Acid king raps U.S. government

By Shannon Hinds
Kaimin Reporter

Americans are being "sullied and trampled by monsters and barbarians" in Washington, D.C. who are under control of a "doddering old president," Timothy Leary, the high priest of LSD, said yesterday.

Leary, 63, told a University of Montana audience of about 500 in the University Center Ballroom that President Reagan continues to advocate hostility and the build-up of arms, rather than trying to change a system that doesn't work.

In 1969, when Leary ran against Reagan for governor of California, the world was a better place, Leary said. People had courage, confidence and utopian idealism, and so they were certain to change, he said.

In 1984, the change has come, he said, and "doom and gloom" prevails as the military clique "living in the Middle Ages" took over Washington, D.C.

Also, the media has obstructed change by misinforming the public and by telling people what they want to know, instead of the truth, Leary said, adding that the deliberate lying of politicians has also blocked change.

Leary said his goal, which caused the audience to applaud and cheer, is to rekindle the fire for change and the lust for evolution.

The generation from 1946 to 1984 has been the first generation that has realistically questioned authority and promoted change, Leary said. Ralph Nader, Dr. Benjamin Spock, John Lennon and Bob Dylan have all been innovators of change by questioning authority and by thinking for themselves, he said.

People of the 1980s are not a "laid-back group of conservative nerds," Leary said. They are, he said, an important group of people in history and must create change, or else nobody will.

Leary, who claims to be an "evolutionary agent for change," says that man has gone through the process of evolution and, therefore, change is inevitable. People must learn the tactics and strategies of change because the future depends on this knowledge, he said.

But, Leary said, 30 million Americans don't believe in See 'Leary,' page 8.

CB hears proposals to finance Kaimin deficit, delays action

By Eric Troyer
Kaimin Reporter

By Alexis Miller
Kaimin Reporter

Central Board last night heard two proposals on how the Montana Kaimin should pay back a deficit incurred over the past three years, but tabled any action until next week.

The Kaimin deficit has been estimated from about $27,000 to $30,000, but the final figure will not be determined until the books are cleared at the end of this school year. About $24,000 was incurred during the 1982-83 school year. The ASUM general fund has absorbed the deficit until now.

John Mercer, chairman of the ASUM Publications Board, proposed that the Kaimin pay back ASUM through a reduced allocation.

According to the board's proposal, the ASUM business manager, the ASUM accountant and the Kaimin business manager would determine the Kaimin's budget request.

However, with CB's permission, the actual allocation would be reduced by a specific amount, which would be a payment on the deficit. Mercer said the amount would be about $3,000 to $4,000, based on the current deficit estimates.

The board also has requested that the ASUM Budget and Finance Committee approve a change in this year's budget and remove $10,000 from the Kaimin's major equipment account to help pay off the deficit.

The money was originally allocated for equipment that eventually would be used to make the Kaimin independent of ASUM.

According to Mercer, it is "not feasible or appropriate" for the Kaimin to become independent of ASUM at present, so the money is not needed.

Kaimin Editor Gary Jahrig

did not oppose the budget change request, but opposed the Publication Board's proposal for specific yearly payments.

"By being tied down to $3,000 or $4,000 a year, we are going to start off in a hole," Jahrig said.

Instead, he proposed that the Kaimin turn over all its profits to ASUM to pay back the deficit.

Jahrig said he was confident that the Kaimin would make a profit by cutting costs, holding fundraisers and raising advertising rates. He pointed out that the first eight issues of Fall Quarter cost $5,000 to produce, but that the cost of the first eight issues of Spring Quarter has been cut back to $1,000.

Also at the meeting CB Member Bud Desmul, chairman of the Student Health Service Committee, announced that the Blue Cross Insurance fees may go up as much as 43 percent next year because the company projects a deficit of about $200,000 for the 1983-84 school year.

CB may accept the increase or one of the alternate plans by Blue Cross, but will also solicit proposals from other insurance companies.

In other business CB discussed summer allocations to nine campus groups.

As of 10 p.m. last night members had not decided whether they would go with ASUM President Phoebe Patterson's executive recommendations on the funding for the nine groups.

The groups requested $28,000 but ASUM will only allocate $15,000.

The five groups Patterson recommended to be funded are Campus Recreation, Campus Recreation Facilities, ASUM Programming, Wilderness Institute and the Women's Resource Center.

ASUM Student Gardens requested $653, Circle K Club requested $1,000, Montana Masquers requested $4,700 and University Dance Ensemble requested $300. All four of these groups received no budget recommendations because Patterson felt that they did not benefit summer school students, which is the purpose of summer budgeting.

