Student support needed to help fund proposed stadium

By Marcy Curran
Kaimin Reporter

A referendum calling for the use of $500,000 of existing student building funds to finance a portion of the proposed stadium at the University of Montana may be held at Winter Quarter registration.

But before the referendum can be held, 5 percent — about 350 to 400 students — must sign a petition supporting the referendum. And if students support it, then 25 percent of the students must vote with a two-thirds majority, to adopt the referendum.

A referendum, asking UM students to vote on revising the ASUM constitution, has already been scheduled for Winter Quarter registration. See story on page 4 of today's Kaimin.

According to ASUM president David Bolinger, passing the referendum is just one part of a two-part effort to allocate funds for the stadium. The second half of the effort will be lobbying before the state Legislature to change a law that prohibits the allocation of student fees for the stadium.

Since 1954 students have been charged a $20 building fee. Because enrollment has doubled since then, there is a surplus in building funds, according to Bolinger.

He said that the $500,000 for the stadium would be dispersed in increments of $200,000 for two years and $100,000 for the last year. That was how surplus building fees were used for the new Performing Arts-Radio TV Building.

Bolinger said he hopes to get as many students as possible to sign the petitions, to "garner" enough support to possibly lobby at the special session of the Legislature, which begins Dec. 12. However, he said, it would be more likely that lobbying will take place before the 1985 Legislature.

If the referendum is adopted at this winter's election, student fees would not be increased as the money would come out of existing funds. Because student funds would be used, UM students would be guaranteed a section on the 50-yard line in the new stadium, Bolinger said.

Kemmis enters race for mayor's seat

By Deanna Rider
Kaimin Night Editor

Speaker of the House Dan Kemmis, whose legislative district includes the University of Montana, announced his candidacy for mayor yesterday.

However, if Kemmis is appointed, the City Council would have to wait until after the special session of the Legislature to swear him in to office.

Kemmis said he intends to stay in the Legislature until after the special session is over and then resign if he is appointed mayor.

The special session begins Dec. 12, which is the same day the council will begin voting on the candidates. According to state law, Missoula must have a new mayor by Dec. 16.

Kemmis said he thinks the special session should be over in time for him to take office. Legislators are meeting to discuss the veteran's preference law because of a Supreme Court ruling which said it gave handicapped people and veterans and their spouses (absolute) preference when applying for state jobs.

However, Gov. Ted Schwinden has said other matters could be introduced.

City Attorney Jim Nugent said he doesn't know whether Kemmis can be appointed while he is a legislator.

State law says that no member of the Legislature can be

Bolinger says he has skills, expertise to be good mayor

By Parmelia Newbern
Kaimin Reporter

He characterizes himself as a fiscally conservative Democrat with a strong concern for the environment. He worked for more than a year in Missoula Municipal Court as a clerk commissioner, gaining experience he says will help him if he gets the job he wants.

David Bolinger, ASUM president since April, hopes to be Missoula's next mayor.

"I believe that I have the administrative skills and the technical expertise to be a good mayor and a good representative of all Missoulians, not just one group."

Seventeen people, including Speaker of the House Dan Kemmis and Ward Four Alderman John Toole, have applied for the mayor's job, left vacant by Mayor Bill Cregg's suicide Nov. 16.

The application deadline is Friday. The City Council will interview applicants beginning Monday and continuing through Dec. 11 if necessary. The Council will elect a new mayor Dec. 12. If no one is successfully elected, the Council will conduct special meetings prior to Dec. 16 to appoint someone.

Bolinger is one of two University of Montana students to apply for the job. The other is Richard Hager, a post baccalaureate candidate in forestry and communications.

Bolinger, 35, says he hopes his chances of being selected for the position are "as good as anybody else's."

"I'm running totally on my own merits and my ability to perform."

"As (ASUM) president, I have a lot of community experience. One of my strongest assets at this time is my ability to function and handle people from very diverse backgrounds."

If elected, Bolinger says he will confer with the Council on whether he will have enough time to continue as ASUM president.

Bolinger declines to discuss specific problems of Missoula or specific goals he hopes to accomplish if appointed.

He hopes to talk with Council members, as well as officials in the planning, finance and attorney's offices in order to gain a better perspective of Missoula's needs and problems.

Bolinger, who has lived off and on in Missoula since 1965, says he wanted to run for mayor or justice of the peace during the November 1981 election, but felt he should finish his education first.

