Poll to reopen today

Computer malfunctions stop ASUM election yesterday

By Eric Williams

Kaimin Reporter

The polls for the ASUM and MontPIRG elections will be open again today from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., since a number of students were unable to vote yesterday because of a computer failure.

The computer system, used to keep track of which students had voted, "went down at least four times," according to ASUM Vice President Paula Jellison.

The only polling station open today will be in the ASUM office, located on the first floor of the University Center.

Rob Johnson, senior in computer science, said the university's central computer system "crashed" twice, causing all three polling places to lose the computer. Jellison said terminals at the individual polling stations failed at other times.

Elections Committee Chairwoman Shannon Finney said she thought about 200 students were unable to vote because of the computer failure.

ASUM President David Bolinger said that the first time the entire system went down, he saw about 30 voters at the UC polling station turned away in 20 minutes.

The university's system failed again at about 3 p.m., and Jellison said electioneers began letting students vote "absentee." The voter would place his ballots in an envelope with his last name and student ID number written on it.

Jellison said the numbers will be put on a "master list" with those from the computer printout to ensure no one who has already voted votes again tomorrow.

After the 3 p.m. failure, Jellison said only the station in the Liberal Arts Building was restored, and that was only a few minutes before the polls closed at 5 p.m.

Bolinger said it is "unfortunate" that the election must be extended, but added that it is the only way to "enable disenfranchised students to vote."

Along with candidates for ASUM offices, students are also voting on a referendum to put $500,000 from the Student Building Fund toward the construction of a new football stadium.

ASUM presidential candidate

Phoebe Patterson said the election's committee was "faced with a no-win situation." She said the committee could either be "unfair to those who voted in good faith" Wednesday or be "extremely unfair" to those who weren't able to vote.

Dennis Garcia, who is running for vice president with presidential candidate Kevin Young, said "I think it's good for both the elections and the referendum" that the polls will be open an extra day, because "the polls were basically closed from 3 to 5."

Johnson, who volunteered to help run the computer system, said the names entered into the computer were not lost.

He said the computers did not fail during last year's election, but added the central system "has been crashing a lot lately."

Bolinger stressed that the problem was "a mechanical failure, not a human failure," and said he had heard of no other complaints about the election.

The ballot boxes were sealed and placed in the safe at the UC Bookstore. Separate boxes will be used tomorrow, and thus counts of each day's voting will be kept.

Patterson said she favors having separate tallies for the two days, adding that "if I lose, I want to know I was beaten Wednesday."

Legislation may cut financial aid

By Ann Joyce

Kaimin Reporter

The House Ways and Means Committee deliberated on a bill yesterday that could severely limit the amount of state money available for student loans by restricting the use of industrial development revenue bonds.

The committee reached no decision and will continue deliberations today.

In an effort to cut the federal deficit, congressmen have begun looking at ways to limit the amount of tax-exempt industrial development revenue bonds that state and local governments have been using to finance public, educational and private investments. The governments sell the bonds to citizens and no taxes are paid on the interest accrued from the bonds.

The House Ways and Means Committee, led by Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., has proposed linking the amount of the bonds available for sale to state population. Under this proposal, each state could sell only $150 per capita. Also, House resolution 4170 would place the public and educational uses of the bonds with those for private investment, such as those used to build the Sheraton Hotel in Missoula and for the addition to the Southgate Mall.

Last year, Montana sold $33.5 million worth of the bonds to finance the secondary market for student loans, said Ed Melson, state director of student loans. The state used the $33.5 million to buy student loan portfolios from other lenders, such as banks and savings and loan associations. As the state collected on the student loans it bought, it hoped to acquire enough capital to re-invest the money on a "round-robin basis" into other student loans, Melson said.

However, since the Ways and Means Committee proposed the limit on the bonds, which would be retroactive to Jan. 1, 1984, the state has not followed through on its plan to sell $40-$60 million more in student aid bonds this year, Melson said. The result is a halt in the state's effort to develop a secondary market for student loans which could help finance more students' education, he said.

If Congress accepts the Ways and Means Committee's proposal, the state's secondary student loan market would likely die before it even got started, Melson said.

Also, if students have to compete with private businesses for the bonds and the amount of the bonds available is limited, fewer will be available for student loans, he said.

Under the proposal, Montana would be able to sell only $118 million in revenue bonds.

"The limit is going to absolutely destroy the economic uses of the bonds in basic agricultural states like Montana," Melson said.

According to a report by the College Press Service, almost $3 billion worth of student loans would be affected nationally.

"The fact is, however, that you can't equate national education goals with building a new fast food place," Melson said.