The other five groups' requests and the amount recommended by Patterson are as follows:

- Campus Recreation: $3,528/$3,138.90.
- Campus Recreation Facilities: $5,358.10/$2,750.20.
- ASUM Programming: $5,975/$3,685.
- Wilderness Institute: $4,980.25/$4,207.98.
- Women's Resource Center: $1,479/$1,179.

None of this allocations are final until CB has voted on Patterson's recommendations.

Time for a boycott

On April 12, the Missoula City Council was commended in a Kaimin editorial for forming a subcommittee to look into the parking problem in the university area. The move was termed "positive action toward solving the parking problems on the University of Montana campus and in the area surrounding UM."

However, it now appears that the commendation may have been a little hasty as the recommendations being put forth by the subcommittee become more ridiculous each time it meets.

Editorial

Last week, the subcommittee met and one of the recommendations proposed was to assess a parking fee on all students, including those who do not own a vehicle or drive to campus. Marci Briggs, subcommittee chairwoman, said that by assessing a "nominal" parking fee of all students, the university would have a more predictable income from the vehicle registration program and could save on ticketing costs.

This suggestion is the most ludicrous solution to the parking problem to come forth yet. Sure, the university would have a more predictable income, but it would also probably have a riot on its hands. Only fools would pay for a parking decal if they had no intention of driving to campus or if they do not own a vehicle.

Why should non-drivers be forced to pay for someone else to park on campus? And even more to the point, why should anyone be forced to pay money to help subsidize an inadequate parking system that UM officials do nothing to improve?

If a recommendation like this was actually implemented it could open the door for all kinds of absurd suggestions. For example, the athletic department could decide to charge all students for season athletic passes whether they wanted them or not. Or UM Food Service might request that all students be forced to purchase a meal pass even if they don't eat there. Or even worse, they might make it mandatory for students to eat there. Heaven forbid.

As for saving on ticket costs, if there were enough legal parking spots on campus, the cost of handing out parking tickets would decrease automatically.

The answer to the problem is to create more places to park on campus, either through the construction of a multi-layered parking structure or by turning more university property into parking areas. This is the only way that a viable parking situation will be created at UM.

It is apparent that the parking subcommittee will not solve the problem by recommending solutions such as the one mentioned above.

Perhaps the best step for UM students and staff to take would be to completely boycott buying a parking decal next year. This would create such a mess for Campus Security that it would be forced to double its staff just to handle the extra tickets. Also, it would be next to impossible for Campus Security to track down every parking violator's license number in order to add the ticket charges to their registration fees each quarter.

This move may seem harsh, but one must remember that buying a parking decal, considering the current parking facilities at UM, does not even guarantee that the holder will find a legal place to park. A mass boycott might be just what is needed to get some real positive action toward solving the parking problems on the UM campus.

The Top Rail—by Stephen Smith Overexaggerated compassion

Compassion is generally accepted as a positive attribute. Being able to empathize and understand someone else's suffering and misfortune is a sign of intelligence, sensitivity and—because of the ability to shoulder another's emotional burden—strength.

This is all well and good. Compassion distinguishes humans from other animals. If ever there was a rationale for the Golden Rule (Do unto others as you would have them do unto you), compassion is right up there at the top.

Yet I tend to believe that in the United States in this day and age, compassion, like so many other things, is overexaggerated. And, because of the frequency of its impassioned use, it approaches meaninglessness and is of nebulous value.

Consider the pre-jury selection settlement reached in Chicago Tuesday. Relatives of a family killed in a plane crash sued for loss of next of kin (which seems reasonable), and then asked for an undisclosed amount of money based on the value of "emotional and physical distress suffered by the family" before the plane rammed the earth and for "pain and suffering on impact."

Now hold on a minute. I can understand suing for loss of kin. But how can you sue for the pain and suffering of someone who is no longer here?

This may be a revelation to some but people are born, they live and they die. It happens every day. Sometimes it's painless and sometimes it hurts like hell. It is not going to stop because people sue to recover damages for the compassion they claim to feel for the suffering of another.

It is a sad comment indeed on a society's values when it is able to bargain off its compassion to an airline company. To the airlines, settlement before a trial begins is preferable to dealing with a panel of people. Attorneys have become adept at convincing juries of the need to award outrageous damages for any conceivable inconvenience.

It stresses the limits of understanding to figure how people in the United States can accept judgements that range into the millions of dollars when the primary victim does not even appear in court. The whole idea of compassion for the victim is negated when a relative places a monetary value (with the help of a concerned, sympathetic attorney) on the suffering he or she experiences while feeling compassion for the deceased.

Who else but a lawyer would have the audacity to sue for "pain and suffering upon impact"? I always figured that if you were going to fly in a plane, the risk of it falling out of the sky was inherent. If you get smucked, you're smucked. What difference does it make if you saw it coming? You'll never see the money the relatives sue for, anyway. And the fancy grave marker they buy you for being an integral part of their suit isn't going to assuage your pain and suffering, either.

