Battered Women's Shelter celebrates anniversary

By Bethany R. Redlin
Kaimin Reporter

The Missoula YWCA Battered Women's Shelter that has been a temporary refuge for 1,041 women and their 1,334 children since it began in October 1977, is commemorating its sixth anniversary this week.

The Missoula Shelter provides a "time-out" period for women who have been abused, according to Lois Doubleday, director of the program.

The Missoula shelter, located at 1130 W. Broadway, will be celebrating "Shelter Week," which runs Sunday through Saturday. Shelter Week was established to raise money for the shelter and to increase community awareness of the program.

Women in need of the shelter are not always physically abused, Doubleday said. Many are suffering from psychological or emotional abuse.

"The media has created an image of abused women as having black eyes, stitches and broken bones," she said. "But no physical abuse ever occurs without emotional abuse and that emotional abuse can be more devastating than any beating.

"For all abused women there is damage to her self-esteem."

As of mid-November, 174 women had sought shelter this year. Those who need shelter may stay for three to five days and may return at any time. Women needing help are also encouraged to call any time.

Doubleday said the shelter is full and probably will remain so through the rest of this year.

"We're always busy on holidays," she said. "It's a stressful time for many families."

In addition to those seeking shelter, about 200 more women are counseled over the phone each year.

The shelter provides peer counseling and support by trained staff and volunteers.

Doubleday said the staff does not advise any of the women seeking help to either leave their husbands or return to them.

"That is their decision," she said. "If we were to make that decision for them we would be abusing them."

However, should any woman decide to leave her spouse, the staff will help her find housing, legal aid, counseling, childcare, financial help and employment.

A discussion on the misconceptions and realities surrounding domestic violence will be presented Wednesday at 7 p.m. in the Montana Rooms of the University of Montana's University Center.

Doubleday and other members of the Battered Women's Shelter staff will participate in

Purl says film series is 'voyeurism legitimized'

By Richard Venola
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Kids mix them with popcorn for a good time.

Adults use them to escape the monotony of everyday life.

The elderly use them as a catalyst for memories.

But can we really say what makes the difference between a good film and one that makes us want to retch in the aisle?

If you enjoy movies, but have gone through life not really understanding the nuances and subtle messages that others see in movies, the solution is right in your student catalog.

It's no longer necessary to go to Cannes or Westwood to unveil the mysteries of the Silver Screen.

The University of Montana's four-year-old Interdisciplinary Film Program combines the pure enjoyment of film as entertainment with serious study of the art from a critical viewpoint.

But don't rush right out and buy a beret and a scarf. The UM's program teaches critical appreciation of the art and leaves the "nuts and bolts" of film production to Montana State University, according to Doug Purl.

Purl, an assistant professor of English and one of the founders of the program, said the program's purpose is to understand and recognize film as an art form and a powerful influence in everyday life. He said the study of film "amplifies the enjoyment of movies, instead of removing it."

Studying film is important, he said, because "it's one of the most powerful sources of moral instruction in our lives." He added that film is exciting because it is "discreet voyeurism."

"I mean, what do you call it when you sit in the dark and observe two people work out the pleasures and frustrations of life? Besides, it's the only voyeurism legitimized by the registrar and the campus police," Purl said.

Frederick McGlynn, an assistant professor of philosophy and another founder of the program, said the program is actually a loose collection of classes from diverse departments. He said the purpose of gathering them together is to prevent wasting money and overlapping classes.

Film should be studied as an art in its own right, not just as a derivative of drama or literature, McGlynn said.

The classes offered vary from quarter to quarter, depending on the whim of the instructors and how much money they have to rent films.

Toole declares candidacy

By Eric Troyer
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Ward Four Alderman John Toole threw his hat in the ring for mayor last night at the Missoula City Council meeting.

Toole, whose term expires on Dec. 31, has served for four elected years and two appointed years on the council. He is the first council member to announce his candidacy to replace the late Mayor Bill Clegg.

"I have the example of Bill Clegg to follow," Toole said after the meeting. "If I can use him as a guide, I can't get into trouble."

About 15 people have submitted applications for the mayor's position, including ASUM President David Bollinger and Richard Hager, a post baccalaureate candidate in forestry and communication at the University of Montana.

The council is accepting applications and nominations until Dec. 5. Screening of applicants will end on Dec. 11 and voting will begin on Dec. 12. Under state law, a new mayor must be chosen by Dec. 16.

New stadium will increase parking problem on campus

By Gary Jahrig
Kaimin Senior Editor

The proposed construction of a football stadium on the University of Montana campus will create major parking problems, according to UM officials, who acknowledge no plans have been made to deal with the anticipated increase in campus parking.

