Three members were here the day before she died. Then, two spent the night and all three were there the day she died...Any contributions I give now are to Hospice."

Mrgudic said Hospice has had only one complaint since it began operating. She said it was due to a misunderstanding and was quickly cleared up. But hospices are not for everyone.

Charles Mason, a UM journalism student, experienced the death of his father in a hospital in Washington, D.C. in December 1981. He was 69 and had had cancer for seven years, with the last three being "really bad," Mason said. Mason said he understands that the hospice concept works for some people but said his father was opposed to it, and Mason agreed with him.

"He (his father) wanted it to be as private as possible," Mason said. "He didn't want strangers intruding on what was and is a personal matter. There's nothing more personal than dying."

Mason said his father was given the option of having hospice people come to the house or going into a separate hospice facility but said his father chose to stay in the hospital.

"It was so difficult to deal with and he didn't want to be reminded of it," Mason said. "Even though it was a constant thought, he didn't want to verbalize it and that's what he felt those people would do."

"...It sounds like a good idea. No one can be against it in principle but until you're faced with death, you can't decide whether it (hospice) is right for you. It wasn't right for us."

Janet Wollersheim, the director of clinical psychology at UM, said Missoula's hospice program is "excellent and outstanding."

"Death is something we all have to do alone, yet there are many problems on how we come to grips with it and reconcile it," she said. People tend not to talk about death and hospice is helping to change that, she said.

Kubler-Ross calls ours a "death-defying culture. Americans emphasize youth, beauty and physical fitness. Fewer than 25 percent have wills and many seem to consider death an embarrassment that should not be discussed openly."

"It is almost as if death is un-American," observed British historian Arnold Toynbee.

Mrgudic said American culture is the reason people have problems dealing with death. She said the culture has been death-defying and grief-defying since the turn of the century. As modern technology advanced, medical treatment developed a "separateness," she said. Doctors tended to focus on an organ or disease and forget that people's needs are more than medical. Changing that attitude is one of hospice's main objectives, she said.

George Will, writing in Newsweek magazine, said, "Medicine should prolong life, not the concept of dying...At some point, in terminal cases, such measures as chemotherapy, radiation and surgery could be described as treating the doctor and not the patient."

Mrgudic said there is a new consciousness about death. The notion is that the universe is based on interrelationships and people are only one group of players, she said.

"As organisms, we're more than just bodies and our dying is a dynamic process," she said.

The dying feel special spiritual, mental and emotional abandonment, she said, and they have to be reassured. Helping the dying maintain their individuality is also important, because they cannot function in the roles they've been familiar with all their lives such as wives, mothers, or friends, she said. Hospice helps the dying deal with that, she said.

"People die the way they've lived," she said. We encourage their uniqueness so the person feels like they're living until they're dead.

"Most people think they're either living or dying. Our theory is that we're all living and we're all dying. They aren't two separate times."

Making the person feel that it's all right to die is also important, according to Mensing-

Rehbein. The dying have guilt feelings also, because they feel they're letting their loved ones down, she said.

"We really stress that dying is not a failure," she said. "It's a natural part of living and everything we do is geared toward allowing the person permission to die."

Mensing-Rehbein said a lot of interesting things happen when people die. For example, they bargain, she said.

"They'll say, well, if I can just get through Christmas, then I'll die and they'll die the 26th of December," she said. "...Or they are just holding on, holding on, really fighting it all the way and their long-lost son comes in from Timbuktu and they die the next day."

Different types of care are offered by different hospice organizations. Some have a separate facility, such as St. Christopher's Hospice in London, established in 1967, by Dr. Cicely Saunders. Other hospices are located in and affiliated with hospitals, such as St. Joseph's in St. Paul, Minn. And some offer home care only, such as Hospice of Missoula. They have bereavement programs also.

Much has been said about why the hospice movement is growing so fast. Paul Dubois, in his book "The Hospice Way of Death," cites one of the reasons as "the gap" in the present health-care system. He says hospitals, nursing homes, health-care professionals and counselors are not prepared to deal with death.

Mensing-Rehbein attributes the movement to a change in lifestyles.

"We don't have the extended family unit any more," she said. "I think when we had that there wasn't a need for hospice because people just normally took care of their own. Without that unit, hospice is needed to help the dying and their families."

THE WORLD

• Thousands of primary and secondary school teachers went on strike in Quebec, Canada, yesterday, joining a day-old walkout by public employees despite government warnings that strikers are defying the law and may face heavy fines. Reports from Montreal, Quebec City and Chicoutimi said teachers bundled up against the sub-freezing cold and set up picket lines outside schools at 8 a.m. Quebec Premier Levesque, after a Cabinet meeting in Quebec City, said the government was preparing charges against striking public workers under Quebec's Labor Code. Strikes by public workers are illegal.

