Workshop to focus on cults

By Shannon Hinds
Kaimin Reporter

The growing phenomena of people being "sucked into" cults is becoming a "hot issue" in churches, universities and various organizations throughout the United States, said Mike Frost, a campus minister from Christ the King church.

The dangers of being persuaded to join a cult are very real, said Frost. University students are particularly vulnerable to cult leaders because they are often lonely, away from home and not in a familiar environment, he said.

One group that is threatening to University of Montana students is the Unification Church, or the Moonies, said Frost, adding that he has seen Moonies at football games and other university activities trying to convince students to join their group.

Because of the "pressing" problem of people becoming controlled or "brain-washed" by cult members, the Christ the King church is holding a workshop about cults April 6 at the church.

The church hopes to "educate" the public about what cults are and how to watch out for them, Frost said. Shirley Landa, president of Citizens Freedom Foundation in Seattle, will talk about who gets involved in cults, what the signs and symptoms of a cult member are and how cults recruit new members.

Landa, who has worked with ex-cult members and their families for about eight years, said that she wants to give participants in the workshop some guidelines for dealing with cults. It is important to clear up misconceptions about cults, Landa said, adding that most members are not runaways and drug addicts as many people think. Many members are intelligent and are often college students or professional people, she said.

Cults usually lure people into their group by promising them love and friendship, Landa said. People also join cults because it seems a "nice program" or because the cult members seem to be representing a "good cause," she said.

Often people join cults without knowing what they are getting into, Landa said. Sometimes they are taken away for a weekend "retreat" and are not allowed to leave, she said. They are kept up late at night and are under extreme emotional stress and therefore become very vulnerable, Landa said. Cults use deception and mind-altering technics to get people to join, she added.

Also, cult members are often not allowed to make their own decisions and choices, Landa said. Often they are married by assignment and are only permitted to have children when the cult leaders let them, she said.

However, according to UM sociology professor Robert Balch, who has done research on cults and studied one cult by becoming a member for two years, cults are not as dangerous and threatening as Landa makes them out to be. Landa's Citizens Freedom Foundation group is an anti-cult organization and is not very open-minded about cults, Balch said. People may join cults because they are lonely and are promised friendship and love, but they also join the Catholic Church for these reasons, he said.

UM art exhibition to open in China

By Parmelia Newbern
Kaimin Senior Editor

Works of art by University of Montana faculty members and students will be on display next month in Hangzhou, China.

The display is part of an official exchange between UM and the Zhejiang Academy of Fine Arts in Hangzhou. Last fall, a 100-piece art exhibit by students and faculty at the Zhejiang Academy was shown at UM's Gallery of Visual Arts.

Donald Bunse, UM art professor, leaves for China today to attend the UM art exhibition, which runs through April 23. While there he will give a workshop on collagraphing, a printing process he helped invent which is similar to etching.

James Todd, UM art department chairman, will also be attending the exhibition in China. Todd, who has been on sabbatical since September in Berlin, is traveling across the Soviet Union by train and will arrive in China in time for the display.

Bunse said the UM exhibition represents a variety of art.

"It represents the U of Montana faculty, which is pretty varied, and the student work," he said.

Work on the exchange has been going on for more than a year. The initial contact for the exchange was made in 1980 by Albert Yee, then UM dean of education, during a trip to China.

According to Bunse, UM was chosen over several other schools in the Northwest about two years ago for the art exchange, when Zheng Shenti-ang, of the Zhejiang Academy, toured art schools throughout the area.

According to Stephen Connell, acting dean of the UM art department, UM was chosen for the exchange program because of its "ambiance."

"They (Zheng and others on the tour) said a number of times they felt comfortable here and liked the people," he said.

Connell said he hoped the exhibition would result in more exchanges, not only of art, but also of faculty and students.

Small thefts prove costly for Food Service

By Jim Fairchild
Kaimin Managing Editor

If you live in a University of Montana dormitory and eat in the Food Service, chances are that you have a cup and spoon from the Food Service in your room to fix that late-night cup of cocoa.

