Personnel director must wear two hats

By Deirdre Hathhorn

Kaimin Reporter

In her work as director of equal opportunity and personnel services, Lynda Brown must perform a balancing act to smooth relations between University of Montana supervisors and their employees.

As director of equal opportunity (EO) Brown receives complaints from employees who believe they are being discriminated against because of sex, religion or handicap, and from victims of sexual harassment. She also handles complaints from non-union employees. Brown investigates these cases and takes action if the worker's rights have been violated.

As personnel director she interprets personnel policies and implements grievance procedures filed by personnel.

The personnel and EO offices merged in 1978.

As personnel director, Brown said a supervisor may come to her with a complaint about an employee and consult with her about firing procedures. After receiving a warning letter from the supervisor, the employee often files a complaint claiming discrimination.

When the employee discovers that Brown has already talked to the supervisor, they often become angry, thinking that Brown and the supervisor are in collusion, she said.

Brown said the conflict is not the result of holding two jobs, but a problem inherent in personnel decisions.

Brown also sits on the management side of negotiations of the Montana University System collective bargaining team as UM's personnel representative. Rich Poitras, president of the Staff Senate, which represents all non-faculty workers and passes the staff's view point to the administration, said "the general feeling of the staff is that Brown is on the administrative side no matter what."

He said the staff believes Brown can't perform both jobs "without some bias."

Poitras said a firm definition of the responsibilities of an equal opportunity director is needed "so that employees know what to expect from Lynda."

The existing definition, he said, is open to interpretation, making it difficult for an employee to charge that Brown is failing to fulfill her duties as EO director.

The university is responsible for writing job descriptions and combining offices. UM President Neil Bucklew said Poitras has not spoken to him about redefining Brown's job, and added "no conflict exists between the two jobs."

Court denies UM law school graduates' request for exemption from bar exams

By Associated Press and Kaimin staff reports

The Montana Supreme Court issued a one-sentence order Thursday denying a petition by the 1984 graduating class of the University of Montana Law School to become licensed lawyers without taking the state bar exam.

Eula Compton, a third year UM law student, said the denial was anticipated, and that now the students' case will be taken before the Federal District Court in Billings.

"It will be interesting to see if the federal court will listen to us," she said.

The students' attorney, William Leaphart of Helena, had filed the petition on Monday alleging that the constitutional rights of the 1984 grads are being violated by a 1980 examination requirement imposed by the Supreme Court.

The state bar examination is a grueling three-day test held twice a year in Helena that certifies lawyers and allows them to practice in Montana. Prior to the March 24, 1980, order, graduates of the UM law school were automatically allowed to practice law in Montana without having to take the bar exam. Others wishing to practice law in Montana were required to take the test.

Originally, the diploma privilege was established because of close ties between the UM School of Law and the state court. The court in the past argued that it carefully monitored the curriculum at the law school and was able to control the quality of its graduates. The states of Wisconsin, Mississippi and West Virginia are the last states to have the diploma privilege.

The 1980 decision ended the privilege in Montana but made an exception for anyone who was a UM Law School student at the time or anyone in the process of becoming a student.

Nine students in the class of 1984 have thus far had their petitions reviewed by the court and were given the right to practice law upon graduation without taking the exam.

The remaining 68 graduating third year students felt this was unfair and they sought legal

A prostitution of ideals

Six headless women model bathing suits on a billboard advertisement. Women Against Pornography reacts by defacing the ad with spray paint.

It is a protest against the "dehumanizing" use of women's bodies in advertising. Though W.A.P.'s anger may be justified, its method of expression is not. It accomplished little. The paint has since been washed away, but the act may even have hurt the cause it was meant to further.

The billboard in question, which advertises Jantzen swimwear for Hennessy's department store, is just south of the Clark Fork River on Orange Street. Early last week, an "x," a telephone number and the biological symbol for woman were scrawled on its surface in spray paint. Several days later, W.A.P. distributed a xeroxed photograph of the damaged billboard, below which was typed the following message:

Editorial

"Our action on the Hennessy's billboard on Orange Street, is a statement from women to the Missoula public. Women are offended by the advertising that uses their bodies or parts of their bodies to sell products. Example: headless women. The Latin meaning of the word pornography is female sex slave. Women's bodies have become slaves to the advertising industry. This dehumanizes us, it is this dehumanization that we will no longer tolerate. We will no longer be silent!!!!"

Some Missoula women must have wished W.A.P. had not chosen to break its silence. The group's action and its message may have served to bring a significant issue to the attention of a portion of the community; however, more likely they were laughed off as the stereotypical grumblings of stereotypical "radical feminists."

After all, how seriously should juvenile acts of vandalism be taken? Surely the group could have selected a more respectable and constructive way to vent its anger. Did group members express their distaste for the ad to the manager of Hennessy's? Did they attempt to organize a protest or to circulate a petition expressing disapproval of the ad?

Unfortunately, since the Kaimin's attempts to identify the members of the group and to reach them for comment were unsuccessful, we do not know the answers to those questions. We judge the group only on the basis of an action that cannot be applauded.

It is easier to sympathize, however, with the feelings of frustration that must have led to W.A.P.'s action. That the advertising industry relies heavily on women's bodies (and men's) to sell products cannot be denied. We are constantly overwhelmed with such images. Not only do they reinforce shallow ideals of beauty, they also numb us to the fact that we are being used by advertisers in a way we would find distasteful had we not grown so accustomed to it.

