CB member blasts Bolinger

By Eric Troyer
Kaimin Reporter

Central Board Member Dave Keyes accused ASUM President David Bolinger of inefficiency and using the president's seat as a "stepping stone," at the CB meeting last night.

Bolinger was surprised at Keyes' attack, but made no comments until after the meeting. He disagreed with most of the accusations, but said it did not bother him because "it's a real political statement."

Keyes concluded his speech by withdrawing his application for ASUM president and endorsing CB Member Matt Henre for the position. Henre was formerly Keyes' vice-presidential running mate.

Keyes said the CB meetings this year were too short to properly deal with the legislation it passed and that not enough time was taken to contact the students.

"We can't say that we have represented the student population," said Keyes. "It all comes back to Dave's lack of experience.

Keyes said that all the CB members had attended more meetings than Bolinger had as a CB member prior to his election, and he questioned whether that was enough experience to effectively manage the student government.

Bolinger said that Keyes' views of the current student government are distorted because he can only compare it with last year's government.

"This administration has been active," said Bolinger. "It fairly carried the Central Board this year."

Last year's administration, under former ASUM President Marquette McRae-Zook, was more controversial, he said. "People argued a lot last year on Central Board. But Bolinger claims that this year's administration was much more efficient.

"I present resolutions well," he said. "People don't need to argue."

Keyes blasted Bolinger for making two "obvious and blatant errors." The shelving of the constitution and the purchase of furniture through ASUM channels for personal use.

"I accepted total responsibility for the constitution," said Bolinger, "but I'm not to be entirely blamed for it."

Bolinger also holds the CB at fault.

In an earlier statement, Bolinger said he was told that the purchase of furniture would not be against any rules.

Keyes also claimed Bolinger "turned his back on 9,000 students" when he applied for the city mayor's seat.

"I attribute this to your lack of experience and your persistence in using your office as a stepping stone," he said.

"I did not use this office for a stepping stone," said Bolinger. "I knew damn well I wasn't going to get appointed. I was trying to expose those people who run for office."

Design work begins on new UM stadium

By Eric Williams
Kaimin Reporter

The process of building a new stadium at the University of Montana has shifted into second gear, and preliminary work for designing the facility has begun.

Fox, Balis & Barrow Associates, a Missoula architectural firm, has begun collecting information on the project. Architect Jerry Balis said that during the next two to three weeks, the firm will begin making plans for how the stadium will be situated on the site east of Harry Adams Field House, what utilities will have to be moved and parking problems that will arise.

Balis' firm is also examining the possibility of building the stadium so that a dome could be added at a later date. A stadium built without that potential would "cost X," while one built with the idea of adding a dome would cost "X plus" he said.

"We have to find out what that plus is."

The Missoula firm was selected for the project in late December, and it has teamed up with the Phoenix, Ariz., firm of Rossman, Schneider & Gabber.

Balis said his firm decided to work with the Phoenix architects because they have designed similar stadiums, including the Sky Dome in Flagstaff, Ariz.

According to Mike Easton, UM vice president of student and public affairs, the stadium will be financed strictly through private donations. He said the projected cost of the stadium is $25 to $30 million.

Easton said the money for the stadium will be raised through a fund-raising campaign conducted through the UM Foundation, which will also raise money for other areas, such as scholarships, broadcasting education and the Montana Repertory Theatre.

However, an effort has been made to include funds from student building fees in paying for the stadium. A referendum on whether to use $600,000 from the fund was scheduled to be held at Winter Quarter registration, but was delayed in part because of the confusion over the proposed new ASUM Constitution.

According to Deo Wolfe, ASUM Central Board member, the referendum may be voted on during Spring Quarter registration. Even if students pass the referendum, he said that the funds could not be released without action from the Montana Legislature.

Wolfe said if students voted in favor of using student funds for the stadium, it would send a positive signal to the Legislature. He said under those circumstances, there would be a "50-50 chance" of the funds being appropriated.

Construction of the stadium is scheduled to begin this fall, and may be completed in time for the 1985 football season. Easton said.

Professor teaches African history

By Carlos A. Pedraza
Kaimin Reporter

Noah, who is from Nigeria's University of Calabar, began teaching classes at the University of Montana on Monday, as part of a three-year exchange program between the two universities, funded by a U.S. government grant.

