University planning to focus on Bucklew's five priorities

Editors Note: This is the first part of a two-part series.

By Jill Trudeau

Kaimin Contributing Reporter

In his convocation speech of Oct. 14, University of Montana President Neil Bucklew outlined five priority areas for university planning over the next several years. The five priority areas are: student enrollment maintenance; general education; select program development; a research agenda for the university and communications.

In addition, Bucklew appointed an "author" to oversee each area.

Student Enrollment Maintenance

The author for student enrollment maintenance is Maureen Curnow, associate professor of foreign languages, who has served on recruitment committees in the past.

Curnow said the area involves "retention" of students as well as recruitment. UM loses 37 percent of all freshmen before they enter their fourth quarter of college. She said the UM figure is higher than the national average.

However, Curnow said the UM open enrollment policy, which permits any Montana high school graduate to attend the university, may be one cause of the high drop-out rate.

Curnow said a major concern of hers is to make the transition from high school to college easier for freshmen.

"We are putting freshmen into classes that are too big," Curnow said.

A possible solution to the problem would be to have smaller classes and more teacher-student contact, Curnow said. She said more teaching assistants and graders could be alternatives to the expense of hiring more professors.

"We need to look more at targeted recruiting," Curnow said. She said this involves recruiting particular groups, such as honors students, transfer students and students who have taken foreign languages.

General Education

David Bilderback, professor of botany and the author for general education, said he was picked because of his work on the general education committee last year.

Bilderback said the faculty senate has already approved, in theory, a general education requirement for all students that has two sections.

- A competency requirement in math, writing, and a foreign or symbolic language (e.g., computers or logic).

- A distributional or "breadth" requirement for certain courses in the expressive arts, literature and artistic studies, historical or cultural sciences, social science, ethics and natural science.

Bilderback said the program is in the process of being implemented.

His job will be to suggest to Bucklew ways of dealing with resource problems, Bilderback said.

For example, the philosophy department is not staffed to teach ethics to an entire freshman class. Bilderback said he is considering applying for a federal grant that would fund the training of teachers outside the philosophy department to teach ethics.

Select Program Development

Tom Roy, associate professor of social work, is the author of select program development.

"My understanding of my charge is two-fold," Roy said. "Number one — to come up with some set of standards to guide planning in the future; number two... (to make) recommendations about which areas deserve emphasis."

Possible programs for Roy to suggest this year, according to Bucklew's address, include general education design, faculty and staff development and international studies programs.

"The need to implement the general education program has to be the top priority for this university at this time," Roy said.

Board receives Briggs' unfair labor charge

By Brian L. Rygg

Kaimin Contributing Editor

The "unfair labor practice charge" filed this week by Walter Briggs, associate professor of computer science, claims that the University Teachers' Union "has breached its duty to fairly represent" those covered by the contract it negotiates.

The Montana Department of Labor and Industry Board of Personnel Appeals confirmed yesterday that the charge had been received, but because Robert Jensen, personnel appeals administrator, was not in the office yesterday no official reaction to the charge was made.

Because he will be "obviously involved" in arguing before the board against the charge, UTU lawyer Dan Kemmis said, he does not want to present his arguments in the press beforehand.

Briggs' document charges that the union has "both covertly and overtly discriminated against those employees in the (bargaining) unit who are not members of the UTU." The bargaining unit comprises the half-to full-time members of the University of Montana faculty, excluding the School of Law, who are represented by the UTU in the collective bargaining process.

According to the charge, the controversial "union security" section of the collective bargaining agreement ratified last month was not negotiable and therefore not legitimately part of the contract.

Montana law allows negotiable items to include wages, hours, fringe benefits and conditions of employment, the charge states. Because the contract specifies that failure to pay the fees shall not "result in termination of employment or otherwise affect the terms and conditions of employment," Briggs said, the section is not a condition of employment and thus does not fall within any of the negotiable categories.

TOM ROBISON, post-graduate student in elementary education, walks across campus with his bicycle and his "effigy of Joe." Joe, a mid-term project, is supposed to represent the blue collar worker in America, Robison said. (Staff photo by Martin Horejsi).