Originally the revenue bonds were used by states and local governments to finance the construction of bridges, fire stations and the like. The use of the bonds, however, has extended to the private sector as a tool for job development. States can loan private businesses money to finance manufacturing plants, restaurants and other business ventures in their state.

According to Montana Rep. Pat Williams, the use of the bonds in this way "is in effect adding to the federal deficit."

"It is an income tax drain that Congress can't and has never tried to control" until now, he said. The "largest abuse" in the

Central Board OKs proposed constitution

By Eric Troyer

Kaimin Reporter

Central Board last night accepted the proposed ASUM Constitution.

It will be voted on by ASUM members during spring registration.

The old constitution conflicted with state law and had wording problems.

It allowed, upon dissolution of ASUM, for distribution of ASUM funds to charitable or educational organizations, but did not specify that those funds must be kept within the university system as required by state law. The proposed constitution states that the funds must be distributed within the University of Montana.

Other changes in the proposed constitution are:

- An addition that states the constitution must conform to state law and the policies of the Montana Board of Regents of Higher Education.

- That CB is required to conduct a referendum when it is presented in a petition signed by 10 percent of ASUM members and that it must be published in the four issues of the Montana Kaimin preceding the vote on the referendum. The old constitution required a petition of only five percent of ASUM members and did not

New UM tradition

The type of foul up that happened in yesterday's ASUM elections seems to be a new tradition on campus. Four of the last five ASUM elections or primaries have been plagued by either bad luck, inadequacies or both. But the end result of yesterday's foul up could be part of the solution to low voter turn out on campus.

Because of computer problems many students who wanted to vote weren't able to yesterday. So the ASUM elections committee and Central Board wisely decided to continue the election today. And this could turn out to be advantageous. Now people who were not on campus yesterday but are here today will also be able to vote.

Although many will complain about how ASUM fouled up yet another election process, it cannot reasonably be held responsible for computer malfunctions. Yes, perhaps it should have tested the computers before the election. Perhaps it should have had a back up system more readily at hand in case the computer system didn't work. (After many students were turned away from the polls, poll workers had voters give their names, which were then put into the computer when they recovered). The people in charge of the elections could have been better prepared for problems but they did not act irresponsibly. Once again, they have something to look out for in the next election.

But those in charge of the next election should also look at voter turn out in this election. If it is higher, part of the reason may be that more people can and will vote in a two — or even three — day election.

Many people complain that voter apathy is not the only reason few students vote in ASUM elections. Many of these argue that students don't vote in these elections because they hold ASUM in contempt. They call for a change in the way the student government is organized and run. And they are right. But as long as we have a student government of any kind we'll need to vote. And it would be beneficial if we had more than one day to do so.

Bangin' on my keys

Editor: Dear Beleaguered Kaimin,

I was shocked to learn that our esteemed CB (ha ha) had entertained the idea of cutting the Kaimin's cut of the cash on the grounds that the quality of our newspaper is questionable.

PREPOSTEROUS! There is nothing questionable about the journalistic capabilities of the alleged reporters on the Kaimin staff. They have none. They're hacks, a worse bunch of typewriter beaters has never existed. I'm talking bad!

But that's not the point. Even if the Kaimin never printed a good story (almost but not quite true), that still would not be reason enough to "slash" their budget. The Kaimin fills many a need on this campus.

Picture, if you will, the UM campus devoid of a school rag.

We would be ever so slightly less informed about the happenings around our campus (which might be a blessing in the case of Central Board). We wouldn't have Domino's coupons (absolutely necessary) and we might have to talk to each other during lunch. We wouldn't be enlightened with the views of such great thinkers as Paul T. Clark, the Iranian Students Organization and a whole slew of others. Needless to say it would be a bleak existence.

Think about it and remember, no one makes us read it so it must be worth something.

WEATHER OR NOT

by Thiel

The Right Hook ~~~~~by Richard Venola For Dormites Only

And so it came to pass in the Land of the Heavy Air that the high priests at the Temple of Learning grew grave with concern. The gods of the blue spark in the place of the void known as Berkeley were angry. They demanded greater sacrifices from those who worshipped at the shrines of the blue spark fixed upon the walls of all the dwellings.

Yea, though the priests and the multitudes became as one in their lamentations, the gods of the blue spark heard not. The gods sprang unto the multitudes, saying: "All ye who worship at the shrines upon the walls must send forth greater supplications, or the blue sparks will vanish from your dwellings." And the multitudes shook with fear of losing the blue sparks, and sent forth their supplications in the form of green paper which greatly pleased the gods at the place of the void which is known as Berkeley.