On the other hand, the use of female bodies to advertise bathing suits may be justifiable. How can a woman tell whether she likes a bathing suit if she can't see what it looks like when someone's wearing it?

Incidentally, the word pornography means "writings about prostitutes," not "female sex slave." How much support can W.A.P. hope to gain for its cause through the distribution of inaccurate material?

W.A.P. is correct to attempt action. Women cannot change the conditions and attitudes with which they live through hopeless acceptance of what they find disagreeable. They must act, but they must act responsibly and in a constructive way.

Should W.A.P. continue to choose the illegal, irresponsible and unconstructive methods it has employed thus far, it must stop speaking for all women. It may no longer say in its messages what "women are offended" by, for in choosing those methods it has ignored the opinions of women who don't respect vandals. What women are offended by, at least in many cases, are the methods of expression employed by W.A.P.

Abortion: Not murder; a survival aid

Whenever I see foaming-at-the-mouth Right-to-Lifers waving their bloody fetus posters at me, I want to fly them all to sub-Saharan Africa for a peek at starvation.

Our planet is running out of room, and the population bomb will probably kill us long before someone pushes a button. We need every method we can get to prevent unwanted births. As it sits, the world's population is going to double before the year 2020 and our nation's won't be far behind it. The world simply can't feed that many people. Period.

Anyone but a Roman Catholic will agree that education and contraception are the keys to population control, but chemical and libidinal accidents do happen. Contraceptives do fail and like it or not, abortion is the last chance to head off disaster.

Since it was legalized in 1973, abortion has terminated approximately 11.5 million pregnancies. If those abortions had not been performed, that would mean 11.5 million more bodies to feed, cloth, teach, transport, house and remove the waste of. Where would they all live? Even if they could absorb them, would the Right-to-Life zealots take them all in? What's worse, is that those 11.5 million would reproduce, in turn raising our ominous growth rate.

Yes, this line of thinking can sound horribly insensitive, but have you considered the alternative? Have you ever seen people starving to death? Have you ever read what normal people do during famines? The Right-to-Life folks should see how people who are starving to death treat their children. One should keep in mind that cannibalism has made its appearance in most recorded famines.

Only by taking decisive measures now can we continue to live as civilized human beings instead of brutal creatures killing one another for a kernel of grain. We must not let the religious values of myopic zealots lead us into the living hell of a starving planet.

But do the Right-to-Lifers consider this? No, they march blithely on, trying to legislate theology in place of common sense. In addition to out-lawing abortion, if they and their ilk had their way, we'd all be goose-stepping to church twice a week (excuse me, but I believe our government is secular, and I'd like to keep it that way, thank you very much).

Some Right-to-Lifers babble about not wanting their tax dollars to help pay for abortions. But are they willing to finance orphanages for the millions of children that would result if abortion was considered the legal equivalent of murder? And are they willing to pay for the hospitalization of the millions of women who would be injured as a result of self-induced or back-alley abortions? Are they willing to underwrite the additional welfare payments to parents who were unable to support an added child? Are Right-to-Lifers willing to pay for child care while a teenage mother finishes high school? Being of middle-class and religiously bigoted background, the majority probably would not. And last but not least, would the Right-to-Lifers be willing to pay for the trial and imprisonment of the millions of American women who would abort themselves anyway? Would the Vatican sponsor that, as it has the Right-to-Life movement?

The overwhelming majority of Right-to-Lifers oppose abortion on religious grounds. But what kind of religion is it that would bring unwanted children into a hostile world, or wreck homes for the sake of one more mouth to feed? What god would have his children starve to death when they have the means of temporal salvation at hand? The outrageous part is that the majority of Right-to-Lifers also object to sex education being taught in the schools. How are teenagers supposed to find out about the contraception necessary to avert the need of an abortion?

The Right-to-Lifers claim to be humanitarians, but they refuse to acknowledge the emotional, physical and financial suffering that results from unwanted pregnancies and births. Women for centuries have been aborting themselves as a way to escape. Before 1973, in Los Angeles alone, an estimated 60 to 80 home abortions were performed daily. Would the Right-to-Lifers like to go back to that? Yes. And they'd probably like a return to trial by ordeal and witch burnings as well.

The Right-to-Lifers are well organized and trying to eliminate one of America's most hard-won, just and necessary laws; the right of a woman to terminate her pregnancy... For the good of us all.

A Maggot's-eye view

Editor: In reading today's Kaimin article by Jerry Wright about rugby I could not help becoming furious about the picture of rugby offered by the members of the University Club. As an eight-year member of the Missoula All-Maggots Rugby Football Club, I would like to offer a different view of the game.

Rugby is an international sport second only to soccer in worldwide participation. Its players on the whole are dedicated to promoting the sport, hard play on the field and overall camaraderie. I know of no other sport played as intensely as Rugby that is followed by social repose, where lifelong friendships are made between players who have spent the afternoon knocking heads.

The sport has already become an institution, in deference to back line captain Beuch's remark. It is the dedicated organization and business-like approach of many individuals and clubs that has developed the sport to the international level. The Missoula All-Maggots host the Annual Maggot Fest which brings over 600 rugby players to Missoula each year. The over $8,000.00 budget of the fest is earned by club members through hard work and dedicated support by the business community. The Maggots own and maintain a school bus for travel to out-of-town games and tours. They have organized three international tours to New Zealand, the Bahamas and England and have hosted two touring New Zealand sides. The Maggots finance and publish a monthly newsletter and have thousands of dollars on account toward the eventual ownership of our own clubhouse and fields. I dare say that this is not accomplished through the attitude suggested by J.T. More, that all you have to do is "get in shape and go out and kick somebody's ass."

