Course Description

This participatory course introduces students to the technical aspects of museum work as well as the ethical ramifications of these methods as they are applied in ethnographic and archaeological museums and collections facilities. The course covers both theoretical and practical components including the history of and debates over the philosophical nature of museums, the politics of memory and belief, and current issues faced by museums.

Museums have long played a vital role in the preservation of invaluable physical artifacts, manuscripts, books, and documents, but they have also been important scholarly research institutions and accessible gateways for the public to explore, engage with, and learn about culture and history. In this course students will consider theoretical issues such as the role of material culture in scholarly work and topics related to interpretation, preservation, and educational outreach. However, the intent is also to introduce students to a number of more practical aspects of museum work including collection accessioning, cataloging, curation, exhibit design, and interpretive label composition.

Learning Objectives

- Students will learn to think critically about the development and role of museums in Western and Non-Western cultures
- Students will develop a greater understanding of the issues and politics significant to the museum field
- Students will demonstrate and apply basic knowledge of the history and organization of museums
- Students will learn to evaluate written texts and exhibitions
• Students will discuss in written and verbal form current issues in the philosophy of museums, cultural patrimony, interpretation of objects, and the role of museums of society
• Students will acquire basic skills in the technical aspects of museum work

Course Structure
This course meets for 50 minutes, three days a week, throughout the semester. Class meetings will include lectures, in-class activities/discussions, hands-on museum work, writing assignments, and exams geared toward students’ understanding of the ways anthropological collecting and museology influences the way we perceive and represent other cultures based upon their material culture. Be prepared for class by completing the assigned readings and any writing assignments before class.

Attendance
Attendance will be taken each class period. There will be some in-class projects and participation exercises that require attendance to get full points. Attending every class meeting is very important since we cover a great deal of material during the semester. Information and experiences presented in class go beyond that found in your textbooks and readings and will reflect topics on the exams. Additionally, material generated from class discussions and activities may be included on the exams.