The priests at the Temple of Learning formed council. "Lo," they said. "The blue sparks come not freely to our temple. We can not afford the greater sacrifices." And so the word went forth. The room of the temple known as Rezzhaults sent forth an edict unto the disciples dwelling at the temple. And the great Rezzhaults caused mighty banners to be erected in the dwellings of the disciples so that each day as the disciples passed, to and from their dwellings, they read the words encribed upon the banners saying: "Those who worship at the shrine of the blue spark excessively are an abomination unto the temple! Useth not the driers of hair nor the blasters of ghettos, and neither shall ye leave the lamp which does not smoke burning when the sun shines!"

And thusly did the great Rezzhaults intend to smite the indulgers of the blue spark, for their promiscuity had angered the gods. And the disciples living at the Temple of Learning hearkened unto the banners of the great Rezzhaults and mitigated their worship at the shrines of the blue spark. The disciples vied and contested among themselves to see who could worship the blue sparks least.

But among the priests there were apostates. They dimmed not the lamps in their chambers of enscriptment. And among the disciples there were many who saw and became as doubters. Yea, as weeds grow in the cracks of stones, so the numbers of the doubters grew, nurtured upon the cracks of the logic of the high priests. The doubters spoke, saying "Why doth the priests leave their lamps alighted and why art the rooms of study as furnaces, causing us to cast open the windows so that we might not be consumed by the heat? Art the disciples who dwell in the abodes of the temple to suffer from the fires of hell, even as they remain chaste from the worship of the blue spark? Must we roast as lambs upon the spit? Or shall we leave our windows open to man and beast alike?"

The great Rezzhaults spoke not. The disciples who were as doubters raised their hands to their faces, placing thumbs to noses and causing their fingers to wiggle.

Faculty research work is an integral part of the university

By Laura Harrawood
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

The mountains certainly are beautiful, and they are the reason that some University of Montana students are in Missoula. But Dr. Ray Murray, dean of research at UM, thinks it is an oversimplification to assume that good teachers as well as are attracted to UM merely by the hunting, fishing and skiing.

Instead, he thinks scholars are attracted to scholars. And judging by the amount of research done, UM has a lot of scholars.

"Historically, a university's faculty is expected to do three things: teach, perform public service and do research and creative activities, Murray says. "It's an expectation of the institution...that all faculty will make contributions in research or creative activities."

But he adds that research is obviously not the right word for disciplines such as music, art, drama or creative writing. Instead, professors in those fields make their contributions by conducting, performing, directing or writing, and these functions are labeled creative activities.

Universities have traditionally been the center of the basic research activities in the country, Murray says, but research has now become the central focus of the universities, in that research supplements the teaching and the service. Without the research and creative activities, he says, "the teaching would be far poorer and there would be little opportunity for delivering real public service and the new ideas that were developed at the university."

A faculty member who is creating ideas of his or her own is a far better teacher, he says, "because that faculty member is able to deliver in the classroom ideas that come not only from books, but something that the individual has actually created." That, he says, "makes teaching far more vital, more exciting and more important."

University of Montana President Neil Bucklew agrees. He says that a university encourages research both for the value of the research itself and for the effect it has on the classroom.

"The act of research means that a person is working on the developments of their field," he says. "They have to be well read, they have to stay up with the journals and apply that to their own particular research activity. The result is, they're better teachers. They're more current and alive individuals. They know the field."

Since World War II, Murray says, the federal and state governments have contributed much in support of research and creative activities. Now, he sees an increased emphasis on support from the private sector for university research.

UM receives, as a result of faculty proposals, about $5 million a year in support of research and creative activities from the federal government, agencies of the federal government, state government, foundations and industry, Murray says.

"As a matter of fact," he says, "in terms of dollars received on a per-faculty-member basis, the University of Montana is in the upper 15 percent of institutions across the country, for institutions with our mix of disciplines."

The mix of disciplines at a university and its size are inescapable criteria when trying to judge its success in research nationally, Bucklew says. That is because external money is often available in some disciplines and not in others. For example, if UM had a medical school and related medical science disciplines, Bucklew says that the research support for the university would double, or even triple. Or, if UM had a school of agriculture, then the university would get more government support.

But, he says, for the mix of disciplines, and for the size of the institution, UM compares well to other such institutions across the nation.

Another way to measure the success of a university's research and creative efforts, Bucklew says, is the instructional experience. He gives as an example the fact that UM leads the nation in the number of Sears Congressional Fellows in journalism.

"That says something about the vitality of the learning experience and the quality of the people involved," he says.