With three quarters left before he completes his requirements for a political science, pre-law major, he now feels that his education would not be jeopardized if he became mayor.

"I could finish my education through night courses if I was appointed."

Bolinger says that if he is appointed, he will run for mayor again in the 1985 election, when Cregg's term was scheduled to end.

Aside from his experience in Municipal Court and as ASUM president, Bolinger has also worked on Central Board and on various ASUM committees.

Op-Ed Letters

A thought

Editor: Please print my poem for I believe we all have things to be truly grateful for.

A dark haunting shadow drifted overhead the other day,
I fought and struggled but I just couldn't get away.

A suffocating gloom had settled in,
And it didn't matter how hard I breathed—I just couldn't win.

For pollutant of destruction was sucking at my strength
And I heavily realized this could be Mother Earth's LAST RACE.

Now I'm not known to be a quitter or to run away and hide,
But after seeing what could happen, I simply, mournfully cried.

As I woke up the next morning to start a new day,
My foot steps were sluggish and my smile had gone away.

For my love and my thoughts were in a far away place,
Home with my family, each filled with their own style and grace.

Six strong, healthy people willing to give and offer so much,
But by one BLACKENING BOMB—there would be no one left for them to touch.

Conflict, war and destruction has existed for thousands of years,
I wonder how many unhugged children there have been who've shed silent tears?

It would be easy to simply give up, pull the blind and hide.
But I'm an American and I will stand tall and keep my eyes open wide!

For I will look for that hope, that glimmer of light—
Though only twenty-one—I'm too tired to fight.

Iran

Editor: Iran is heading towards changes. All the signs are there and it is taking place right now. Four and a half years after the 1979 uprising, this is the state of the country:

A total bankrupt economy depending on the sell-out of Iranian oil. The continuation of an unjust war with Iraq, which has so far claimed the lives of 150,000 Iranian youths, destruction of 12 major Iranian highly populated cities. The barbaric and still continuing executions of Freedom Fighters who took part in the battles against the Shah's fascist regime and imprisonment of 100,000 who are subjected to the most savage and inhumane tortures. Repression of women, national minorities, constant bombardment of villages in Kurdistan, closure of all democratic and progressive papers and banning of any opposition party. Closure of all Iranian universities for the last three years. An exodus of 25,000 doctors and thousands more of other professionals from Iran, and so on.

These injustices are the basis on which Iran is moving for changes. Last September the workers and peasantry forces took to the streets of Naziabad on the outskirts of Tehran and fought empty-handed with Khomeini's guards for basic needs, such as water and electricities supplies which Khomeini's barbaric regime has not been able to provide for the majority of the poor in Iran. Khomeini's regime expects the people to continue to live in misery and intolerable conditions but not open their mouths for any complaints because the fascist regime says so!

But this time the Iranian people have learnt enough and they know that all these criminals from Khomeini to Bani-

Sadr to Bazargan to Hozbulah (party of god) are all part of the same dragon which has devastated and betrayed the Iranian revolution. The traitors won't survive this time. The recent uprising will eventually bury them in history. Khomeini's "Islamic Republic" is destined to failure and defeat.

ASUM constitution referendum to be held Winter Quarter

By Marcy Curran
Kaimin Reporter

Besides signing up for classes at Winter Quarter registration, University of Montana students will also be able to vote on a referendum to revise ASUM's constitution to a more readable and up-to-date version, according to David Bolinger, ASUM president.

Because the present constitution was drafted 13 years ago by faculty advisers, UM is in need of an updated constitution that reflects the changes in the way student government operates now, Bolinger said.

If the proposed constitution is adopted, some of the changes would include:

- Elimination of the requirement that student elections be held Spring Quarter. Elections have been held during Winter Quarter for several years to allow for a transition period for newly elected student representatives.
- Elimination of student voting districts such as off-campus, married student housing and dormitories. Instead of voting for student representatives by particular districts, every student would vote for 20 Central Board members to represent ASUM.

- More efficient election procedures. Last winter's student government elections were followed by charges that balloting procedures were improperly handled. Poor voter turnout has also plagued ASUM elections. Holding student government elections at Winter Quarter registration — making voting more convenient to students — is one of the ideas Central Board is considering in order to raise the voter turnout at elections.