Kemmis said that security sections are "obviously negotiable items. They're routinely negotiated."

The UTU interpretation of the union security section works to "punish" non-union members, Briggs said. Non-members paying the same amount as UTU dues (currently 0.9 percent of an academic year's salary) in equivalent fees or to charity would not receive the same benefits as union members.

According to a newsletter "Focus" distributed by the UTU, these "side benefits" include "special liability insurance, accident insurance while on University business, discounts on car rentals, pharmaceuticals, etc."

The complaint document further charges that the UTU "represents only the personal interests of its executive committee" and has "restrained and coerced" faculty members in the exercise of their rights.

Briggs is the coordinator of public relations communications for a group formed last week, the Faculty for Responsible Action.

At the group's second meeting yesterday afternoon, FRA Chairman Walter Hill, professor of chemistry, described Briggs' formal charge as part of a "three-pronged attack" on the UTU and the union security section.

The second part, Hill said, is the FRA's hiring a law firm to investigate the collective bargaining agreement and possibly fight it in court.

Patrick Shannon, associate professor of business and vice chair of the FRA, said that a Helena law firm experienced in labor law has expressed interest in the case.

Opinions

Let Us Breathe

Welcome to Missoula, home of the University of Montana. Please turn on your headlights.

The attitude of most Missoula wood-burners is that the city should be considered polluted only when smoke detectors in homes go off because of the smoke outside. You can't lose anything with that philosophy except maybe your life.

Kaimin Editorial

When a person can't go outside without feeling ill or gasping for air, the people and their system have failed. Missoula has failed. The recently adopted wood-smoke regulations fall short of keeping the city's air safe to breathe. They only give the city the right to fine wood-burners during air alerts and when they create large amounts of smoke. Thus the cycle begins: burn, alert, alert ends, burn, alert....

A change of attitude and laws is all that can save this city from becoming the armpit of the West. Until people realize that life and health are more precious than money, those changes cannot take place.

With the constant threat of nuclear war and massive pollution problems being discovered, the hopes for a brighter future are dim. When a city doesn't care about what it does to its air, those faint hopes are diminished.

Letters

Contrasts

Editor: The Montana Kaimin of November 4, 1983, was an interesting study in contrasts when one looks at the Letters column.

The two letters I think of were titled "Schuster" and "No benefits."

"Schuster," written by Heidi Ostrom, was a letter dedicated to one of our number who left us recently and was a fitting tribute to someone who seemed to be a fine teacher.

"No benefits," by Paul T. Clark, was a letter that was filled with hostility and misused humor, which fulfilled its title.

Heidi reminded us that we do form bonds at this university, bonds that will affect us for the rest of our lives. A reminder that even the best of people will stop living.

Paul reminded us that sarcasm doesn't work unless the author makes it clear he doesn't believe what he is saying. A reminder that there are many people who do not see beyond their own little reality.

Heidi made me want to know Mrs. Schuster and made me respect and understand the professors I have more. Heidi reminded me that it is not only the students who make the university, it is also the teachers who guide us.

Paul made me angry. A university is an environment for learning, understanding, and acceptance of new ideas, people and happenings. There is no room in a university for thinking such as expressed in his letter. When someone with a view filled with personal slurs against people he does not know gets a forum to express those ideas, there is a great feeling in me that maybe freedom of speech should be seen as a responsibility and not a right.

With all these differences in the two letters, perhaps the most disgusting is this one. Heidi's letter, clearly the better of the two, will be forgotten as soon as it is read. Paul's letter is still being fumed and fretted over, with a lot of attention directed towards a reprehensible mis- sive.

Let's give Heidi and Mrs. Schuster the attention they deserve. Controversy is always much ado about nothing. Let's bury the memory of Paul's letter. Let's hear more about a person who will be missed. Thank you for the space to speak.