While it may not seem like a big deal to you, it's part of a $14,000-a-year problem for John Piquette, director of the Residence Halls Food Service.

That's how much the Food Service spent last year to replace worn out, broken and stolen china and utensils, Piquette said in an interview last week. While a certain number of dishes each year inevitably wear out or are broken during washing or dining, losses due to theft are unnecessary and could be reduced, he added.

"While it may not seem like theft" to the student who walks out of the Food Service with dishes or utensils, Piquette said, "it's the same as walking into The Bon downtown and walking out" with merchandise that wasn't paid for.

The attitude of students who take dishes and utensils, Piquette said, "is, 'What the hell, it's the state of Montana's money' that pays to replace pilfered items. But we (the Food Service) don't get a nickel from the state. The cost is born by the students who buy meal cards and eat here."

The Food Service's $2.7 million annual budget is funded entirely through the sale of meal cards, Piquette explained, and does not include any operating subsidies from state funds.

The exact percentage of the annual replacement cost resulting from theft is impossible to determine, Piquette said, and declined to hazard an estimate. However, he said, "if you start the day with, say, 100 plates, and you end up that night with 87, and know you've only broken a couple that day, something's going somewhere."

Accidental breakage by diners and during dishwashing is an unavoidable part of any food service or restaurant operation, Piquette said, so that the Food Service will always have to include funds for replacement in its budget.

However, he said, the Food See "Food," page 6.

Opinion

Seize the moment!

Last quarter's ASUM election made one point overwhelmingly clear: University of Montana students want nothing to do with the present student government system, and want to see it die a quick death.

Now, with the mythical new constitution again back on the drawing board, it is time to see how much of our government can be salvaged.

An astounding 84.5 percent of the student body, by deliberately avoiding the ballot box, said that enough is enough. Far from a matter of an inconvenient voting system or "apathy" (a relic word from junior high school civics debates), that message was a thumbing of the nose at those who made student government synonymous with tweed jackets, delusions of mayoral grandeur and sleazy deals on used furniture.

Editorial

More than eight of every 10 students made it clear that they see student government as a game played by over-Junior Achievers who didn't get enough action in their high school debate teams. Whether or not that's fair, for students holding two part-time jobs, feeding a family and going to school at the same time, the game is superfluous and irrelevant.

Thoreau wrote that "the authority of government...must have the sanction and consent of the governed." UM students have defiantly declared that they have withdrawn that sanction and consent, and damn the consequences.

And yet, with this year's ASUM budget of $510,286.22, student government is a serious business. While the current government is clearly a dying anachronism, a government must be created that will earn the respect of students.

Just as the State of Montana did in 1972, UM students must consider a new form of government. Some suggestions:

- Abolish the cumbersome, unwieldy, 20-member Central Board. On a campus of slightly more than 9,000 students it is too large. (And since only 15.5 percent of those voted, each CB member represents an average of only 71 students!)

- Instead, create a nine-member student council with one representative for each of the seven professional schools, one for the College of Arts and Sciences and one for unaffiliated programs. Students would vote for their representative according to the school or program they are enrolled in. The current system, representation by living arrangement, is as outdated as varsity letter sweaters, junior prom queens and "It's Academic." It's a relic from Ivy League schools in the days when organized non-dorm housing (i.e., fraternities) were the norm. It's an unnatural way to apportion voters, with a built-in bias in favor of Greek organizations.

- The council would elect a president from among the nine. No slot for president would appear on the general election ballot. This might help eliminate the ego factor in general elections.

- Council members would receive a nominal salary (currently, CB members serve gratis). This might instill responsibility. (It might also attract persons looking for quick cash, but then the current system has attracted its share of ripoff artists.)

- Before any of this, hold hearings to solicit student comments on the changes. Then appoint a committee of responsible students and faculty advisors to hammer out a new constitution that includes the changes.