- Elimination of a mandated annual review of the ASUM budget by outside auditors. According to Bolinger, an annual audit is impractical or necessary.
- Deletion of all "sexist" language. The proposed changes would eliminate masculine pronouns and position titles found in the present constitution.

- Raising from 5 percent to 10 percent the number of students needed to sign a petition in order to conduct a referendum.

If the proposed constitution passes this winter, it will be the first ASUM constitution drafted by students. The Kaimin will print the proposed constitution in its next four issues.

Professor in hot water over joke

(CPS)—A joke gone wrong has put a Millersville State University political science instructor in the hot seat, and earned him the official scorn of his campus.

The student government and more than 40 faculty members have censured Dr. Gerry Weinberger for distributing on campus a flyer featuring photos of nude women and "stupid" men, all aimed at convincing Millersville students to switch their majors to political science.

The flyer "was in poor taste and degrading to the university," Student Senate President Ed Buch explained to The Snapper, the student paper on campus.

The flyer, for instance, asserts "The traditional undergraduate liberal arts major is political science — not junk like business or education, industrial arts (or) computers, which leave you in low-paying, low status, and increasingly useless positions as time goes by."

It also features a Playboy Magazine photograph of a nude woman, who Weinberger labeled as a "typical political science groupie." A picture of a "really stupid non-political science major" is printed beside a snapshot of a sharply-dressed "young man who moves with style," identified as a Millersville State political science major.

By publishing the flyer, which is almost wholly made of art clipped out of ads and magazines, Weinberger is "disrupting classes," Buch claims. "The harmony in the department is gone, and that is affecting the quality of the teaching in the classroom."

Weinberger, in reply, says Millersville "is a pretty dopey, provincial campus."

He says he was trying to publish a "satire on the provincialism of all the faculty here." In the flyer, he describes it as "satire beyond the realms of Christian decency."

The faculty, in fact, seems duly upset by the flyer. Upon hearing of the informal and formal complaints filed against him, the assistant professor, who has been tenured at Millersville since 1973, says he may sue the complainers for "slander, libel and even criminal conspiracy."

Officially, the university is responding with grim silence. Political Science Chairman Clarence Randolph and Dean of Humanities and Social Sciences Dr. William Pearman declined to comment. One administrator threatened to sue if his name was published in this article. Pearman says the public university considers the matter internal and confidential.

Weinberger, however, says he's proud of his record of publishing "sexual and scatological satires" of campus life.

"Some students like it, some don't," he says. "I presume that the intelligent students love it."

Many faculty members donate to charity rather than to union

By Brian L. Rygg
Kaimin Contributing Editor

Donating to charity was the choice of almost two-thirds of those University of Montana faculty members who had to declare yesterday whether they would join the University Teachers' Union and pay its dues, pay the same amount of money to the UTU without joining the union, or pay it to one of the charities approved by the UTU Executive Committee.

UTU President John Lawry, philosophy professor, said that when the UTU office closed at 3 p.m. yesterday, 127 faculty members had opted for charity, 48 chose to join the union, and 22 turned in payroll deduction cards only. The last group apparently intends to pay the "fair-share" fees without joining the UTU, Lawry said.

Yesterday was the deadline for faculty members in the "bargaining unit" — those covered by the collective bargaining agreement — to make the decision required by the contract and its controversial "union security" section.

The contract was ratified by the Montana Board of Regents Oct. 28, the day after UM faculty members voted 196-165 to accept the agreement.

The UTU already comprised about half of the estimated 450 members of the bargaining unit. Union officials said the security section was needed because of rising costs and the federal requirement that members and non-members alike be represented by the union.

Lawry said that the union had not yet checked to see whether all who are required by the contract to pick an option had done so, but noted that some of the forms might have been turned in after the UTU office closed yesterday and that some faculty members are on sabbatical.

Memorial to be built to honor slain Kent State students

(CPS)--Thirteen years after four of its students were killed at the climax of the anti-war movement, and after 13 years of almost unrelieved confrontation between students and administrators over how to remember the tragedy, Kent State University trustees finally voted last week to work with students to concoct and build a campus memorial to the dead students.

KSU's unwillingness to accede to student and faculty requests to build a memorial was arguably the last vestige of the anti-war movement of the sixties and early seventies.

"We aren't shouting at each other any more," says Steven Thulin, now a grad student at Kent State.