Glen Williams, UM vice president of fiscal affairs, and Michael Easton, UM vice president of student and public affairs, both said the present parking areas on campus are already filled most of the time. However, neither Williams nor Easton could offer any concrete plans for increased parking if the stadium is built.

A 16,000-seat stadium is planned to be built between the Harry Adams Field House and the base of Mount Sentinel. A Stadium Committee, formed last January by the university administration, recommended that a new stadium be constructed on campus so the stadium could be used for general recreation as well as athletic events.

Williams said university officials are currently "considering every nook and cranny on campus" for possible new parking areas. He added that the possibility of expanding existing parking facilities on campus is also being explored.

The task of planning new parking areas has been assigned to the Stadium Committee and the UM Campus Development Committee, Williams said.

Easton, chairman of the Stadium Committee, said that no action will be taken on the parking matter until an architect has been selected to design the stadium. He said the architect should be chosen sometime next month.

The architect's three main responsibilities will be to design the stadium, investigate the feasibility of covering the stadium with a dome in the future and develop adequate parking facilities for the stadium, Easton said.

"We are aware that the parking problem needs to be addressed," Easton said, adding that it will have to wait until sometime next year.

Some like it straight and some like it curly

They used to have straight hair.

On Monday, two of my co-workers at the University of Montana Food Service showed up with permanents. They both looked nice, but, accustomed as I was to their "straight" images, it took me a while to get used to the change.

For some reason, it seems as if everyone who has straight hair wants curly hair and vice versa. As a person cursed since the age of two with terminally curly hair, I have never understood the yearning of some misguided souls for such a curse. However, I am informed that many fortunate possessors of straight hair would gladly sell their grandmothers to possess curls.

I think they should be committed.

For me, curly hair has been an unmitigated burden, second only to having been forced to take an entire year of calculus during my freshman year of college. Even curly hair is not as bad as calculus.

Until I was 14, I had shoulder length hair. That is...it was shoulder length when I pulled it straight. It had a tendency to curl in all directions and a few that aren't listed, making its exact length questionable. I hated it.

I tried anything to straighten it. I ironed it, but my mother, blest with straight hair which she refused to let me inherit, was unsympathetic. She's one of those strange people who likes curls.

I threatened to shave my head a few times, but never went quite that far. I was afraid it would grow back curlier than before.

Finally, at 14, I had it cut as short as it possibly could be without being a crew cut. Since then, my hair and I have been in uneasy truce...but I still wish it were straight.

It seems as if no one is ever satisfied with the way he or she looks. Hair isn't the only problem area, either.

For instance, a good friend of mine says he's short. I think anyone who is taller than me is tall, but at 5-foot-5, he considers himself short. And he isn't always happy about it.

I am sure that if he could, like Alice in Wonderland, eat a mushroom that would make him grow either taller or shorter, he would devour the part that would make him grow taller. Much taller.

Actually, he says he doesn't mind his height. He just claims that everyone else is too tall.

My mother feels the same way. Blest with straight hair, she seems to feel she was cursed with being 5-foot-2. Everytime I see her, she complains about having to hem new pants at least 25 inches to make them fit. I think she exaggerates, however. I've never seen her hem anything more than 20 inches.

Still another problem that no one ever seems satisfied with is being left-handed or right-handed.

I always thought being right-handed is a curse. My entire family, except me, is left-handed. My father was forced to write with his left hand back in grade school, and now only bats with his left hand. My brother remained rebelliously left-handed, despite the determined efforts of his teachers to make him change. My mother is a closet left-hander, doing most things with her right hand. Only I am a true right-hander. Maybe I was adopted.

I suspect that, given the chance, almost everyone would change something about themselves. The world would be filled with former curly-haired people who were formerly straight-haired, and straight-haired who were once curly. Short people would be taller, and the tall would be shorter. The thin would be fat and the fat, thin. People would change the shapes of their noses, their eyebrows or their teeth. We probably wouldn't recognize each other.

Actually, although I don't really like my height, weight, nose, eyebrows or teeth, I can live with them. There's only one thing I really want to change.

My curly hair.

Grenada

Editor: Most national politicians now support the Reagan invasion of Grenada, but we have yet to hear any credible evidence that "We got there just in time." Was Grenada (population 112,000 and about the size of most Montana counties) really going to become the terror of the Caribbean? Really, it's sorta like the Dallas Cowboys taking on a junior high team with a sick quarterback. It wouldn't even make a good movie.

The President gave as his first reason the rescue of the American medical students; yet Canada had made preparations to bring their home with no invasion.