Meanwhile, Chris Field, UM associate professor of geography, will be teaching in Nigeria during the semester starting later this year, where he will remain through Spring Quarter. The Nigerian university, of about 5,000 students, is in Calabar, a port city of about 100,000.

Noah, 40, is a history professor who did his graduate work at Colorado State, Northwestern, and Howard universities.

His specialty is Nigerian and African history, and he is teaching courses on African history during Winter and Spring Quarters at UM.

Field said Tuesday that he had been assured by Noah and Nigerian students at UM that there would be no problem with his stay in Nigeria.

The Dec. 31 military coup in Nigeria did not prevent Noah's trip to the United States because he said that the coup was "welcomed" by the Nigerian people.

Noah said that the coup was prompted by the political and economic dissatisfaction of the Nigerian people with the civilian government.

"The government was corrupt, ineffective and insensitive. You could work for three months and nobody would care if you got paid," he said. "During the last military rule, people got their salaries."

Despite the vast amount of money Nigeria has earned from its oil exports, Noah said it "never got down to the people. The government would always devise schemes to spend the money."

Balis also expressed frustration with the American press, which he said "did not reflect the realities of the corrupt government."

"I always wanted to teach African history here," Noah said. "I always wanted to study here, but there was never a right time."

Hate is a four-letter word

People at the University of Montana are pretty put out about the letter in Tuesday’s Kaimin by the Iranian Muslim Students of UM. It spouted the usual pro-Khomeini rhetoric but also stressed that the Marines killed in the truck bombing last October had it coming as victims of the upcoming Islamic revolution. So far, five letters in response have been submitted to the Kaimin.

The Iranian letter is an insult to the United States which is graciously hosting these students by allowing them to receive quality education and the rights guaranteed to all American citizens. For example, because of the First Amendment, these people are guaranteed the right to print their ideas in a public forum such as the Kaimin.

In the past, the Iranians have submitted plenty of letters. Last spring the Kaimin agreed not to print their individual names with their letters because they feared reprisals. We agreed because we don’t want them to get hurt anymore than we want the Marines in Lebanon to get hurt.

The possibility of reprisals is real, it has happened in the past, and it is real. The Iranians succeeded in Colorado during the hostage crisis. Such is the world we live in — which brings us to what this editorial is really about — HATE.

People hurt others out of HATE, and incidents like the truck bombing last October cause people to HATE. The Iraqians learned to HATE us during the reign of the Shah when our government helped him keep power. The Iranians saw him as a tyrant. In 1979 they captured the American Embassy in Tehran; we learned to HATE them. Now they write goofy letters to the editor; we HATE them more.

It’s easy to HATE. If you don’t think so, ask yourself which is easier: HATING the Iranians or trying to see their point of view no matter how twisted it is.

But soon, folks, someone has got to take the first step and stop HATING because HATING breeds war like the ones raging in the Middle East. Those conflicts are becoming so intense that the United States and the Soviet Union are getting involved, and if things escalate, the world could turn into a rotten, if not completely barren, planet.

There should be no doubt that defending a crazy terrorist attack on a group of sleeping, unarmed and innocent men is insulting to Americans. Go ahead and be angry. But don’t HATE. Instead, try to use the energy it would take for you to HATE an Iranian and use it to think of solutions to the situations that cause HATE. The sooner we realize that we will never have our 100 percent in the world, the sooner we can stop HATING.

So the next time you hear someone say “Nuke Iran,” remind him of HATE.

Teaching: A Class Act?

News Item: Despite their heated pretest, teachers in the Houston Independent School District were recently given a basic verbal-and-math-skills exam; and starting next year, they will be tested for knowledge of their particular fields. Teachers who do not pass the basic skills test by August 1985 and the specialized subject test by 1986 will no longer be eligible for bonus stipends; and, more importantly, their salaries will be frozen. Last March, 3200 teachers were similarly tested, and the results were startling: 44 percent of the teachers failed reading, 46 percent failed math, and 26 percent did not pass the writing section.