"The feelings of ill will have largely disappeared," adds Kenneth Calkins, head of KSU's Faculty Senate.

The trustees voted to join community groups and the May 4th Task Force—the student-faculty group that has led the long struggle to memorialize the tragedy—in a committee to find an appropriate physical memorial to the slain students.

The students were killed on May 4th, 1970. Students nationwide had declared a national strike to protest President Richard Nixon's sudden invasion of Cambodia, which marked the first widening of the war in Vietnam. The reaction at home was marred by occasional violence, some of which occurred in the town of Kent. Ohio Gov. James Rhodes called in the National Guard to maintain order on the campus.

But on May 4th, Guardsmen abruptly opened fire on a peaceful campus demonstration, killing four and wounding nine.

The outrage and tension that exploded at Kent State long outlived the anti-war movement and the war itself.

Ongoing lawsuits against the university and the National Guard, and the university's often-bungled efforts to downplay the tragedy's significance in subsequent years often exacerbated the tensions.

Among the more notable confrontations over the last 13 years was the university's 1977 proposal to build a gym annex in the area of the shootings. The proposal led to large protests and sit-ins to try to stop construction workers from starting. The gym was finished in 1978 despite the protests.

Also in 1978, a Cleveland foundation commissioned world-renowned sculptor

George Segal to build a memorial for the campus.

But when Segal presented the finished sculpture to KSU administrators, they rejected it.

Segal's sculpture depicts the biblical story of Abraham and Isaac, showing an older man holding a knife over a kneeling youth, whose hands are tied.

"It was inappropriate to commemorate the deaths of four persons and the wounding of nine with a statue which appears to represent an act of violence about to be committed," then-KSU President Brage Golding explained at the time.

Princeton quickly asked to take the sculpture, and placed it on its campus in 1979.

Golding then proposed to build a Roman arch as a memorial, but met almost unanimous disapproval. Critics noted the traditional military connotations of the arch, while others complained it looked like a fireplace.

Golding withdrew the proposal, and no substantial memorial proposals emerged for years afterwards.

About the only official acknowledgements of what happened at Kent State were a library room dedicated to the victims' memory, a small plaque at the campus Hillel Foundation, and an annual candlelight vigil on May 3rd and 4th.

But last week's meeting indicates times have changed.

"I feel there is a more receptive climate on campus now, and there is a general feeling that we need some kind of public memorial, some kind of physical thing," says Dr. Jerry Lewis, a sociology professor and adviser to the May 4th Task Force, the student-faculty group that unsuccessfully has pressed the trustees for a memorial for 13 years.

"We've been through this before," says Thulin, who used to be a task force member. "But for the first time, all the concerned groups — students, faculty, administrators, alumni

Women cadets prove themselves in ROTC program

By Shannon Hinds

Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Thirty Army ROTC cadets dressed in green fatigues and combat boots, cheer as Cadet Jackie Krause hooks herself onto a 75-foot-high cable, slides through the air and drops into an icy mountain lake.

In the Army you learn to "be all you can be," says Krause.

The "slide-for-life" is only one of the activities that kept Krause busy last summer at camp in Fort Lewis, Wash. Krause, a junior in accounting, is one of the 10 women in the Army ROTC program at the University of Montana.

Although the ROTC program at UM began in 1922, women only began to participate in it in 1974. It was not until 1975 that one woman became a commissioned officer. From 1975 to 1983 the number of female cadets gradually increased. Besides the 10 female cadets, there are also 37 male cadets in the program.

Joining the Army has become increasingly more popular for women in the past few years, said Capt. Richard Magera, assistant professor of military science. Female officers receive the same salary and advancement opportunities as male officers, said Magera, adding that there is less "harassment" for the Army woman than for the civilian businesswoman.

Women who go into active duty are guaranteed a job and can avoid the interviewing process, he said. Scholarships are available and every ROTC cadet is paid $100 per month. In return, cadets must serve either three years in active duty and three years in the Reserve, or eight years in the Reserve after commission.

"Most women don't get the opportunity to do the things I've done in the Army," said Krause. Everyone receives equal treatment, she said, adding that there are no "breaks" or "favors" for women. However, competition between men and women does exist, she said, adding men are not used to competing with women and in the Army they are thrown into an environment of competition. They are used to playing football, baseball and competing with other men, she said. "Some men cannot deal with a woman beating them at something."