President Phoebe Patterson has put Bolinger's White Hart, his constitution, on the shelf. We congratulate her move. We hope she has chosen a high shelf, and that the dust piles high before it is again pulled down for student consideration.

Even if its current wording problems are cleared up, it will not even draw the requisite 25 percent referendum turnout if it does not promise major changes. We will have another embarrassment on our hands.

Now is time for Patterson and CB's SHEG party to seize the moment.

Iranian Population Control: A Modest Proposal

The Top Rail — by Stephen Smith

Save Me The Top Rail

In recent weeks, a stroll along Missoula's downtown sidewalks would invariably result in a meeting with a representative of the Unification Church.

I want to emphasize that I am all for freedom of speech. If people of different opinions wish to mutually discuss their differences, that's fine. Conversely if I am standing on a corner waiting for a light to change, I expect complete strangers to leave me alone. It seems unfair that one should be subjected to an onslaught of pseudo-religious rhetoric only because the traffic light is green and not red (a sign from above?).

The facet of these blinded-by-the-light dogooders that interests me is what must be going through their heads to convince them that they, above all others, hold a monopoly on the truth? This applies not only to the "moonies" but to any of the street corner crusaders. Even worse are those little men in gray suits who annually knock on your door and ask you to deposit your soul.

If the appearance of sincerity was any indicator to the extent of universal truth embodied in the beliefs proposed, I would now belong to at least ten different religions, sects or cults. Most of these folks seem sincere that, indeed, they are on the one true road. I know that a "moonie" occasionally meets a gray-suit man at an intersection and I imagine there must be a collision that would rival that of the Titanic and the iceberg. Let me interject that on the road map of life, I am ambulating down the little dotted line that means unimproved dirt trail, and I don't take rides from strangers to that big freeway over yonder.

Obviously sincerity or the appearance of it, is not always good enough to sway potential recruits. A closer look at the tactics of the Unification members shows where a little psychology can sure go a long way.

Assuming that the "moonie" recruit squad has their timing down, they approach a target waiting for a "walk" signal at Higgins and Main. If only for a few seconds, there is nothing a moonie would rather do than bend the ear of a trapped lost soul. They are more sophisticated these days and immediately slide right into a smooth delivery.

First they introduce themselves and then pause, waiting for the courtesy to be returned. Most people out of politeness and a social tendency do so. It would be better not to. This is generally the strategy I follow, although the other day I was a little slow and I ended up answering a "survey". I qualify survey because really it was more like a multiple choice test and none of the answers to choose from were very optimistic.

One question asked when I thought World War III would start. I told him I didn't think there was going to be a World War III. The look of disappointment on his face broke my heart. Every question he asked was designed to elicit answers that could only support a grim perspective of the world and its future.

This is the thrust of the "moonie" argument. The world is going to hell in a handbasket and if you believe that then they would like an additional forty minutes of your time to let you in on the universal truth.

People who fall for this group are vulnerable at two points. First they become convinced that the world is a terrible place. Talking to a "moonie" is a depressing experience. The only good thing they have to say is that there is a universal truth, and don't you think you should know about it? This is the second point of vulnerability. It is difficult to ignore some one who is telling you what happens to people who ignore a chance at the universal truth. I've learned to be suspicious of people with all of the answers, especially when the answers dictate how I should run my life.

Then again I have some admiration for the Reverend Moon. His converts have made him into a millionaire and he lives the life of luxury becoming of a man who hands down the word of God.

Sort of makes a man wonder, a change here and there in that little talk and who knows what one could accomplish; pardon me ma'am, this a terrible place, how about we grab a six pack and go talk over some universal truths?

Correction

Two names were omitted from a story yesterday on University of Montana students and staff who were elected to attend the state Democratic convention as delegates.