It is most unfortunate that one bad apple can spoil the whole bunch. There were over 600 people at last weekend's Maggot Fest party. There were two jock clad break dancers. That was hardly the theme of the party.

Perhaps, if the University Rugby Club would re-evaluate their attitude toward the sport of Rugby, they would not have been placed on one-year probation with the Montana Rugby Union. I suggest to the University Club that this might be something to be serious about.

DeBelly debunked

Editor: In Tuesday's Kaimin (May 8) a letter to the editor by Eric DeBelly appeared. He stated that "in conversation with a person from MontPIRG" the person made some disparaging comments about President Reagan. Mr. DeBelly then went on to ask why MontPIRG and the Student Action Center get student funds.

I was present at the conversation in question. Mr. DeBelly is making a deliberate and deceitful attempt to discredit MontPIRG.

First of all, "the person's" name is Anne Alfred, as Mr. DeBelly knows full well. Second, Anne was in no way speaking for MontPIRG when she said what Mr. DeBelly so conveniently quoted out of context. Mr. DeBelly was fully aware that Anne was speaking only for herself. Any remark Anne made was part of a discussion of Central America following a Bible study. MontPIRG and SAC had nothing to do with it. Anne's also a Lutheran. Should we deny all Lutherans the right to express private opinions? She's a microbiology major, too. Should we cut off the Micro department's funding because all microbiologists harbor "narrow and antagonistic" viewpoints? That makes about as much sense as saying MontPIRG should be denied funding because one member ventured to present a personal opinion in what she thought was a private conversation with some friends.

Fifty-nine percent of UM students voluntarily paid the $2 MontPIRG fee this quarter. Any of them can get their $2 back, any time, no questions asked, thanks to the fairest funding system on campus. If anyone wants to make MontPIRG look bad, they'll have to do a better job and attack IT instead of sniping at one of MontPIRG's approximately 5,000 student members or 1,800 non-student members.

...and again...

Editor: A letter written by Eric DeBelly was published on May 8. The letter stemmed from a conversation held by 4 people after a bible study. We were discussing Mr. Reagan's Central American policies and his military build-up policies. I feel it is wrong and un-Christian to support a president whose policies toward human life are so destructive.

One person present, not I, at whom the May 8 letter is aimed, mentioned similarities between Reagan and Hitler. I believe Mr. DeBelly is stretching and sensationalizing the point made to make a deceitful and malicious attempt to discredit MontPIRG.

Mr. DeBelly, I am not "from MontPIRG." I was not speaking as a representative from MontPIRG (and just to keep you from generalizing freely, I was not speaking as a representative of Christians, women, microbiology majors, or anyone else you care to connect me with). I can and do carry on conversations all the time where I represent only my own opinionated and narrow-minded views. Mr. DeBelly was fully aware of this, but he chose to use personal opinions to discredit student groups.

Before writing this letter I attempted to do Mr. DeBelly the common courtesy of confronting him personally rather than making a public display. What he had to say was this, "I don't believe we should support student groups which allow people like you to be members."

Mr. DeBelly, do you propose that all students involved in student groups sign a form stating that they will not hold personal opinions?

In defense of the PIRG

Editor: A recent letter to the editor inaccurately described the type of work MontPIRG does. I would like to take this opportunity to clarify the matter.

MontPIRG is a non-profit, non-partisan organization directed and funded by students. MontPIRG works on issues important to students as citizens; issues such as environmental quality, consumer protection and good government. MontPIRG does not endorse candidates or work for a political party. We have not and we will not work for or against Ronald Reagan.

Over the last two years MontPIRG has: published and distributed comparative surveys on banking, supermarkets, eye-wear, copying shops, laundromats and bicycles; testified against rising electric and telephone rates; lobbied for the Lemon law, PAC reform and hazardous waste clean-up; researched and published information on child care, landlord tenant laws, Milltown, cable TV, banking practices and utility reform; and offered services such as a consumer hotline and voter registration.

MontPIRG and its method of funding were established with the support of 4,000 UM students on petitions, Central Board, UTU, Faculty Senate, numerous student groups, City Council, UM President Neil Bucklew and Gov. Ted Schwinden. We continue to enjoy that support because we work on issues and provide programs which would not otherwise exist.

In conclusion, I hope I have helped clarify matters and encourage any individual or group who would like additional information about MontPIRG to contact me.

Japanese exchange student finds quarters 'hectic' but flexible

By Julie Heath

University Relations

The University of Montana's quarter system seems more hectic to Eiji Kakita, Japanese exchange student, than the system he was familiar with at Japan's Kumamoto University. But Kakita says he likes the flexibility of changing class schedules every three months because it allows greater variety and ease in planning.

Kakita, 22, is the first student to enroll at UM under the new exchange program between the university and Kumamoto University in Kumamoto, Japan. As an exchange student, he pays the same fees as an in-state student. While he is studying in Missoula, Susan Powers, a UM graduate student from Helena, is in Kumamoto. Their year-long exchange is part of an attempt by UM to develop faculty and student exchanges with foreign universities.