Mary Thelen, a senior in computer science who plans to go into military intelligence after she graduates, agrees that there is competition between the sexes. Some men have the attitude that women are not capable of handling things, she said, adding that a woman has to work hard to gain respect, but that this gives them an incentive to do their best.

Working hard is especially important in the six-week co-ed summer camp in Fort Lewis, Wash., said Thelen, who decided to try ROTC after her two brothers joined. She said cadets must work hard to learn to function under stress and to get through the long, demanding days at camp.

Krause describes a typical day in camp as beginning at 4:45 a.m. with a 45-minute session of calisthenics. For the rest of the morning the cadets practice defense tactics and play "war games." At noon they break for a large lunch that helps them get through the strenuous afternoon activities. Afternoons are spent learning to rappel, doing survival training, and learning to shoot rifles and M-16s. After a hearty dinner, cadets are "off-duty" until the next morning at 4:45 a.m.

Cadet Autumn Varner, a junior in sociology, said that camp gave her the chance to learn what the Army was all about. She said that she learned everything from how to make a bunk well enough to pass white-glove inspection, to self-confidence, assertiveness, leadership and courage.

Varner said she began to understand the purpose of the rigorous training at camp, after she saw the picture of the Army officer on the cover of Time magazine. What were only "war games" for her, were a reality for the officer, she said.

The fact that the camp was co-ed produced mixed feelings from female cadets. There was pressure for women to prove they could do as well as men, said Krause, whose platoon had 30 men and six women. One woman in her platoon refused to do any of the ropes courses or the rappelling because she was afraid of heights. This caused everyone to think a lot less of her, said Krause.

"If you don't have enough guts to do the activities, you can't lead other people," Krause said. Also, one woman who is not good can create a stereotype for all other women, she said.

In camp, it was hard for some men to take orders from women, said Thelen. It is necessary, however, to have co-ed camps because it is a co-ed Army, she said.

Varner said some men did not take her seriously in camp because she wore makeup and they thought she acted "prissy." Some men think women in the Army should be all "rough and tough," said Varner.

Cadet Joel Sessions, a junior in political science, does not think there are problems between men and women in the Army. The Army is unisex and people are graded on their ability, not their sex, said Sessions.

sions. Women have a "specific need" to be in the Army, he said. "They need the challenge and excitement the Army can offer them."

Sessions said he would not have any trouble taking orders from a female superior officer, but he would not date an Army woman. That would be "mixing my profession with my personal relationships," said Sessions. He said if he were not in the Army, he would not date a business associate who worked closely with him because that would create the same problems.

Cadet Duane Tushoski, a junior in political science and economics, said he would date an Army woman. In fact, he plans to marry a fellow cadet. Tushoski said he respects women in the Army, but thinks men and women should go to separate camps and separate schools. "Many of the officers don't want women in the Army and feel that 'a woman's place is in the home,'" he said.

It is tougher for a woman to be in the Army, he said, adding that women are a minority and feel that they are looked down upon by male officers. Tushoski said it is "all right" that his girlfriend is in the Army, but he would not like it if she were a higher rank than he was. "It is only natural for a man to want to do better than a woman," he said.

Cadet John Davis, freshman in computer science, said that it is "great" to have women in the Army. "Women make as good, if not better, officers as men do," said Davis, adding that he would have no problem taking orders from a female officer and no problem dating an Army woman.

Davis, Sessions and Tushoski agree that women should not go into combat. Women do not have enough physical stamina or enough training to go into combat, said Davis, adding that it would be hard for them to carry the heavy gear that is necessary. Women can not handle the stress and emotional respects of combat, said Sessions.

"Combat scares me," said Thelen, adding that she would not want to be on the battlefield. Men have valid points about women not going into combat, she said. It is true that

College papers struggling through economic woes

(CPS)—As much of the college press struggles through what may be its toughest year yet, a federal court has ruled that the University of Minnesota paper can return to its old method of collecting student fees.

The ruling could help set a precedent for making student funding of campus papers a First Amendment issue.

— seem to be on the same general wavelength."

"The state of KSU," concurs Robert McCoy, an English professor who was a KSU vice president under the Golding administration, "is one that acknowledges the events of what happened here."