Also, UM was just honored with its 22nd Rhodes Scholar.

"That makes us in the top 20 institutions of any type in the United States for the number for Rhodes Scholars," Bucklew says. "We're in the top six of public universities in the United States. Now, that seems to me to be an example of effective, vital teaching, which has to represent the quality of the research and scholarly efforts of the faculty."

Bucklew says he doesn't hear faculty complain that too much research is required. Instead, he hears them wish for more resources and time, which he thinks is a fair concern.

"Indeed, our faculty have heavy teaching loads," he says. "That's a requirement. I wish we had resources in order to relieve people, at least occasionally, of some of the teaching demands so they could concentrate their work in some of the other activities."

Every faculty member is evaluated against the written standards of his or her department in questions of promotion, tenure and advancement in the institution, Bucklew says. Research and creative activity is one of the features that is evaluated, as is instruction and public service.

Some departments use differentiated evaluation, which allows the department to change a faculty member's emphasis — giving him more classroom time, or more time for research, depending upon his needs or successes at the time.

"It may be that things are tilted in particular cases," Bucklew says, "but in every case there is a minimum expectation of a person being active scholarly, involved in his field, and making a contribution to it. It's a rare faculty member of this institution who doesn't value very much the research effort they're about."

Despite the success of the research program at UM, both Bucklew and Murray see problems. Cost of equipment is one, particularly in the sciences, where modern research requires state of the art equipment. Maintaining library resources for effective research is another.

The location of the university is an inherent problem for some researchers, like nuclear physicists, and an inherent advantage for others, like wildlife biologists, Bucklew says.

The problem for some people, Murray says, is that "we live in a valley. To leave this valley, you have to go over a pass." Interacting with other scholars depends upon the availability of travel funds and opportunities to get over those passes, he says. He and Bucklew would like to see more of both.

"In important research and creative activity, the idea of self-sufficiency doesn't work," Murray says. "There must be interaction among the people at other institutions."

"If there is a specific impediment for us, it is the sense of isolation, he says. "And you have to work at that sense of isolation to get out."

Lady Griz close MWAC season at home

The University of Montana Lady Griz return home to close out Mountain West Athletic Conference play against Weber State tomorrow and Idaho State Sunday.

The Lady Grizzlies clinched the conference championship on the road last week with wins over Portland State, 53-38, and Boise State, 71-57. The game tomorrow in Dahlberg Arena will begin at 8 p.m. and Sunday's game will tipoff at 2 p.m.

UM is 22-3 overall and sports a perfect 12-0 conference record. The Lady Griz have won 14 straight this season and 33 straight in Dahlberg Arena, including wins at the end of last season.

Senior guard-forward Cheri Bratt leads UM in scoring with a 12.1 per game average. She also leads the team in assists (4 per game), steals (56 on the season) and field goal percentage (.504).

The 5-foot-10 Kalispell native is also second in rebounding, averaging seven a game.

Senior Doris Deden Hasquet and junior Anita Novak are tied for second in scoring with 10.9

averages. Hasquet, a 6-foot-1 center from Missoula, leads the team in rebounding, averaging eight a game.

Junior Barb Kavanagh, the Mountain West Player of the Week, is fourth in scoring (10.7) and second in assists average (3.8).

The 5-foot-9 guard from Fort Collins, Colo., scored a career-high 24 points in UM's win over Boise State Saturday. She also tallied eight points in the win over Portland State to help her win the Player of the Week honors.

Weber State is tied with Montana State for fourth place in the MWAC with a 6-6 conference record. The Wildcats are 12-13 overall and coming off an 81-70 win over Idaho State.

The Lady Griz thumped WSC earlier this season in Ogden 74-52.

Weber State is led by senior forward-center Becky Ingle, averaging 18.6 points and 9.2 rebounds per game, and senior guard-forward Karleen Peart, averaging 17.2 points a game. Carla Taylor is the Wildcats' only other starter averaging in double figures with 14.9.

Other probable Wildcat starters are sophomores Shelley Roberts and Michelle Kelsey. "Weber State is a very good team and they have some excellent scorers," Lady Griz Coach Robin Selvig said. "They play Montana State Thursday night so they'll probably know whether they'll be in the conference tournament. That should take a lot of pressure off of them."

UM will host the MWAC tourney either March 9 and 10 or March 8 through the 10, depending upon the site of the Big Sky Conference Tournament.

The Lady Griz's first game will be against the winner of the MSU-Weber State game.

Idaho State is 7-17 overall and 1-11 in conference play. Montana beat Idaho State in Pocatello this year, 64-37.