Although the exchange program provided Kakita the opportunity to study in the United States, it also required a sacrifice. The courses Kakita takes at UM will not apply toward his law degree at Kumamoto University.

Kakita would like to study law at UM, but because the field of law varies from country to country, he has been taking liberal arts classes, he said.

He said getting a law degree at UM may be "easier, possibly" than in Japan. While a UM undergraduate law student may major in any of several disciplines, law students in Japan study law at the undergraduate level and, upon graduation, take a bar exam. The law student in Japan must then complete two years of independent study, but the UM student enters the School of Law for three years of course work.

At Kumamoto, Kakita's classes begin in April and continue through February. The classes last 100 minutes, compared with 50 minutes at UM, and the lecture style is much more formal, Kakita said.

"The professor lectures, the students take notes and the atmosphere of the classroom does not encourage discussion or question asking," he added.

Kakita said he thinks the high degree of interaction between the students and professors at UM may encourage greater learning.

Although a large percentage of Japanese students attend a college or university, Kakita said that, unlike many American students, they do not usually have a career goal in mind upon entering a school.

"In Japan, it is difficult to plan ahead," he said. "Many things have to be considered in making a decision. The Japanese people do not have as much mobility as Americans, and the connections between schools and businesses are limited. Even the geography of the land affects career decisions."

This is Kakita's first visit to the United States, and because he flew from Tokyo to Seattle to Montana, he has not seen much of the country.

However, since Kumamoto's population is about a half million, Missoula seems very small to him. Like many other Japanese, he had the impression that the United States consists mainly of large cities, and he was surprised to find so much open land.

Kakita said Kumamoto students engage in the same types of activities as American students do. However, because their rooms are very small, Kumamoto students seldom have parties in their rooms, he said.

A "compa" is a popular style of party in Japan. Compas are unique in that they call upon individuals to "do their share" of entertaining, Kakita said. Students may sing, play musical instruments, dance or otherwise entertain the group. According to Kakita, this can be a traumatic experience for some people, but it is a useful tool in helping people meet each other.

When asked what his favorite hobby is, Kakita does not hesitate to answer "learning other languages." Besides English, which is a required class for seven to 10 years in Japanese schools, Kakita is also "getting a handle" on French, he said.

Hypothermia a summer danger, too, doctor says

By Julie T. Sullivan

Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Hypothermia, a condition usually associated with cold temperatures, can occur in the summer as well as in winter, a Missoula physician said yesterday.

In a lecture sponsored by the University of Montana School of Pharmacy, Dr. Michael Wise told about 140 people in Chemistry-Pharmacy 109 that although some types of hypothermia, a condition of greatly lowered body temperature, are the result of exposure to sub-zero temperatures, the condition can also occur at temperatures of 60 and 70 degrees.

"If you're floating the Clark Fork in 70-degree weather and you've been drinking beer all day, you can get it if you're not careful," he said.

He said urban hypothermia is a condition in which people are exposed to just warm weather but get hypothermia anyway because of other medical factors.

Wise said brain tumors, injuries, seizures and hypogly-cemia are among some of the causes of urban hypothermia. Other causes are "alcohol, alcohol, alcohol and other drugs," he said, adding "chronic, relapsing stupidity" to the list.

Two years ago, Wise, an emergency physician at Missoula Community Hospital, said the county coroner was called to a Missoula motel where he found a woman dead in a bathtub. He then called the ambulance, which was enroute, and told them to turn back.

Wise said about 30 minutes later, the ambulance was called back because the coroner noticed the woman took a breath. Evidently she had taken a drug overdose and fallen asleep in the bathtub for a few days. The woman was suffering from severe hypothermia with a core body temperature of 72 degrees. Wise said the woman did survive.

Wise said when body temperature drops to between 90 and 95 degrees, a person will become tired, dehydrated and confused.

As long as a person's pulse and blood pressure are stable, Wise said a person should take off any wet clothes, drink fluids, take warm water baths, cover up with warm blankets or get in a sleeping bag with another person.

People whose temperature drops below 90 degrees should not be given warm water baths, Wise said.

Below 75 degrees "you're cold as a rock," he said, and you begin to take on the characteristics of inanimate objects. He said some treatments for these extreme cases include inserting a tube in the abdomen and circulating warm fluid or putting a person on a heart-lung machine.

Wise said alcoholic drinks should never be given to a person suffering from hypothermia because, "you don't know what you're dealing with."

Most university students oppose pot legalization, survey finds

(CPS)—Most college students now oppose legalizing marijuana, a new survey of student attitudes has found.

Two out of every three college students oppose the legalization of marijuana, Newsweek On Campus discovered in a survey of some 500 students nationwide.

In a comparable college survey taken in 1975, 52 percent of the American college student body favored legalizing use of the drug.

Now, 52 percent of 1984's students have used marijuana. In 1979, the number was 64 percent.

"That information is comparable with our field studies and high school surveys which indicate drug use is declining in the younger population," said Edgar Adams with the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA) in Washington, D.C.

Students are using far fewer drugs than their counterparts of the late 1960s and early 1970s, Adams says, primarily because of the health hazards associated with frequent use.

"The perceived harmfulness of marijuana use is increasing. Sixty-three percent of the high school students surveyed last year said there was great risk in smoking marijuana regularly, compared to only 35 percent who felt that way in 1978," he noted.