Maria Essig, research investigator in the Wood Chemistry Laboratory, was selected as a delegate for Sen. Gary Hart. Bill Thomas, senior in social work, was elected as an uncommitted delegate supporting the Rev. Jesse Jackson. Jackson did not receive enough votes at the Missoula caucus to qualify for delegates from Missoula county.

Despite loss in semi-finals, coach is pleased with Lady Griz

By Eric Williams
Kaimin Sports Reporter

Although the Lady Griz lost to the University of Southern California 76-51 in the NCAA Western Regional semi-final game last week, coach Robin Selvig is still pleased with his team's year.

"We achieved everything we had hoped for and probably more," Selvig said of the first Lady Griz team to make the "sweet sixteen" of college women's basketball.

In reaching that game, the Lady Griz sailed through the Mountain West Athletic Conference unbeaten, and then stopped Montana State and Eastern Washington in the league's tournament.

They then topped Oregon State 56-47 in the first round of the NCAA's in Dahlberg Arena. That was the second time the Lady Griz had played in an NCAA tournament game, but it was the first held in Missoula and the first the Lady Griz won.

In running up a 27-3 record before bowing to defending national champion USC, UM's only losses came to other teams that made the NCAA tourney: Kansas State (25-6), Oregon (23-7) and Penn State (19-12).

The Women of Troy's three All-America candidates/Olympic hopefuls, twins Paula and Pam McGee and Cheryl Miller were too much for UM. Playing on their home court, the trio scored 60 points and overpowered the smaller Lady Griz.

Forward Cheri Bratt led UM with 21 points, and was the only Lady Griz player in double figures.

Selvig was particularly pleased with the crowd at the UM-OSU game. 4,030 fans watched the game in Missoula; over 300 more than attended the USC game in Los Angeles.

He said he feels USC has a good chance of repeating as national champions. USC plays Louisiana Tech in a final four semi-final game. Cheney State takes on Tennessee in the other game.

Along with a fine team season, a number of Lady Griz won individual awards as well.

Senior center Doris Deden Hasquet, who leaves UM as the all-time leading scorer (1248 points) and rebounder (856), was named to the Kodak all-district VII first team, the all-district VII academic team and the Mountain West second team.

Bratt, also a senior, was named to the MWAC's first team and is a finalist for the Wade Trophy, given to the best women basketball player in the nation.

Junior guard Barb Kavanagh and sophomore guard Margaret Williams were also named to the district VII academic team, while junior forward Anita Novak made the MWAC honorable mention list.

New building a boon to Drama and Dance department

By Jim Skaranck
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

The Drama and Dance department, whose facilities are currently spread all over campus, will soon be housed in a single building.

In recent years adequate space has been a "big problem" for the department, which at one time was operating out of 17 buildings on and around the UM campus, said Bill Raoul, associate professor in Drama and Dance.

In addition to the Fine Arts Building, where faculty offices are located, the department is currently using both the Women's Center and the UC Recreation Center for dance rehearsals. The Men's Gym and two houses on campus are used for storage and costume shops.

The new facility will have rooms specifically designed for each of these, Raoul said, and it will provide Drama and Dance students with the experience of working in front of a camera. He believes students should grow accustomed to working with cameras because television is vital to performing.

The facility will also be used by the Radio-TV department.

The building is designed so either department can take advantage of the other's facilities through the use of a cable system. The system uses about $10,000 worth of cable, which can be linked into any room in the building for use with TV cameras.

The $8.6 million facility will also be equipped with computer-controlled stage lights, which can change lighting faster than the manual methods now used in the Fine Arts Building, Raoul said.

Also a counterweight system will be used for raising and lowering scenery props in the building's main theater.

"This is a luxury that the Fine Arts Building doesn't offer; therefore students must change the set more frequently during a performance," said Raoul.

The main theater will have a seating capacity of 499. In addition, there will also be two smaller theaters, each of which will seat about 100 people. The smaller theaters are designed to provide seating that surrounds the stage.

Currently, there are 120 students enrolled in the Department of Drama and Dance, 100 of whom are drama students.