Merciful father

Editor: In the name of God, Most Gracious, Most Merciful. Executions, executions, torture! That is all that seems to happen in Iran these days at least as far as the Western media and the antirevolutionaries are concerned. A person who is unfortunate enough to have only these as the source of news on Iran is liable to think that the mullahs have run amuck and are killing every possible opponent they can lay hands on! Numerous documents including a report from "the Board of Investigation of the Rumors of Torture in Iran's Prisons" prove these horrendous accusations about the Islamic Republic to be nothing but fabricated stories. Let us look at the undeniable facts: It is difficult even for the worst enemies of the revolution to deny the mass support the Islamic government of Iran enjoys. This government has not usurped power in any way. It has not been installed by a foreign power as the Shah was in 1953. It has not come by way of coup d'etat. The Islamic government is based on a Constitution prepared and voted on by the nation as a whole. It is a government elected by the people. The CIA-backed terrorists do not accept the Constitution on which the Islamic Republic is based. They have struck all over the country putting bombs in mosques, exploding dynamite in public squares, blowing men, women, children to bits at random and indiscriminately. Armed assault on a duly constituted, legitimate, Islamic government is a serious crime which must be dealt with sternly and without the slightest wavering.

The people of Iran have given tremendous sacrifices to maintain and support the Islamic regime. Tens of thousands of Muslims gave their lives in the movement against the Shah. Thousands have sacrificed themselves in the struggle against the Ba'athist invasion and in the effort to save Kurdistan from the Imperialist agencies. Such a government and such a people have every right to govern themselves according to the sacred laws of Islam.

The Iranian Muslim Students of UM

Not—a—grad

Editor: My letter on Kaimin orthography appeared October 28th. All well and good, but why did you change my signature block? I am certainly not a "post-graduate" student, as you have it. Did you really believe me too cloddish to know my own student status at UM? "Post-Baccalaureate" refers to a person who has a bachelor's degree in some major or another, is taking courses at UM, but has not enrolled and is not seeking a degree from a formal graduate school program. The term is approved of, and in use, by the UM registrar's office.

Apparently you committed a journalistic sin, that of assuming you knew whereof you spoke. A long-time member of the American Newspaperwomen's Club (my mother) told me that good journalists always, check, check, re-check, and never assume anything. All you would have had to do was call the registrar's office to find out what the term meant. Here it is again. Please don't change it this time—I'm tired of being ribbed by people in my department.

P.S. There are also students here in the status of "graduate, non-degree." I'll let you do the research on that one yourself.

For heaven's sake

Editor: In reference to Mr. Paul T. Clark's letter of Nov. 4:

Is this seriously the type of thinking our School of Business is breeding? Is this really the best Montana has to offer in its education of the businessperson? I would hope that somebody from the Business Dept. would refute at least some of Mr. Clark's egocentric and sexually paranoid statements in order to save some face!

The University of Montana's Fine Arts Department, because of its reputation, consistently attracts a very high percentage (much higher than Business Ed.) of out-of-state students. Since you are supposedly a business major, Paul, you should understand that the label "out-of-state" is synonymous with "higher tuitions." In order to obtain these "higher tuitions" the facilities must be attractive and functional.

It would be fun to watch you, Mr. Clark, take one year of Fine Arts and see if you have time to write any more incredibly gauche letters. Fine Arts is one of the most demanding curriculums on campus and anybody who makes it through ought to be congratulated. They can actually do more than just punch a calculator! Now it would appear to me, and I may be mistaken, Mr. Clark, that you probably read such heavy material as, oh say, Time Magazine and your vast experience in watching TV has led you to appreciate Good Morning America—for intellectual stimulation—and Dukes of Hazzard for the high quality entertainment. Let me remind you that the people who are connected with almost every aspect of these stimuli have at one time or another taken Fine Arts courses. I know that it is hard for you to handle but it is the reality.

Video is one of the fastest growing markets in the world. (You do understand what "market" means?) Where would we train those in video technology if they didn't have facilities in which to work? Now, you contend that business people are in high demand. It's obvious that you have not read Time magazine as closely as you should. There is a glut in your market, dear sir. One can see that by looking at those tell-tale lines during registration. Of course, we already know you have a hard time with reality.