Although the generation that made drugs popular during the 1960s and 1970s will continue to show higher levels of drug use for some time, Adams said, today's students use illegal substances in a more restrained, less frequent way, even though many of them may have grown up seeing their parents use drugs.

Overall, marijuana use reached its high point in 1979, Adams says, when 39 percent of the Americans in the 18-to-25 age group reported they were using marijuana.

By 1982, the last year for which statistics are available, that figure had dropped to 27 percent.

Over half of the students who use pot or other drugs do so for fun and recreation, the new

Newsweek On Campus survey shows. Thirty-two percent of the respondents use drugs to relax, and 20 percent "to be sociable at parties."

College may even cause students to use fewer drugs, according to the study.

Eighty percent of the students say they started using drugs before entering college. Over 60 percent of the students say they use fewer drugs than before coming to campus.

Yet, excluding alcohol and cigarettes, marijuana is still the drug of choice on campus, followed by cocaine, barbiturates, amphetamines, LSD, PCP and heroin.

Cocaine's rise in popularity may simply mean more people have tried the drug, not necessarily that more people are using it regularly, Adams said.

He said he believes cocaine is too expensive for students to use regularly.

Indeed, the Newsweek On Campus survey found that 68 percent of the students surveyed say they don't spend any money to get their drugs.

Twenty-two percent of the students spend under $25 a month, and fewer than 7 percent spend more than $25 a month.

Twelve percent of the students have worried about being too dependent on narcotics.

Students in the Midwest are most opposed to legalization—72 percent—while only 56 percent of the students in the West oppose legalizing pot, the survey found.

Police shorten raid to save choking baby

DETROIT (AP) — Police shortened a narcotics raid to save the life of an 8½-month-old baby who was choking on a jelly bean.

Police were raiding a west-side home Wednesday when a woman ran from a nearby house screaming that a baby was dying, Sgt. William Wolfington said.

When Wolfington failed to dislodge the candy from the child's throat, he said he "snatched the baby up and put her in the police car." Two other officers drove the baby, Tiffany Jones, to Detroit's Henry Ford Hospital, where doctors dislodged the candy.

The baby was in serious condition, but doctors said she would live, Wolfington said.

Meanwhile, police arrested three people and netted three guns and a quantity of suspected marijuana in the drug raid, Wolfington said.

'Puttin' on the Ritz': Casablanca's jazz, an essay in style

By John Kappes
Kaimin Arts Editor
and Rob Buckmaster
Kaimin Contributing Reviewer

At first you think of it as The Style. Missoula's Ritz bar, where they play, is flawless Deco: fat angles, bright paint and mock-Egyptian floorlamps. Their audience is a dressy, eccentric mixture of the converted and the curious, dark blue blazers and shrink-to-fit Levi's. They take their name from the film, and come suited for another summer of slowly turning fans and cocktail intrigue.

Casablanca's lounge jazz is winning souls.

Style becomes styles (plural) the closer you look, which is itself intriguing. Casablanca began playing as an elaborate joke, a swipe at style, for the Ritz's grand opening. Appearance, one would have thought, was all that mattered.

But two weeks became a month, January became March, and substance wouldn't go away. But substance depends on individual moods and talents.

Daryl Flesching, who is reportedly leaving the group (which is entirely in character, of course), defines its sound. He masters his piano in classic fashion, with long, cascading scales and a taste for lush, elaborate arrangements. His carelessly combed gray hair and full, manicured beard recall the (tainted) elegance that once gave birth to a "Take the A Train."

When Daryl has a hot night—feet stomping, hands tumbling across ten octaves—it's beat surrender.

Michael Connor's swing bass also brooks no compromise. A talented technician, he hides his virtuosity in seamless runs and a fat, showy tone. His is the modern world, full of an irony that ties Daryl's sweaty nostalgia to our Missoula. "You're a whole new generation."

Amiably, Connor's jackets never quite fit.

But this jazz needs a voice, and David Mandella is indisputably the man. His baritone is smooth as flat enamel, and his phrasing stylized far beyond parody. Here's the heart of Casablanca, why they're so good: in their hands nostalgia is no longer a fetish, lifeless and reactionary. Sure, they like the songs. Sure, they love the look. But they put flesh on it, take it on the town. This is no freak show.

David has all these tuxes, and he can mix and match the parts to make a set 1934 or 1942, torch or swing. He pushes and pulls words, bending them up fourths and sevenths. He ends "Puttin' On the Ritz" with one full, sweet note that lasts eight or nine bars.

He can make "The Girl from Ipanema" either naive or fierce, depending on a glance from Daryl or Mike (who also plays a convincing hollowbody guitar). He can, on a good night, turn the Ritz into a decadent Thirties cabaret or Newport 1959.

Then there's the floor show, twice a night on Fridays and Saturdays, when he eases Nancie Phelps and Victoria Norman of DanceWorks through an intricately-choreographed blend of tap and jazz stylings. Lately, big crowds have threatened to overpower the subtle, knowing inflections that makes it all work, but the egos have held steady.

Modern jazz rarely has either the warmth or the edge (rounded, mais bien sur) that can get that older, graying woman, the aging preppie with rumpled khaki pants and us swinging at once. Casablanca has it.

Another essay, another style: What about the band called Ein Heit?