Besides, compute the average speed of a nerve impulse and compare it to the speed of a jet plane hitting the ground. You'll see that there is not that much time to suffer before suffering is moot.

It all boils down to who is going to be responsible for the risks that people take. That negligence was involved in the crash is well established. When a wing falls off an airplane you can bet that someone wasn't doing his or her job. Still, when one boards an airplane, it is usually of one's own free will. If the plane takes a dive, well—you probably should have taken the bus.

Since death is an absolute, it would be a relatively simple matter for states to set a standard monetary value on life. When a wrongful or negligent death judgement needs to be awarded, then do so on this arbitrary scale. Amounts then would not fluctuate according to how much negligence a jury perceived to have existed at the time of demise. After all, it is the end result that is the issue.

Awarding more money based on the quality or quantity of negligence or the suffering of a victim is superfluous. It's like suing an airline for two wings falling off when everyone knows that it only takes one missing to ruin the day.

The world is full of uncertainty and it is ludicrous (not lucrative) to always expect someone to be liable when people suffer or are killed. The old adage given to just-branded calves by cowboys comes to mind here: It's a tough life, little doggies.

Rhetorical response

Editor: This letter is in response to all the rhetoric and name-calling between SAC and the College Republicans of late. I can ignore the CR at this time because they are not responsible to the student body as SAC is supposed to be or should be. This point seems to have been overlooked by Mr. Freeman.

Where do all these self-righteous, self-appointed and self-styled saviors of the masses who run SAC get their monopoly on wisdom? Apparently if you disagree with SAC's activities you are a "right-wing fanatic," you are incapable of independent thought and you are a puppet for your political masters. It's a good thing we have SAC around to show us the way to truth. Frankly, I don't give a damn what CR says and does because I'm not required to fund their platform or pay their staff's salary. But I guess I'm supposed to do it for SAC so that they can continue the works and agenda they deem to be in the students' interest.

Have you ever read the material these people hand out? And they have the gall to declare "We don't do anything that are party politics." But don't worry because we have their assurance that "We are moving much more towards an information center." Oh, then what is it you're moving away from? If all this isn't enough, we read on the same page of the Kaimin that the student body and the state taxpayers might have to provide a campus building rent free to a group of people calling themselves SUN and led by (you guessed it) SAC's energy projects coordinator, to house an "alternative energy and life-styles project." All they ask is that they choose their own members, choose their own director, set their own rules and monitor the results(?) of this brilliant concept. But never fear, we're told that this will "ease world tension" and show us what a bunch of over-indulgent pigs we've been.

Correction

On Tuesday, the Kaimin ran a story on Dennis Garcia, a University of Montana student charged with attempted murder. The story said that Libby Miller "charged Garcia with attempted deliberate homicide." Garcia was charged with attempted murder by the Missoula County Attorney's office, not by Miller.

Once again we will be shown the way to truth by a bunch of non-elected, self-proclaimed intellectuals if we only provide them with the money to do it. Speaking for myself, I don't need these peoples' accumulated wisdom to guide me, but all they need is our money not our input. I'm beginning to understand the "sack SAC" program.

Big Sky officials adopt shot-clock and three-point goal

By Associated Press and Kaimin Staff Reporters

The Big Sky Conference Presidents' Council voted yesterday to keep the 45-second clock and add a 19-foot-9 three-point shot in league basketball games next year. The council also picked Boise State University as the site of the 1985 conference tournament.

University of Montana Athletic Director Harley Lewis said the changes, including having a pre-determined site for the post-season tournament, were "highly recommended by the coaches."

The tournament had been held on the home floor of the conference's regular-season champion.

The switch to a single-site tournament might increase interest in the tournament, said Big Sky Commissioner Ron Stephenson.

All eight teams will travel to Boise next March. All teams play on a Thursday; the semifinals will be held that Friday and the championship on Saturday.

Lewis said the pre-determined site will give the host school almost a year to prepare for the tournament, arrange ticket sales and will improve the league's chances of arranging quality TV coverage.

He said the league also voted to open up 15 percent of the seating at the tournament to students at 50 percent off the regular ticket price. He added that last year, students were offered an unlimited number of seats, but at only $1 off the $20 ticket price.

Lewis said UM preferred that the tournament be held at the site of the regular-season conference champion, but added that UM "is very interested in bringing the tournament to UM" and will submit bids for the tournament in the future.

He said that the criteria for selecting future tournament sites will not be determined until the December conference meeting.

Lewis said the 45-second clock and three-point goal were voted on as one issue, and UM voted for the proposal because of the coaches' support.

The shot clock was used in the Big Sky last season, and a 23-foot three-point goal was used by the league two years ago.