UM spends more on football team than on research

By Deirdre Hathorn
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

The University of Montana spends about 35 percent more on the football team than it does on research, according to Glen Williams, fiscal affairs vice president.

The football team spends about $700,000 and recovers about $214,000 through ticket sales and guarantees — money that the home team pays the travelling team to defray travel expenses (the home school pays $10,000 for conference games) — but the remaining expenses are picked up by the university.

However, according to Barbara Hollmann, associate athletic director, the amount of money the football team costs is deceiving. She said the football team generates indirect revenue because many alumni and community members who make donations to the university support the school because of its sports programs. Hollmann suspects that if the football program were dropped, the loss of university donations would exceed the cost of the program.

"I can't tell you the degree of support we would lose, but I don't want to test it," she said.

She also said that if the football team's funding were cut, the money would not be channelled into other departments, but would be dropped because the team's expenses would not be submitted to the state as a portion of the university's budget request.

Hollmann said that publicity the football team receives through the media increases the university's exposure to the community. This publicity, she said, increases enrollment. Since state funding is based on enrollment the football team has a positive, indirect effect, she said.

She also said the campus administration thinks that athletics are necessary in maintaining a broad-based university. She said that by subsidizing the athletic programs, "the university is saying, 'we think this is important.'"

The largest share of the football budget is spent on scholarships. Regulations set by the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), the body which governs college sports, allows 65 full-ride football scholarships. The University of Montana issues all of them at a cost of $262,310. Coaches salaries, which cost $153,134, and the $115,566 cost to host home games also makes up a large part of the budget.

Hollmann said that the goal of the athletic department is to make enough money in ticket sales and revenue to break even. At present, only the men's basketball team earns more money than it spends, while the other athletic programs depend on state funding. Despite the deficit, Hollmann thinks the athletic department's goal can be reached if the football team can develop a winning program and if plans to build a new stadium materialize.

Hollmann said the new stadium would increase more ticket sales because the new facility would be more attractive and comfortable for spectators. Since the building would be funded only by donations, it wouldn't drain university funds, she said. Hollmann also said that the facility would make money because the university would be able to sell television contracts for the games which would be regionally televised.

use of the bonds is "in effect using federal money for private ventures."

Williams said he has suggested to Rostenkowski and the Ways and Means Committee that the public uses of the bonds, including education, not be included in the proposal.

He said the proposed limit is "somewhat unfair to lightly populated areas like Montana."

Williams said the bill could go before the House as early as next week.

A spokesman for Rep. Ron Marlenee (R-Mont.) said it is premature to comment because the committee is still discussing the bill and changes could be made.

Michael Harrington will lecture tonight

Michael Harrington, a political scientist and author, will deliver a free public lecture on "The Legacy of the Great Depression" in the Underground Lecture Hall at the University of Montana Thursday, March 1.

Harrington's book, "The Other America," was instrumental in initiating the political awareness that led to the Kennedy and Johnson administrations' "War on Poverty" programs in the '60s.

The lecture will begin at 7:30 p.m. It is part of a UM course and lecture series on the Great Depression of the 1930s.

Harrington's latest book is titled "The Vast Majority: A Journey to the World's Poor." He is a political science professor at Queen's College of the City University of New York and is co-chairman of the Democratic Socialists of America Party, formerly known as the Socialist Party.

A panel discussion will follow the lecture. Moderator for the panel is Horst Jarka, UM foreign languages professor and coordinator of the lecture series. Panel members are Ruyard Goode, UM business professor; John Photiades, UM economics associate professor; and Ronald Perrin, UM political science professor.

Harrington's lecture is sponsored by the Montana Committee for the Humanities and the Associated Students of UM Programming Lecture Series.

provide for the referendum to be published in the Kaimin.

•That ASUM may be dissolved by referendum.

•That the Constitutional Review Board has the authority to decide on the constitutionality of matters not covered by the constitution or the ASUM Bylaws.

•A change of wording that allows, but does not require, ASUM to create a student conduct code that establishes the right of a student to petition for relief from university administration rulings. The old constitution required ASUM to create a student conduct code.

In other business ASUM President David Bolinger announced that the Board of Regents have included a clause in University admission requirements that allows a university unit to deny admission to any student it considers a safety threat to the students or the campus.

Director appointed

Richard B. Offner, associate director since 1982 of the Montana University Affiliated Program for Developmental Disabilities (MUAP), headquartered at the University of Montana, has been named MUAP director at an annual salary of $40,000. The appointment is effective immediately.

Offner was selected after a national search that began last August.