By Tom Kipp
Kaimin Contributing Reviewer

According to media from MTV to Time and Newsweek, America is witnessing the greatest British musical influx since 1964, a veritable neon blitzkrieg of what is (dubiously) called "New Music." In fact it's been suggested that right here in Missoula there's a potential audience for "that sort of thing" numbering in the thousands.

Now that seems a naive miscalculation to me, but goodness knows that I'd love to be proven wrong... really wrong. One has to wonder, though, just how much effect this "New Music" stuff has had in these parts.

Since the arrival of MTV last winter, many Missoulians (especially those between ten and twenty) seem to have acquired much more specific ideas about what bands are "supposed to" look like and how they "ought to" behave. And therein lies the rub.

Now I'm all for the collection of knowledge, but its influence can be pernicious unless it's supported by a sense of perspective and context. It's not enough to notice that bands don't sport styles of hair or clothing (or tooth capping, for that matter) that match those of Duran Duran or Missing Persons. And bemoaning the fact is to miss the point entirely.

The point being that, by and large, Missoula's bar-fed musical subculture shares altogether too much with a diet that alternates between liverwurst and egg salad, always on the same sort of bread, with the very same garnish, night in, night out, ashes to ashes, dust to...

An unfortunate by-product of the newly purchased video affluence (which I was discussing above, in case ya forgot) can only be described as a rather nebulous malaise, currently affecting the reception of "New Music" here in our humble metropolis. I detect subtle (but to me undeniable) shifts in allegiance, taste and excitement regarding local (in?)activity. People just don't exhibit the sort of energy (at the prospect of original musical entertainment) that they did a year ago.

The band called Ein Heit (subject of a Kaimin profile last September) has considered the question of an audience for a year now, without reaching any definite conclusions. Has the audience which could (will?) be Ein Heit's settled for a diluted, plastic-encased, adult-sanctioned (by radio and MTV corporate execs) version of what some of them used to get from Missoula bands like Surfer Ruth, Who Killed Society, ErnstErnst and Deranged Diction? Have those formerly "high on rebellion" (in Patti Smith's phrase) cast their lot with the next-to-next best thing, a smidgeon of pre-sof-tened anger with a watered-down twist of emotional apocalypse? What, then, are the alternatives?

Surely there is something to be said for the dictum called "do-it-yourself," better known as "DIY," with all the forethought and responsibility the term implies. In other words, there are several traits that an audience and a performer ought to share: a well-defined sense of sound and style, of choices made regarding the two, and of any ideology that shapes them. Don't misread this into a demand for a set of rules, but understand that I refer to these things as beginning concepts, as uniquely personal attitudes. ATTITUDE—now that's the key to this culture biz, sure enough!

But how many have any interest whatever in supporting interesting "New Music" here in Missoula? That's the question that the band called Ein Heit hopes will begin to be answered tomorrow evening.

Since you have been kind enough to follow this piece through to conclusion, I feel obliged to impart the following information: On Saturday, May 12 at 9 p.m. the band called Ein Heit, supported by the bands called Laser and Dissent, will provide musical entertainment at the Moose Lodge, downtown. Admission is two dollars. I'll be lookin' for ya.

No parlez: plays, plays, plays

The University of Montana Spanish Department will present Federico Garcia Lorca's "Titeres de Cachiporra" and "Retablo de don Cristobal" today and tomorrow at 7 p.m. in the Masquer Theater. The first is a puppet show for adults, and concerns the classic Latin love triangle. The second is a lusty farce, with motives at cross purposes. Warning: they're both in Spanish. David Loughran directs.

The French Department, meanwhile, will offer "Si t'es beau... t'es con" at 8:30 p.m. each night, also in the Masquer. A comedy about mistaken identity, needless to say, it's in French. Sygn Minier-Birk directs. All performances are free.

Let's get back to the basics

Word reached Missoula's sports fans Tuesday that the Big Sky Conference coaches are in favor of reinstating the three-point field goal.

If the American Basketball Association, which as most of us know is now defunct, had a grave I'd spit on it.

That organization is of course responsible for dreaming up a three-point field goal in the first place. Someone, and I admit I don't know who, thought it would be neat, or cool or groovy or something, to make some extra bucks by awarding three points to good perimeter shooting. Fans, of course, like to watch players try those bombs.

That may be justifiable but the shot isn't a bomb anymore.

The National Basketball Association naturally followed suit and by the year 1984, guys like Isaiah Thomas and Larry Bird can score from the NBA's 25-foot three-point line rather easily. That is to say defenses have to cover Thomas when he has the ball at the three-point area because he'll score on almost half of his attempts. Bird, George Gervin and others are equally dangerous from that spot.

The Big Sky is doing the same thing.

Damn the ABA.

If the coaches' proposal is approved by the athletic directors and the school presidents of the conference at the big meeting in Bozeman May 25,

I'll bury a red, white and blue basketball and spit on it.

The Big Sky will have a 19-foot-9 three-point line if the proposal is approved. "Twenty feet is an average shot for a good perimeter shooter," UM Coach Mike Montgomery said. He didn't vote against the proposal but he's not exactly for it either.

"I'm not totally sold on it but it's the thing to do," he added.

Montgomery said that the NCAA is expected to make the three-point field goal a rule so the Big Sky wanted "to stay a step ahead." He said the NCAA will probably decide next year.

It makes sense for the Big Sky to initiate the three-point line this year so the players and coaches get a chance to try it out, if the Big Sky intends to take it seriously.