Speaking of reality, Paul, any astute study of sexual preferences will reveal that homosexuality is equally present in all professions including truck drivers and bithness (sic) people. The same sort of studies—those not sponsored by Jerry Falwell and Phyllis Schlafly—will also point out repeatedly that the loudest preferences are often frightened of their own repressed sexual tendencies and uncomfortable with their present sexual roles. So for heaven's sake, Paul, don't look in the closet!

Clarification

Yesterday's Kaimin editorial encouraging students to write more letters to the editor stated that we will not accept any more letters in response to the one written by Paul T. Clark the week before last. However, that doesn't mean we won't print the responses to Clark submitted before Monday. Those letters will be printed as soon as we can fit them in. We apologize for any misunderstanding on this matter.

Genetic research produces new insulin type for diabetics

By Bethany R. Redlin
Kaimin Reporter

The microscopic bacterium, E. coli, floats contentedly in its nutrient solution and, like all other organisms on the earth, is busily producing chemicals needed for its survival in this world.

But this particular bacterium is doing more than just what comes naturally.

The genes of a special strain of E. coli bacteria have been altered through recombinant DNA technology, more commonly known as genetic engineering, and they are not only producing the bacteria's own vital chemicals, but are also manufacturing human insulin.

Insulin is used in the treatment of diabetes.

That insulin is now being commercially produced and sold throughout the United States and Great Britain by the Eli Lilly Company, a large corporation that produces human health, agricultural and cosmetic products.

Idele Morgan, a sales representative with Lilly and a 1977 graduate of the University of Montana School of Pharmacy and Allied Health Sciences, told her audience of about 30 people Saturday that the human insulin "is the first human health care product to be made available through recombinant DNA technology." It is also the only product available to date.

The insulin, marketed under the brand name Humulin, is "chemically and physically identical to human insulin" unlike other available types which are derived from animal insulins, according to Morgan.

Its manner of production is one of the biggest advantages of the new insulin because it virtually assures unlimited quantities of a highly purified product for the future, she said. Shortages of insulin had been expected by many scientists who predicted that the world population of insulin-using diabetics would double by the year 2000, according to Morgan.

Although Humulin performs safely and effectively, it has not demonstrated a clear superiority to the best animal insulins on the market, Morgan said, adding that it had been initially hoped that the human insulin would not stimulate the body to produce antibodies against it.

Antibodies are chemicals produced to attack "foreign" substances, and insulin antibodies are found in a majority of people who use animal insulin. The presence of the antibodies can cause rashes or resistance to the insulin requiring higher doses, but such incidences are rare.

However, the hope for zero antibodies as a result of the human insulin has not proven true, Morgan said.

"But the antibodies do decrease when you switch from purified animal insulin to human insulin, although the levels are still higher than found normally," Morgan said.

She advocated the use of human insulins, despite higher costs, because they were devoid of "animal impurities" which "can't be good for you."

Morgan's presentation was arranged by the Region 7 Student American Pharmaceutical Association that held its mid-year meeting in Missoula last weekend. The association is a national professional society for pharmacy students.

Missoula Children's Theatre will open its community season of musicals beginning next week with "Mame," which will open Nov. 16 and run through Nov. 20 at the Wilma Theatre. Curtain time for evening performances will be 8. Matinees will be performed Saturday and Sunday at 2 p.m.

Joe Mussulman, University of Montana professor of music, will be featured as Beauregard Pickett Burnside. Severt Phil- leo, sophomore, drama, will play the role of Patrick; and the exceedingly familiar Julie Moore, who holds a bachelor's degree in acting and directing from UM, will play the part of Agnes Gooch, Patrick's nanny.

Also appearing will be Mary Sue Daniels, sophomore, radio-television and drama, as Gloria.

Tickets for the show are $8.50, $7 and $6, reserved, for the evening performances and $5 general admission ($4 for senior citizens and students) for the matinees. For reservations and further information call 721-1911.