The 45-second clock is inevitable in college basketball, Stephenson said, adding that the three-point goal is needed to prevent teams from packing the key and shutting off inside play.

The NCAA Rules committee has strongly hinted that they will adopt both the shot clock and three-pointer, possibly next year.

The league also decided to switch to Friday-Saturday rotation for games rather than the Thursday-Saturday format. Lewis said the move was "primarily financial" because of the expense of an additional day on the road, but added that fewer missed school days by players was also considered.

The Thursday-Saturday format will still be used when teams travel to the University of Nevada-Reno and Northern Arizona because of their distance from each other and other conference schools.

The league presidents also invited Eastern Washington University at Cheney to submit a formal application for membership in the Big Sky. EWU plays most Big Sky Schools during the season, and has long sought entrance into the league.

Houston wins toss for first round draft pick

NEW YORK (AP)—The Houston Rockets won the coin flip yesterday for the National Basketball Association's top pick in the June 19 draft and team officials said they will pick Akeem Olajuwon to join Ralph Sampson and give them a pair of 7-footers in the lineup.

It was the second straight year that the Rockets, who have won only 43 games in the last two seasons, have won the toss for the first pick.

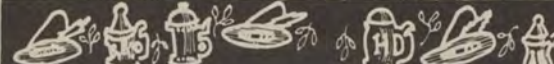

Rockets Coach Bill Fitch said he has no qualms about teaming the 7-foot Nigerian from the University of Houston with the 7-4 Sampson. He added that there are no plans to trade either.

"There are a lot of different things we can do offensively," Fitch said. "Defensively, Ralph will, as a general rule, step outside and play the other team's power forward. He has the quickness and agility to do that."

This year Sampson helped the Rockets improve their record from 14-68 to 29-53, but they still finished last in the Western Conference.

The Portland Trail Blazers, who opposed Houston in the coin toss, was also interested in Olajuwon.

"Realistically, we have a good team, sixth best in the NBA, so we are happy to have a chance to add to that with the second-best player in the draft," Blazers owner Larry Weinberg said.

Alice in Weatherland

"Well," said Alice, "I still don't understand whether this whole situation is a dream, hallucination or what, but we shouldn't just sit here. Let's get going: there are clouds, west winds, a high of 60 and a low of 40, but at least it isn't raining."

"We can't move at the same time," said Lisa. "It's against the Parker Brothers' official rules. You have to wait until your turn."

"What do you mean," Alice began. Then she remembered some of the places she'd been in the past weeks—Oriental Avenue, St. Charles Place, Free Parking, the B. & O. Railroad, the Water Works and more—and it all came together.

Leary

evolution and their lives are dictated by God and the Bible. Usually people do not question God and are forced to accept the views of the Bible, even though in the first ten pages of the Bible, God is a "mean, nasty, condominium owner," he said.

Leary compared God to a police officer who makes people feel miserable and guilty. He said that by punishing Adam and Eve for taking a bite of the forbidden fruit, he was actually making the first narcotic bust in history.

Also, Leary said the current generation is on a "cloud of electrons," and is like an enormous flock of birds moving through time and space together. The new generation shares ideas that the other generations never did, he said.

The best tactic for evolution and change is to avoid "terminal adulthood," a condition which prevents a person from growing and expanding, and to stay in the West, as far away from Washington, D.C. as possible.

Brooke Shields takes plunge with batteries

NEW ORLEANS (AP)—Actress Brooke Shields, playing Becky Thatcher in a skit about Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn, forgot she was wired when she dived off a raft into the water.

But Miss Shields, taping a television comedy sketch with Bob Hope at the World's Fair, escaped a potentially dangerous shock even though she was wearing a microphone and battery pack.

The 18-year-old actress-model, who was on a raft in a pool, started shivering after being soaked by a rainstorm, fair spokesman Ken Kantor said Wednesday.

She decided it would be warmer in the pool, so she removed a pair of Army boots and started to dive in. Hope yelled, "Don't," but it was too late to stop her, Kantor said.

The show's executive producer, Jim Lipton, said after the incident Saturday that Miss Shields could have received a "heavy shock" from the equipment, according to Kantor.

The program, celebrating Hope's 81st birthday May 29, will be broadcast Monday on NBC-TV.

Mr. Boston® is fond of all his schnapps. But one is the apple of his eye.

Nobody ever dreamed Mr. Boston Apple Schnapps would be so popular. Except Mr. Boston, after his first taste.

It has a crisp, delicious apple taste that stands above the crowd of imitators. A taste that stands up to ice and mixers.

Try Mr. Boston Peppermint, Cinnamon and Spearmint. And new Mr. Boston Original Strawberry Schnapps.

Because taste runs in Mr. Boston's family.