Two years ago the Big Sky experimented with a 23-foot three-point goal and Montgomery said "that had no effect at all. It was just too far."

Well my first reaction is to say good, let's go with a 23-foot line because that would be just like not having a three-point field goal at all. After all players get penalized for an artistic, skillful slam dunk that rips the rim off from the backboard. And they don't give three points for an eloquent, crafty double-pump, over-the-head, twisting-bodied lay-in with three guys hanging from your sweaty shirt.

Why give three points for a simple well-balanced 20-foot jumper with good follow through (read that a player only has to make the shot, follow through is not important except it usually takes good follow through to make the shot).

Coors to sponsor summer bike races

HELENA (AP) Plans have been announced for bicycle racing competition in Montana this summer.

Billed as the first annual Coors Points Race, the competition involves races at Helena, Missoula and Bozeman.

Riders participating in the three races, depending on their placings in each race, will earn points. Those who accumulate the most points after all three races will be winners.

The events are sponsored by the Adolph Coors Co. and several beer distributing companies.

The races are the Mountain Classic, May 26-27 in Helena; the KZOQ-Coors Mini-Class, July 7-8 in Missoula; and the Sweet Pea Stage Race, Aug. 4-5 in Bozeman.

Prizes will be awarded in four age and sex divisions.

Brian Clark, regional manager for Coors, said Coors has contracted with Pace Line Promotions of Helena to organize and promote the event.

More information is available from Pace Line at P.O. Box 346, Helena, 59624. Clark said brochures are also available at bicycle shops throughout the region.

AT&T ordered to reduce long distance rates by 6.1 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Long-distance telephone rates paid by most Americans must drop 6.1 percent by the end of this month, federal regulators said yesterday, in ordering the first such reduction in 14 years.

In what it proclaimed "a landmark decision," the Federal Communications Commission set a May 25 deadline for American Telephone & Telegraph Co. to begin charging the lower rates nationwide.

At the same time, the FCC said the company could soon begin charging 50 cents each for long-distance directory-assistance calls—after two free calls per month. And it substantially reduced the amounts AT&T must pay local phone companies for using local lines in long-distance service.

AT&T spokesman Pic Wagner said, "We welcome the commission's action, which enables us to cut long-distance rates. This is something we've wanted to do for a long time."

However, he said his company was disappointed the FCC made no move to do away with rules under which its long-distance competitors pay less than AT&T for using local telephone lines. Long-distance rates charged to consumers by those competitors—including such companies as MCI and GTE-Sprint—are not controlled by the FCC.

How much the new order saves AT&T customers, who still make up a clear majority of all long-distance callers, will depend on how many calls an individual, family or business makes. On a monthly bill of $20, for example, the saving would be $1.22; on a bill of $50, it would be $3.05.

The commission said that after the main changes took effect, both AT&T and local companies—many of them Bell companies split off in the recent AT&T divestiture—would be able to earn the 12.75 percent rate of return that the FCC has authorized.

Basics

"Because of the clock," Montgomery says.

Oh, yeah, the 45-second clock.

The NCAA is going to adopt a clock into its growing family of regulation. Montgomery said "the clock is inevitable." Just like the three-pointer. The clock will become mandatory because too many teams are playing zone defenses which slow down the tempo of the game and, according to the NCAA, fans don't like that.

I for one like basketball. I don't care about clocks. I'm old enough to remember when basketball was basketball. Two points for a field goal and one for a free throw and that was it.

The clock is another thing we can thank the damn ABA for.

That under-financed, under-talented bunch of knotheads thought they had to have a lot of fast action to entice basketball fans and the NCAA is thinking the same way.

In the minds of the people at the NCAA level, the clock and the three-pointer are like a peanut butter and jelly sandwich. You can have a sandwich without jelly but it's not as good.

To quote the awe-inspiring article in Tuesday's Missoulian that forewarned us of the coaches' decision at the meeting in Boise last week: "The NCAA, concerned slow-paced games will damage interest in college basketball, is promoting experimentation with devices it believes will speed play." Sounds like something the ABA would come up with.

So then, the clock and the three-point shot don't have anything to do with each other except there both devices to speed play. One sticks the roof of your mouth to your tongue and the other is sticky and two bad rules are better than one.

Montgomery said the clock and the three-point goal take some of the coaching out of the game and "from a purist standpoint I don't like it."

I don't like it either, Mike, but please, somebody, tell Virginia there is a three-point goal and a 45-second clock and we got the ABA to thank for them. And somebody else should tell the NCAA that college basketball shouldn't be compared to fast-food hamburger shops. The action doesn't have to be fast and greasy to be good.

Soccer Club to play MSU

The University of Montana Soccer Club will be in action Sunday for three games at the Playfair Field, behind Sentinel High School.

The games are part of a four-team round robin tournament the club is sponsoring. All games will be played Sunday. Other teams are the Montana State University Soccer Club, a city-league team from Spokane and another city-league team, the Flathead Valley Soccer Club.

UM will play MSU at 10 a.m., Spokane at noon and Flathead at 2 p.m.

Aber Day events to include barbecue, tree planting

By Shannon Hinds
Kaimin Reporter

This year's Aber Day activities, which will include planting trees, cleaning up the campus, an Aber Day run, an ice-cream social, a barbecue and music, will attempt to create "unity" on campus between students, faculty and administration, Jeremy Sauter, ASUM vice president, said.