Judge rules against gay groups' recognition quest

(CPS)--In what many consider a landmark case in gay student groups' efforts to gain recognition as official organizations on private campuses, a judge has ruled that Catholic Georgetown University does not have to recognize gay student groups on its campus.

Associate D.C. Superior Court Judge J. Sylvia Bacon, in an opinion released 20 months after she heard arguments in the case, ruled it would be unconstitutional to force Georgetown to abide by the D.C. Human Rights Act of 1977, which makes it illegal for schools to discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation.

Enforcing the act "in this case places a burden on Georgetown's free exercise of religion as set forth in the First Amendment," Bacon said.

Georgetown gays say they'll appeal the ruling to a higher court.

"There are great grounds for overturning the decision," asserts Ronald Bogard, the students' lawyer. Bacon "offered a rather bizarre reason (for overriding D.C. law)."

If the decision does stand, he said it "suggests that city ordinances around the nation are powerless against religious institutions. They can discriminate, and say that the law doesn't apply to them."

The gay groups at Georgetown sued in 1980 after their year-long battle to gain official recognition through normal channels failed.

Getting official recognition would guarantee them on-campus office space, mailing services, and the chance to apply for student activities funding.

"Pragmatically speaking, the decision won't affect the groups," claims Beth Wilson, co-chair of the Undergraduate Gay People of Georgetown.

"We'll continue to operate at the same level, putting up posters and holding meetings," she says.

Georgetown's lawyers had argued that Catholic doctrine views homosexuality as "gravely evil" and "morally wrong," and that recognizing the group would be an act of apostasy.

Official subsidy and support of a gay student group would be interpreted by many as an endorsement of the gay movement," explains William Schuerman, GU's associate dean of students.

Bacon ruled that the First Amendment prohibits the courts from interpreting religious beliefs or interfering with the university's free exercise of its beliefs.

But "Georgetown speaks out of both sides of its mouth," lawyer Bogard says. "It is secular when it applies to the government for grants, yet it is sectarian when it wants to violate D.C. law."

In Dallas, Southern Methodist's student government last week also denied funding to a campus student group, mostly — in the words of one student senator — to demonstrate "we're not going to openly tolerate homosexual activity on this campus."

At public Texas A&M, a group of doctors has filed a friend-of-the-court brief in a case in which campus gays are trying to force university recognition of their group. The doctors oppose recognition of the group on the grounds homosexuality is linked to Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome.

Scuba-diving classes to be held

Two separate scuba-diving classes will be given this January at the Grizzly Pool.

Denny Anderson, who runs his class out of his Gull Boats business, will start a class that will run for six weekends as soon as he has enough students sign up. Steve Larango, whose YMCA-sponsored class will take four weekends to complete, plans to do the same.

The instructors rent the Grizzly Pool during off hours, but the courses cannot be taken for university credit.

"Safety first" is the watchword for both classes, and students start out with swimming evaluations and water-survival techniques. Anderson and Larango said that during each of their 10 years of diving instruction, none of their students have been injured.

Part of this record is due to the extensive classroom study prior to diving. The students learn about decompression, equipment failures, underwater hazards and other details of diving.

Practical application starts in the Grizzly Pool. The students practice techniques and then learn how to cope with emergencies.

Once graduated, students are certified, which allows them to rent equipment and have air tanks filled anywhere in the world.

The cost for the classes, including equipment, is $200 for Anderson's and $235 for Larango's. For more information, call Gull Boats or the Missoula YMCA.

Shannon said the firm asked not to be identified yet because it has not yet taken the case, but he added that the firm has a history of being on the management side in labor disputes and has a member who has recently done research on a security section.

The firm is supposed to call Shannon tomorrow morning with an opinion about whether the contract could be successfully fought in court, he said, and he will give that report to the FRA at a meeting that afternoon.

The third prong of the attack, Hill said, can be summarized as "Let 'em come and get us" — some faculty members (including Briggs) do not plan to pay the money to the union or its authorized alternate charities, even if the UTU and the contract are left intact by the other prongs.