THE NATION

• A B-52G bomber parked on a maintenance ramp exploded in a huge fireball yesterday, killing five people and injuring eight others at Grand Forks Air Base at Grand Forks, N.D., authorities said. Damage was estimated at $38 million. Col. Frank Horton, commander of the 321st Missile Wing, said the eight-engine plane had flown a training mission Wednesday night and was undergoing routine maintenance when its fuel exploded in a flash fire, destroying all of the body except the tail section. It was not immediately known what caused the fuel to ignite.

say they'll be ready for any "thug" who may think a police strike has left the city of 10,000 an easy mark. Businessmen have organized a committee to patrol stores in cars and on foot until the city's first police strike is resolved. The entire force of 18 police officers and seven dispatchers in Anaconda and surrounding Deer Lodge County went on strike early Wednesday. No negotiations are scheduled and the police chief told the city and county residents to "do anything they have to to protect their property."

Lobbyist to discuss budget today

By Mark Grove
Kaimin Staff Reporter

Three proposed University System budgets being considered by the Legislature and their potential affect on UM will be discussed at noon today in the University Center Montana Rooms.

UM student lobbyist Jeanne-Marie Souvigny will discuss how the three budgets — proposed by Gov. Ted Schwinden, the Board of Regents and the Legislative Fiscal Analyst (LFA) — may affect such state-funded programs as the Forestry Research Station and work-study.

The purpose of the workshop, Souvigny said, is to educate students on what the budgets mean to UM and encourage them to write letters to their legislators.

In these letters, students should recommend programs they would like to see funded.

Because Montana's overall budget is tight, she said, UM will probably not get as much money as is hoped for. She said the LFA's budget, which is based on the lowest enrollment figures available, may be adopted. This would provide the least amount of money possible to Montana state universities and colleges.

The LFA's budget predicts enrollment at UM for 1984 to be 8,163, compared to the Board of Regents' prediction of 8,356 and Schwinden's 8,176. The LFA's General Fund allotment is also the lowest of the three, she said.

Native Americans plan conference and powwow

By Barbara Fermanis
Kaimin Reporter

Plans are underway for the University of Montana Kyi-Yo Club's 15th Annual Conference and Powwow, which members discussed at their first meeting expressing Montana's stand against the nuclear arms race, including Joint Resolution 10, introduced by freshman Rep. Mike Kadas, D-Missoula, will be heard in a public hearing on February 7.

of the quarter Tuesday night.

Kyi-yo is the Blackfoot Indian tribe's name for grizzly.

The club was started in the early 1960s by students, predating the Native American Studies program here, which began in 1970.

Colorful murals depicting figures, fish and animals cover the walls of the club's headquarters in the Native American Studies Building. Talk flowed freely of posters, publicity, artwork, beadwork, Indian foods, committees and last, but not least, costs. The Conference is the leading and most costly event the Kyi-Yo Club sponsors, running as high as $15,000.

Held every spring for two to three days at the UM Fieldhouse, the Conference has two parts. One is educational, complete with workshops, panels and nationally known as well as local speakers. Ted Kennedy and Buffle Saint Marie spoke here at the first Conference in 1969.

The other part is the festive powwow, "one of the largest held in the Northwest," said Ken Peppion, adviser to the club and assistant director of Native American Studies. Ceremonial and contest dancing is done in traditional and contemporary costumes. Native Americans from all over the Northwest and as far as the Southwest travel here for the Conference, he said.

Native American students, representing 31 tribes at UM, are automatically in the club, but it is open to all aspects of the club from working on the club's bi-weekly newsletter, Bear Facts, to planning events, said club President Arthur "Arsh" Stifferm. Stifferm, who went to his first Conference and Powwow here as a high-school freshman, has been in the club for two years and was elected president last Spring Quarter.

Correction

The story in yesterday's Kaimin on ASUM Lobbyist Jean Marie Souvigney's address to Central Board contained three factual errors.

The story attributed Souvigney with the statement that University of Montana budgeting is based on the number of students taking seven or more credits per academic quarter. Souvigney, however, stated that budgeting is based on the number of full-time equivalency students, which are undergraduates taking at least 15 credits per academic quarter and graduate students carrying at least 12 credits per academic quarter.

The story also credited Souvigney with saying that if UM tuition increases, it would still be 6 percent less than tuition costs at peer universities. However, Souvigney said if UM tuition increases to 100 percent of the tuition of its peer institutions, UM should be funded at 100 percent of the amount given its peer universities.

Souvigney was also credited with the statement that enrollment at universities will probably decrease due to a decrease in the number of students graduating from high schools. Souvigney said the net numbers of students enrolled in universities will probably increase, due to an increase in the number of returning students and students enrolling after a lapse of time between graduating from high school and enrollment in a university.