His entrance through the rear door of the classroom would have attracted less attention had he not arrived 20 minutes late and been wearing a pair of oversized mirrored sunglasses as well as a fake, overwaxed mustache. The students’ heads turned to the front, and the Intermediate Algebra class resumed. Dark glasses notwithstanding, he was able to find against the back wall of the remaining vacant desk beside which Stu Dent was busily taking notes. Stu glanced up and was surprised to see that the latecomer bore a striking resemblance to L. T. Choo, the Math professor who failed him last year.

Stu: Mr. Choo? That you?
Choo: Hmmm? Oh, yeah, hi....
Stu: It’s me, Stu, the one who could never write out pi to its twentieth digit. Remember?
Choo: Oh, that’s right.
Stu: And I kept asking you why anyone would want to know the area of a trapezoid. Remember, Mr. Choo?
Choo: Not so loud. And I would’ve given you a passing grade if only —
Stu: Don’t sweat it. I’m fine. I like this teacher a lot more anyway.
Choo: Oh, I really know what he’s talking about. It’s not just numbers and lines up on the chalkboard, it’s a process of understanding.

Choo: I see...
Stu: So, what brings you here? (ha-ha)
You looking to learn a few things or something? (ha-ha)
Choo: Do you, uh, have an extra pencil?
Stu: Nope. Got a highlighter though. Are you sitting in on the class? Y’know, evaluating it for future courses or something?
Choo: Yeah, something like that. Listen, can you keep it down?
Stu: Oh, I get it. So that’s the reason for the moustache and cool specs. I wasn’t gonna say anything, but now I understand. Incognito, huh?
Choo: The highlighter, please?
Stu: Oh, here you go...Remember what you said last year? You always emphasized the importance of highlighting the text. But you never did tell us what exactly....
Choo: This isn’t going to work. Especially on a yellow pad. You sure you don’t have something else I could use?
Stu: Don’t worry, he’s just reviewing a few things for the quiz.
Choo: A quiz? A test? When?
Stu: Next Tuesday. Why?
Choo: Why what?
Stu: Why the concern? What’s the big deal? We’re just here to evaluate the course, aren’t you?
Choo: Well, er, yeah but it’s kind of early in the quarter for a test, isn’t it?
Stu: Not really. We’ve learned a great deal this past week. He knows his stuff. And anyway, it’s just a little quiz over the first ten pages or so.
Choo: Still, I wish I’d known. I want to get an overall picture of the proceedings and such.
Choo: I wanted to but I got tied up with other things.
Stu: Oh yeah? What classes?
Choo: Uh, French Comp., for one.
Stu: I didn’t know you taught Composition.
Choo: Well, I don’t but...
Stu: Oh, you’re evaluating that one too, is that it?
Choo: Yeah, evaluating.
Choo: Trying my best.
Choo: Indeed.
Stu: Y’know, making sure that everyone involved knows that there’s an invaluable educational magic going on here, right? Wow, that’s great.
Choo: Yeah, and in light of that, could I ask you what’s been covered so far? It would sure help if you’d give me a broader perspective, don’t you think?
Stu: No doubt. Let’s see, we’ve looked at polynomials, factoring.
Choo: Better yet, could I glanced at your notes?
Stu: Well, most of it’s in the book.
Choo: Okay. And, by the way, when’s our... I mean, your first midterm?
Stu: We’ve got two of ’em. Here’s the syllabus if you’d like to see it.
Choo: Eight exams? Is that correct? I mean, isn’t that asking too much from the students?
Stu: Not if the class is well-structured, well-taught. Anyway, why should that bother you? I thought you were just observing....
Choo: Oh, I am, I am. But I just thought we understood of the means and methods behind the course is necessary for my, er, purposes.
Stu: Huh?
Choo: Don’t you think I should acquaint myself fully with the content of the course?
Stu: Well, Mr. Choo, I should think you’d already possess more than enough knowledge to overlook such basic, “trivial” material. Let’s face it, you’re the teacher.
Choo: Sure, but...
Stu: And just how long will you be sitting in on these classes?
Choo: As long as it takes, I guess.
Stu: Takes for what?
Choo: For me to learn some things. That is to say, some things about the quality of education.
Stu: And then you’ll return to teaching?
Choo: Well, right after I finish taking er, evaluating these courses I should be teaching again, yes.
Stu: Well, the hour’s up. Gotta run. I hope you’ll enjoy our....
Choo: Hey, uh, did you want to hold a study session over the weekend sometime?
Stu: Why, you gonna help me through this class or something?
Choo: Well, why not? And I was even thinking that it wouldn’t hurt to go so far as to perhaps take a test or, er, two. Get a taste of things. You know, get really involved.
Stu: Sounds fair to me.