Classes will be dismissed at noon Wednesday so that students can participate in the Aber Day events. Aber Day campus cleanups have been a tradition since 1915 when William "Daddy" Aber, a University of Montana professor from 1896 to 1919, first started the custom of planting trees.

This year Aber Day will begin when volunteers start planting a new Aber Day grove between the Alumni Center and the Health Sciences Building.

At 12:30 p.m. Aber Day runs of two and six miles, sponsored by the physical therapy program, will begin from the foot of the Van Buren Street footbridge. Participants must pay a $2 entry fee and proceeds will be used to buy books for the physical therapy program.

Prizes will be awarded to winners, and faculty and staff members of the winning departmental team will get Nike running suits.

The focus of this Aber Day's cleanup will be the riverfront property, which is part of the Riverbowl and Jacobs Island. Cleanup equipment will be provided, and volunteers should wear gloves and old clothes. Workers will meet by the Van Buren Street footbridge at 2 p.m.

From 3:30-5 p.m. entertainment including an ice cream social, award presentations, a bail-out jail and music by the UM Jazz Workshop and the Finley Creek Blue Grass Band will take place in the University Center Mall. The Outlaws, a wild west troupe, will be putting students, faculty and staff in the jail to raise money for the Staff Senate scholarship fund.

A barbecue will be served from 4:30-6 p.m. in front of the Lodge or inside the Treasure State Room, depending on the weather. The meal is free to students with meal passes and $4 for others.

Alice in Weatherland

"The wind's blowing; let us blow too before that caterpillar realizes he didn't really get $5 off us," the White Rabbit said. "I still can't believe his scam—imagine, fine print on a FREE PARKING sign!"

"That's nothing," said Alice. "I used to live in a town that would hit you with a $4 'street cleaning' violation without posting any signs in the area at all. You could really take a bath on that one."

"Well, there's a good chance of showers today," said the White Rabbit.

"The weather is drying up this weekend," Alice said. "Why don't you do the same?"

"That was low," said the Rabbit.

"36 degrees," Alice agreed as she drove her sporty little race car out of the parking lot. "But now we're riding high—58."

In her rear-view mirror Alice saw the caterpillar bite the stem off his hookah as he realized that he'd been tricked.

Leaphart argues that some of the damages they will suffer because of the order will be the emotional and financial expense of having to take the bar exam and a two-month delay in entering the job market. He said that in Montana, the delay could make a big difference in getting a good job.

Marc Tull, a second year UM law student involved in the dispute, said that when the bar exam and review's $1,000 price tag is added to the travel and lodging expenses to Helena, the cost is in excess of one year of law school.

The students' petition alleged that after the Supreme Court order came down in 1980, the Law School changed its academic program away from the idea of providing students with overall theoretical competence to a program of more specialized training in various fields of law.

Handicapped Awareness Week

Relay races, food and live music at McCormick Park Sunday afternoon will set the stage for a week of handicapped awareness events May 13-18.

Events scheduled are:

•Sunday, May 13—MT.D.O.G. Day Afternoon, a fund-raising event for the Montana Disabled Outdoor Group, noon to dark at McCormick Park.

•Monday, May 14—Thank you Missoula For Being Accessible Day. Open house, 9-11 a.m., at the University of Montana Physical Therapy Clinic, Women's Center 025-027, and at the Montana University Affiliated Program Big Sky Preschool, Women's Center 015. Display, "Portable Communications at Your Fingertips," University Center Mall, 9-11 a.m. At 2 p.m. at the Village Red Lion, the chairmen of Handicapped Awareness Week will recognize five Missoula establishments for making their buildings accessible to the handicapped.

•Tuesday, May 15—Animal Friends of the Disabled Day. Horseback riding for the handicapped demonstration by the Helena Riding Academy, 11 a.m. to noon on the oval. A presentation by Ravalli County 4-H members on training guide dog puppies will follow.

•Thursday, May 17—Assume A Disability Day. Several people from the community and campus will assume a disability for the day. The Physical Therapy Club has scheduled an obstacle race in the UC Mall.

•Friday, May 18—Excellence In Special Education Day. Open house at the Men's Gym, 1:15-2:15 p.m.

They contended that the new approach was more geared to knowledge tested by the bar exam, but they said this new approach was offered only to students who are in classes graduating in 1985 or thereafter.

Brown

tween the two positions." He said combining EO and personnel services "is both helpful and efficient."

Brown said employees believe her job as EO director is to act as "an advocate for the downtrodden," but EO only handles complaints of sexual and religious discrimination, discrimination against the handicapped, and sexual harassment.

"They (employees) expect me to be an ombudsman, and that is not one of my responsibilities," Brown said.

When a non-union employee files a complaint against a supervisor, Brown's procedure is to first attempt an informal settlement. If the conflict is still unresolved, she investigates both sides of the charge. As a last resort, she appeals to a committee.

She said when employees discover that she also views the conflict from the supervisor's perspective while investigating, they think she is supporting personnel.

Brown cited a "disproportionate number of dissatisfied people at UM" as the reason for the number of complaints she receives.

Although some employees may feel she is biased, combining EO and personnel eliminates overlap, Brown said. Before the merge, both offices would often investigate the same cases.

Brown said an alternative would be to hire a part-time EO director without separating the offices. She said only a part-time position would be required because of the small number of discrimination cases.

However, Bucklew said the situation doesn't warrant the use of funds to hire an additional staff member.