Faculty President Calkins attributes the change of heart "to the time that has passed, a new administration (Michael Schwartz succeeded Golding in 1981), and new people on the board of trustees who don't feel as closely involved with those events."

Lewis attributes it to the unveiling of the Vietnam War Memorial in Washington, D.C. last year. Once the nation has begun to put the war in perspective, the logic goes, it can put the domestic convulsions over it in perspective.

The trustees' willingness to find an appropriate memorial isn't official yet. Last week's meeting technically was of a board committee, not the full board. The full board, however, is expected to approve the proposal to build an appropriate memorial at its next meeting in mid-December.

After the Minnesota Daily published a wild "humor issue" in 1979, the university's regents made student fee funding of the paper optional for students.

But last week the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled the regents had interfered with freedom of the press, and actually were trying to influence the paper's editorial content by changing the fee system.

But the long-awaited Minnesota fee decision is about the only good news for college newspapers so far during the 1982-83 school year.

Scores of papers are struggling with budget cuts, while others actually are folding under the weight of budget problems and student apathy.

Smaller weekly and less-than-weekly papers appear to be suffering the most.

Papers at Illinois Eastern Community College, Lakeland College, Harford Community College, Glen Oaks Community College and Western Wyoming Community College, among many others, had deep budget cuts this year.

Some aren't even that lucky. At Phoenix College, "we took a look at the cost of the college paper in relation to the information we have to get out to students, and decided it was too cost-prohibitive for a student body of 13,000," reports Jim Hughes, head of the school's public information office.

Phoenix College, consequently, has no student paper at all this year.

Administrators plan to produce a monthly calendar and newsletter instead, for "considerably less than the $700 per issue we were spending on the paper," Hughes says.

Kendall College in Evanston, Ill., also has replaced its monthly student paper with a p.r. newsletter.

"We didn't pick up (funding for) the student paper again this year because of lack of interest and cuts in student services funding," says Janice Glor of Kendall's student services office.

She estimates Kendall will save $2,250 by merging its news operations with the public relations department's newsletter. Students are left to get news from "a campus calendar posted in some of the classrooms."

At Phoenix College, where enrollment has been climbing steadily for three years, "we just didn't have a lot of student interest," Hughes says. "The staff was volunteer, and during finals a lot of people stopped coming in and working."

Kendall's newspaper staff was "down to one or two students last year really working on the paper," Glor says. "We haven't had any complaints from anyone who wants the paper back."

"It's very easy for an administration to do away with a paper if there're no students interested enough to work on it or fight for it," says Dick Sublette, president of College Media Advisors, the trade group for campus newspaper advisers and publications director at UCLA.

But lack of staff "coincides with what's happening with journalism school enrollment generally," says Len Franko, director of the American Society of Journalism School Administrators and a journalism professor at the University of South Carolina.

"We've had a bulge in journalism majors for the last 10 to 12 years," he says. "Now, after doubling in the last 10 years, enrollment has finally leveled out" to about 80,000 majors nationwide.

The decline, coupled with campuses' general money woes, has pitted many papers against their administrators.

Administrators gradually have been forcing larger campus papers to pay more of their costs by generating more of their own revenues through advertising sales.

women have never been trained for combat and may not have the physical strength some men do, said Thelen. But, women should be allowed to go into combat if they want to, she said. Krause and Varner agree that they, also, do not want to be on the front line.

The recent combat involving U.S. troops in Lebanon and Grenada has caused some UM students to have negative feelings toward the Army and ROTC students, said Thelen, adding some students feel U.S. forces should not be in either country.

They consider it an act of military aggression and see ROTC students in a "bad light" because of it, she said. Most students, however, see ROTC students in a "better light," said Thelen, adding they are "curious" and "interested" about the reason cadets are in the Army.

Foreign student enrollment levels off at U.S. universities

(CPS)—For the first time in a decade, the foreign student population on American campuses has leveled off, the Institute of International Education (IIE) reports.

Some foreign student observers attribute the population change to political adventurism in Iran and Libya.

For the last ten years, foreign student enrollment here has been growing at least 10 percent a year. The growth rate in some years went as high as 16 percent.

But new figures indicate foreign student enrollment grew by a mere 3.3 percent in the 1982-83 school year, from 325,865 students for the 1981-82 school year to 33,983.