Go home

Editor: This is in reply to Tuesday's letter from the Iranian Muslim Students of UM.

Why don't you go home? Or better yet, jump off the roof of Jesse Hall?

You condemn the U.S., yet here you are studying at UM. This is no doubt because of Iran's lack of institutes for higher education, Iran being still in the middle ages. Your country still has public floggings and amputates the hands of thieves, as well as the highest incidence of heroin addiction per capita in the world. Perhaps you should stay at home and correct the wrongs there before slamming mud and interfering in other countries.

You speak of a united Islamic movement, yet even as I write this, the war between Iran and Iraq continues. You rant and rave about oppression by the United States, yet your country has no religious freedom and very few personal freedoms of any kind.

Iran has shown a complete disregard for international law and its usage among civilized nations. This was clearly demonstrated by the takeover of the U.S. Embassy and the holding of its personnel hostage for over a year. Your reveling in the October bombing of U.S. peacekeeping forces only reinforces this attitude and leads me to question your professed desire for peace.

Also, the slanted jargon you use in referring to the United States needs to be clarified. "Usurpers" in the White House in particular. Who usurped what? Ronald Reagan was elected by a majority of Americans exercising their democratic rights.

Of course in Iran, very little is known of democratic principles, Iran being ruled by a religious maniac whose followers ousted the government of the Shah (Usurped). You use typical Marxist revolutionairy jargon referring to "The people's resolve" and the U.S.'s "dirty war in Vietnam" and then you call the U.S.S.R. a "detestable enemy of the oppressed." Maybe you should consider your position a little better. You claim to detest the Russians yet you are acting as their puppets by seeking to undermine the peace efforts in Lebanon and elsewhere.

By Kevin Brooke
Kaimin Reporter

With only two specialists to examine the 80 million acres of wilderness in the United States, there is a "tremendous management challenge" and no easy answers, David Cole, research scientist, said Wednesday night.

Speaking to about 80 people at the University of Montana, Cole said camping has a tremendous impact on the wilderness.

Cole said studies have been done to determine the amount of damage done to campsites by backpackers and horses, including the elimination of tree seedlings, soil erosion and tree damage. In addition, Cole has conducted a study on the effects of damaged and lightly used campsites.

Recently, Cole noted that a study of a wilderness area in Oregon revealed that 90 percent of the vegetation has been destroyed by campers.

"A few nights of camping a year can create a great deal of damage," Cole said. However, Cole added that there should be no reason for deterioration of some elements in the wilderness. For instance, hundreds of thousands of trees have been destroyed in the Bob Marshall Wilderness because people tie their horses to them, he said.

Once a wilderness area has been damaged, Cole said that it takes a very long time for the area to return to its natural state. Depending on the area, Cole said that it might take a hundred years. He cited an example from Selway-Bitterroot Wilderness Area where a campsite was closed eight years ago, but has not yet recovered.

"Until we start traveling through the wilderness on magic carpets, the damage to the forest is inevitable," he said.

Cole's lecture was the first in a winter quarter environmental lecture series, which can be taken for one college credit through the forestry or environmental studies departments. This is the fourth year for the series.

Western District Congress-man Pat Williams is scheduled to speak next week. His talk will examine education and the wilderness.

Agents seize phoney Cabbage Patch Kid dolls

(AP)—Agents seized a thousand fake Cabbage Patch Kid dolls and arrested two men in raids in New York and New Jersey, the FBI said Wednesday.

The two men were picked up after a private detective hired by the manufacturers of the genuine doll, the sensation of the Christmas season, turned the results of his investigation over to the FBI on Monday, said Joseph Valiquette, an FBI spokesman.

Agents obtained a warrant Tuesday from U.S. District Judge Abraham B. Sofaer and arrested Bendar Wu, 34, of Staten Island at his business in Lower Manhattan and Joseph Spano, 33, of Fords, N.J., at Bye-Rite Costume Jewelry Inc. in Perth Amboy, N.J., Valiquette said.