Raoul believes new courses will develop after the two departments move into the new facility due to growth in the enrollment and faculty of both departments. The Fine Arts Department currently offers an interdisciplinary course that combines visual art with theater.

Work on the new building is running ahead of schedule, according to Project Superintendent Bill Howard. the contract completion date is for the beginning of October, 1984, but the building may be finished as early as late July, he said.

Service has taken several steps to lessen routine losses:

•New "direct loading" dishwashers installed in recent years have drastically reduced accidental breakage. The number of steps required to operate the new machines are fewer than with the previous machines, meaning that the dishes are handled less and chances for dropping them are reduced. Piquette said such a dishwasher was installed in the Treasure State dining room in the summer of 1979, and another installed in the Cascade dining room a year later. The cost of replacement items plummeted from $18,000 to $11,000 within three years of the first machine's installation, Piquette said. (He explained that last year's replacement expenditure was up to $14,000 because of routine fluctuation arising when bulk-purchased items wear out, necessitating a large purchase to replace them.)

•Increased employee awareness helps prevent carelessness. Piquette said that every quarter he posts bulletins and displays or gives briefings emphasizing the cost of breakage.

•Carpeting installed in the dining area last summer has reduced the number of plates that break when they're dropped by providing a softer floor surface.

As for the theft problem, Piquette said, "Toward the end of every quarter, when people are getting ready to move off campus, we become aware of people loading up their backpacks" with plates, cups, silverware and even trays.

Student servers, bus persons, checkers and other student diners are quick to report such thefts to supervisors, Piquette said, and the supervisors routinely stop such thieves.

"It's an absolute embarrassment for them," Piquette said, to be stopped in the Food Service with a backpack full of stolen items.

Piquette said that usually the individual promptly hands over the items and nothing is said or done, but warned that theft of Food Service property, no matter how small, is theft of UM property. He said that the UM Rules of Student Conduct specifically prohibit theft of school property and provide for punishment consisting of a warning letter, probation, suspension or even criminal prosecution.

Journalism professor wins teaching award

Jerry Holloron, an associate professor of journalism at the University of Montana, is one of 11 winners of the 1984 National Teaching Award.

The award is sponsored by the American Society of Newspaper Editors and the Poynter Institute for Mass Media Studies.

The award honors college journalism teachers in the United States and Canada who have demonstrated "proven ability in the teaching of writing and editing, devotion to students, a love for the English language and a dedication to teaching its proper and creative use." A panel of prominent newspaper editors makes the selections.

Holloron and the other winners will participate in a seminar on effective teaching May 27 through June 1 at the institute in St. Petersburg, Fla.

Holloron joined the UM journalism faculty in 1974. He is a former chief of the Lee Newspapers state bureau in Helena and served as a visiting lecturer at the journalism school in 1972 and 1973.

He has worked for the Missoulian, Great Falls Tribune, Hamilton Daily Ravalli Republic and the Wisconsin State Journal at Madison.

From April 1971 to April 1972, Holloron was assistant director and local-government research analyst of the Montana Constitutional Convention Commission. He later served as research director of the Montana Legislative Council.

He earned a bachelor's degree in 1964 and a master's degree in 1965 from the UM School of Journalism.

Alice in Weatherland

"Good grief," thought Alice as she trudged back to her illegally parked car. "I rush over to the Kaimin to get my first story assignment and I get stuck doing an article on potholes."

She slammed the car door and peeled out of the parking lot. "It won't even have photos or quotations in it. And what is the use of a story," thought Alice, "without photos or quotations?"

Perhaps music from her car stereo would have charms to soothe her savage ... nerves. "... forecast, with a high of 46 and a low of 27. This is KWON, Missoula's only all-weather station. Once again, a high of 46..." Alice switched the radio off.

As Alice turned the corner, she suddenly slammed on the brake, but it was too late. A monstrously huge pothole swallowed her car.