Next we are told of the awesome runway. They call it a military runway, but it meets none of the specifications for such except for length. It has no parallel taxiways, no underground fuel tanks, no military radar, no engineering workshops and no aircraft shelters.

Next, we're shown the arms caches of World War II vintage weapons. Since we're the number one arms merchant in the world and sell deadly material to many nations who don't need it, why are we surprised into invasion by discovering Granada had some. Perhaps it's now our purpose to "wipe out" all those who don't buy machine gun American.

Last, Reagan said we had to save democracy. If that's our goal, we must prepare to invade half the nations of the world including many that Reagan finds quite acceptable no matter how egregious their violations of human rights and the democratic process are.

The Reagan policy of shoot first and ask questions later appeals to a majority who are hot for certainty. We finally won one for the Gipper. In the long run, it solves none of the root problems of unrest in Latin America. Even worse, we broke our word on treaties we have signed and we were deserted in the Security Council by our staunchest allies and had to veto the resolution of condemnation for our invasion just as Russia did for her invasion of Afghanistan.

Preference

Editor: Thanks for the well-written editorial on the need for reforming the veteran's preference law, so that it will be what it was intended to be—a tie-breaker. It was the second excellent editorial recently by Howell; the other one being his observations on the West, what it really was, and how to keep some of it. The quality of both efforts was far better than generally seen even in most commercial papers. Congratulations!

Films

Classes, such as English 377, (Western Films), or Philosophy 344, (Philosophy of the Arts — Film), are still presented by their respective departments, but the instructors coordinate the classes and the films to get the most benefit from available money.

"It made me appreciate how difficult it is to make a really good film," said Jeremy Sauter, a radio-television junior. Sauter said that in Foreign Languages and Literatures 221 (French Film), he was given "an interesting look at the French mind-set, which reinforced my belief that the French are romantic artists." He added that a recurring theme in the films shown in Foreign Languages and Literatures 222 (German Cinema), is "trying to atone for the guilt that's been put on them by history."

Sauter lamented that, after the course, it was "harder just to have fun at the movies, as it makes you more critical of what you see."

"People are moving away from the written arts," said Roman Zylawy, an assistant professor in foreign languages who presents the French film class. "We live in a visual world: movies, TV, video," he said, "and we need to study signs (visual communications) as instruments of communication."

The best part of the French film course, Zylawy said, is the enthusiasm of students finding out that a movie challenges the intellect, and that it is more than just something you have with popcorn.

UC news board meets with mixed reviews from viewers

By Dan Dzurani
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

The electronic news board on the back wall in the University Center Copper Commons has drawn mixed reactions from University of Montana students.

Some said the news board is informative, while others said it's distracting. Other students simply do not watch it.

The news board, which features red lettering on a black background, started running messages two weeks ago and is connected by a phone line to a computer at the Bruner News Network in Texas.

A "run" on the news board lasts eight to 10 minutes and consists of six segments — world news, national news, general news, campus news, finance and sports. The time, date and jokes are inserted between segments.

Shirley Kemp, Bruner News Network assistant news editor, said in a telephone interview

'I just think it's a gadget,' Hood says that most of the network news is selected from the United Press International wire service. She said the news editors are experimenting with "one-liners" to add humor to the sometimes "bleak" news.

Many of the 30 students interviewed in the Commons last week were concerned with the cost of the news board and with the news content.

Many students shared the opinion of Bill Brda, a senior in physics and math, who said, "If the school spent money to obtain and use it (the news board), I would object."

But the university doesn't pay for the news service. The Bruner News Network donated and installed the news board and the phone line. The university pays only for the electricity used to operate the board.

Ray Skaggs, Bruner News Network vice president, said in a telephone interview that about 400 universities and about 20 military bases throughout the United States receive the news service.

He said the news company had to build a network of news boards before national and regional advertisers would be willing to use the network.

Skaggs said a few local and regional advertisers use part of the network and two or three national advertisers should be using the network by spring. The only ads on the UC news board now are University of Montana ads.

Paula McNeill, scheduling services manager, said UM uses the board to advertise such things as Grizzly basketball games and UC hours for free, rather than paying a lot of money to advertise on other media. She said the board also can be used to inform students of an emergency such as when the school closed in 1981 because of a blizzard. She said she can call the network and have the emergency message on the board in 10 minutes.

Skaggs said research indicated that there was a "horrendous" need to inform students about world and local events.

"People don't read local newspapers or bulletin boards," but "because headlines and scores are shown on the board, some people will turn to another medium to get the whole story," Skaggs said.

Several students shared the opinion of Dixie Christenson, a sophomore in computer science, who said the news board offers her "news without buying a paper."

Skaggs said one of the benefits of the news board is that "people's reading skills will improve. People will read more because of the service."