The men were held for arraignment in New York on violation of copyright laws, he said.

The FBI said the private investigator, whose name was not divulged, went to Wu's place of business, Greaton International Inc., on Dec. 11 and allegedly was told by Wu that he had counterfeit Cabbage Patch Kid dolls for sale.

Lady Grizzlies open conference against Bobcats

By Linda Reaves
Sports Information Office

After posting a 9-3 record against strong, non-conference teams, the Lady Grizzlies open Mountain West Conference play against arch-rival Montana State Friday evening at 7:30 in Dahlberg Arena.

UM defeated the University of Washington 59-58 to wrap up the pre-season schedule Monday night. Two of Montana's three losses came against nationally-ranked teams — Kansas State, 64-62 in overtime, and Penn State, 73-65. The other loss was to perennial southwestern powerhouse Oregon, 62-60.

Senior guard-forward Cheri Bratt leads UM in scoring with an 11.9 average. She also leads the team in steals with 36.

Junior forward Anita Novak is the only other Lady Griz scoring consistently in double figures, averaging 10.2 per game. She is also third in rebounds, 6.3 per game, and leads the team in blocked shots with 16.

Senior center Doris Deden Hasquet and guard Barb Kavanagh are averaging 9.8 points apiece, and sophomore center Shari Muralt is next with a 9.5 scoring average. Hasquet is UM's leading rebounder, 8.5 per game, and Kavanagh leads the team assists with 4.3 per game.

Montana State finished the pre-season with an 8-2 record, its best pre-season ever. The Bobcats are led by sophomore forward Kathleen McLaughlin, averaging 14.8 points and 9.2 rebounds. Senior guard Vicki Heebner is averaging 12.9 points and 5.1 assists. Junior center Evely Baldridge is MSU's leading rebounder averaging 11 per game.

"Montana State has a very good team this year," Lady Griz Coach Robin Selvig said. "They have good experience with three senior guards and they were in the conference playoffs last season. MSU is definitely a contender for the conference championship this season. They match up well with us in size and are a very strong rebounding team."

"This is obviously a big game for us," Selvig said. "It's the first conference game and there's also the rivalry to consider. I'm sure both teams will be emotionally ready.

Selvig is pleased with the way his team has played so far. "I'm very happy with our pre-season," he said. "We came out with a good record and it could have been better because all our losses were close. We played a difficult schedule, but I think we learned some things and are a better team because of it. I've been especially happy with our defense in the last few games. We've been playing good man-on-man and zone defense from the Giusti (Tournament in Portland Dec. 16-20) on."

American pilot dies in Honduras

(AP) — A U.S. Army helicopter pilot was killed by hostile fire "from the direction of the Nicaraguan border" after his chopper made a forced landing in Honduras, the Pentagon announced Wednesday. It was the first reported shooting episode involving American forces on training exercises in the area.

Two Army engineers, who were passengers in the downed OH-58 observation helicopter, were taken to a U.S. hospital at Palmerola Air Base in Honduras, where they were treated and released, said Col. Robert O'Brien, a Pentagon spokesman. O'Brien said he did not have any details on their injuries.

O'Brien said, in response to questions, that "to my knowledge, this is the first kind of shooting incident" involving Americans since U.S. forces began a series of major exercises in Honduras last September.

Keyes also praised ASUM Vice President Paula Jellison and ASUM Business Manager Greg Gullickson for performing their jobs "admirably."

But Bolinger feels that singing out two of the three people in the ASUM administration is "pretty ridiculous."

"We work together," he said. Still, Bolinger said he is not bothered by the attack and that it won't affect his friendship with Keyes.

"We are friends," he said, "and that will continue."

ment." He said it was a mistake for some Americans to denounce a military takeover when people were "dying of starvation in 'democratic' Nigeria."

"The old civilian government was seen as insensitive to the sufferings of the people," Noah said. "I felt freer under the military regime than under the civilian government," which he described as "very vindictive, very parochial and very self-centered."

Noah is the author of several books on colonial and modern African history, for which he has traveled to Portugal, Scotland and Northern Ireland to conduct extensive research. The books will be used as texts in his UM courses.

Nigeria's new government will apparently allow the three-year exchange program to continue. UM received a $50,000 grant from the U.S. Information Agency to establish the program.