"I think (the foreign student population) is basically peaking because of the decrease in (the number of) Iranian students," observes Alfred Jullian, research associate for the IIE's just-released "Open Doors" survey of enrollment.

The Iranian student population — still the largest contingent of foreign students from any one foreign country — has dropped from a high of 51,310 in the 1979-80 school year to only 26,760 in 1982-83.

"The Libyan student population has also declined by 26.9 percent," Jullian notes, "from 2,900 for the previous school year to 2,120 for 1982-83."

"I think probably political upheaval in Libya and Iran could account for some of the decline in students from those two countries," he speculates.

Indeed, "in the case of Iranian students, for the last couple of years it has been difficult for them to get exit permits (from the Iranian government), and then they had to go to a third country to get U.S. visas because there is no U.S. embassy in Iran," explains Georgia Stewart with the National Association of Foreign Student Advisors (NAFSA) in Washington, D.C.

But more Iranians may come to American campuses in the next few years, she adds. The Iranian government "may be lifting some of its restrictions on exit permits. I've heard from a number of institutions who have noted increases in the number of applications from Iranian students."

While the number of Iranian and Libyan students decreased last year, however, more foreign students are coming from Europe, Asia, and South America, the survey reveals.

The increase in South American students is due mainly to an influx of Venezuelan students, Jullian says. The number of students from that country rose by 11 percent, he notes, because of the country's oil exporting profits.

A rise in the number of foreign students from Malaysia, Jullian notes, helped increase the Asian student enrollment on U.S. campuses. There were also smaller increases in the number of Korean and Chinese students coming here.

Acoustical guitarist set to perform at UC Friday

Guitar music will be on the agenda when Michael Gulezian performs Friday night in the University Center Lounge.

An acoustic folk guitarist, Gulezian has appeared in concert with Steve Forbert, Tim Weisberg and Leo Kottke. In addition, he has had hundreds of college performances and has appeared at the Roxy, Troubadour and McCabe's clubs of Los Angeles.

Gulezian combines finger picks, open tuning and slide techniques on a 12-string guitar during his performance. He has released two albums, "Snow" and "Unspoken Intentions."

Gulezian will be appearing at 8 p.m. The performance is free.

appointed to a civil office, but according to the secretary of state's legal counsel, Alan Robertson, Kemmis can be appointed because the law allows legislators to be candidates for another office.

"He wouldn't have to resign until just prior to being sworn in to office," Robertson said.

Bolinger

Growing up in the Minneapolis-St. Paul area, he was president of Junior Achievement, a school sponsored pro-business group. He was also president of Hi-League, a Lutheran teen-age organization.

Bolinger graduated from Sentinel High School in 1966. He lived in several places, including Denver and San Francisco, and spent five years traveling over the western United States and Canada for a gas and oil exploration company based in Calgary, Alberta. He says his experience with the exploration company gave him "a good idea of other areas, especially rural areas and small towns."

"I got to meet a lot of people and I feel that I can work with people efficiently on a very close personal level."

Several UM administrators and faculty members seemed to feel Bolinger may be appointed.

"I think that David would have a good chance, and we wish him the best of luck," said Dan Smith, executive assistant to UM President Neil Bucklew. "He has been a strong leader of ASUM."

While not as certain of Bolinger's chances, James Lopach, chairman of the UM political science department, said Bolinger's candidacy "is not to be taken lightly."

"I think he has the characteristics that the council would be interested in," Lopach said. "Dave is mature, conscientious and politically savvy."

Christmas tree regulations

Anyone with a Christmas tree on campus must have it sprayed with a flame retardant by the Physical Plant. There is no charge for the service, which starts today.

Trees must have an identification tag, available from the Physical Plant, and be dropped off at the compound gate Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Trees dropped off early in the morning can be picked up the same day. The service will be available until Dec. 16.

If appointed, Kemmis said he will "go ahead with the special session and then we'll talk to city officials."

He said that it is his legislative experience which would make him an effective mayor.

"Missoula must keep going to the Legislature to persuade them that people are actually able to govern themselves locally," he said. "It doesn't need to tie our hands and I expect to continue to make that pitch." Kemmis, 37, has represented District 94 for eight years, and, during the 1981 session of the Legislature, he was minority leader of the House.

He is a partner in the Missoula law firm, Jonkel & Kemmis.

Kemmis graduated from the UM School of Law in 1978, and he also has a degree in government from Harvard.