Charles Hood, dean of the School of Journalism, said one could argue that the new scoreboard in the Harry Adams Field House will improve reading skills too. Hood said that he was not against having the news board because it does provide information. However, he said, "I just think it's a gadget."

One area that attracts a lot of notice is the sports scores flashing across the board. Some students felt that the sports scores are an important item on the news board, while others did not.

Ron Stirling, a freshman in forestry, said he read the football scores on Monday and favors having the news board if it also supplied baseball scores every day.

A few students said the news board was distracting.

Allan Brown, a sophomore in general studies, said that reading the news board for a while was "hard on the eyes."

Jeff Folsom, a junior in social work, said the news board was "addictive like M & Ms," and Holly Mayfield, a sophomore in physical therapy, said it was "mesmerizing."

Griz win big

By Scott Turner
Kaimin Sports Editor

The Montana Grizzlies combined tough defense and a balanced scoring attack to produce a 80-51 victory over the St. Martin's College Saints Monday night before 5,560 fans at Dahlberg Arena.

Montana never trailed in the game, as it posted its second victory in as many outings. Saturday night UM defeated the University of Pacific 76-64.

The Grizzlies led at halftime, 42-23, and Coach Mike Montgomery substituted freely in the second half. Twelve Grizzlies scored in the game; forward Larry Krystkowiak led UM with 12 points and had a game-high 10 rebounds. Forward Rob Hurley had 11 points, as did reserve guard Leroy Washington. The leading scorer for St. Martin's was forward Grey May with 18 points.

Montana played a hustling defense which held the Saints to 36 percent shooting from the floor. St. Martin's, which is located in Lacey, Wash., converted on only seven of its 21 free throw attempts. The Grizzlies hit 31 of 67 field goal attempts (46 percent) and were 18 of 31 from the line (58 percent).

UM jumped out to a 10-2 lead two-and-a-half minutes into the game and never looked back. Montana held on to its big lead in the second half despite using mostly reserves. The Saints couldn't get back into the game, as foul trouble sent several of their starters to the bench in the second half.

Montana's next game is Wednesday night against Linfield College of McMinnville, Ore. Tipoff is at 7:30 p.m. in Dahlberg Arena.

Lady Griz play tonight

The Lady Grizzlies are on the court tonight against Washington State. Game time is 7:30 p.m. in Dahlberg Arena.

Montana is coming off a 75-42 win over Eastern Montana Friday night. The Lady Griz are 3-1 on the season, their only loss coming against Penn State.

Guard-forward Cheri Bratt leads the team in scoring, averaging 15.3 points a game. She also has 14 assists and 16 steals. Forward Anita Novak and center Doris Deden Hasquet are averaging 13 and 10.3 points respectively. Hasquet leads the team in rebounds with an average of 8.5 a game and Novak is averaging 7.5 boards.

Montana concludes its three-game homestand Saturday night against the College of Great Falls. Game time is 7:30 p.m.

Parking

Paul Wilson, a UM geography professor and chairman of the UM Campus Development Committee, said the CDC has spent "very little time on the matter."

"We spent about 10 minutes discussing it (the stadium parking problem) at our last meeting," Wilson said.

Wilson said the CDC realizes that there is a potential problem and he added that he expects the parking problem to be "a recurring topic at future CDC meetings."

Williams said the current parking facilities are not even adequate for major events at the Field House such as basketball games.

He said the merchants at the East Gate Shopping Center, located across the foot bridge from the Field House, have complained to university and city officials about people who park in the shopping center parking lot when they are attending events at the Field House.

However, Williams said there is nothing the university can do about the complaints because the shopping center is located off campus.

"We can't send our police over to enforce parking that is outside of our jurisdiction," Williams said.

He said UM "certainly doesn't encourage people to park over there" and he admitted that the problem would probably increase when the new stadium is built.

Williams said that people driving to campus this year have found it more difficult than in the past to get a parking spot at certain times of the day. He said this is because there are just not enough parking stalls on campus.

More than 4,490 parking decals were issued by UM security this quarter while the total number of stalls on campus totals only 2,670. The decals cost students, staff and faculty members $15 for the first vehicle and $2 for every additional vehicle.

Lee Johnson, one of five students hired by UM security to issue parking tickets on campus, said he has noticed an increase over last year in the number of cars parked illegally on campus.

"It seems there are a lot more people parking in yellow zones this year," Johnson said, adding that the busiest time of the day is usually morning.

He said that he averages about 35 to 45 parking tickets a day during his three-hour shifts. The most common violations, Johnson said, are vehicles without UM decals, vehicles parked in yellow zones and vehicles that are parked for extended periods of time in timed parking zones.
