University of Montana students will soon have to pass a writing test before they can graduate if the UM Faculty Senate approves a committee plan to institute the exam.

At its first meeting of the year yesterday, the Faculty Senate approved a motion advising their Academic Standards and Curriculum Committee to develop a plan for the test.

Although the exam has been detailed in the UM catalog since 1978, because of financial barriers it has never been given.

Walter Koostra, a microbiology professor, said that the lowest cost estimate for administering the test was between $35,000-$40,000 per year. Koostra said that in 1978, half the money would have been used to pay the additional faculty members needed to administer the test and the other half would have been applied to the costs of the test itself.

Foreign Language and Literature Professor Maureen Curran added that another reason why the test has never been administered is many faculty members did not consider an exit exam fair, in light of the fact that there was no writing entrance exam.

Little attention was given to the exam, Koostra said, until last year. Then, he said, two committees discovered and questioned its not being used.

English Professor Robert Hausmann, chairman of one of the committees, explained that the first time the test could have been given would have been January 1984, since the students it affected were then entering their junior year. Under the system students must have completed 110 credits before they can take the test.

Hausmann said, however, the Executive Committee of the Faculty Senate decided not to allocate funding for the exam.

The committee estimated the cost of giving the exam at $1300. About the only actual cost would have been the money paid to the graders, Hausmann said. He said that he did not understand why the test has never been given.

"We have plenty of em," said Don Jones, parking facility manager of the Purdue University Police Department in Lafayette, Ind.

"We have adequate parking," he said, but added that some of the parking spaces are not conveniently located to the campus. Because of Purdue's enrollment (more than 30,000), Jones said that at times students have problems finding parking spaces close to the buildings where they have classes.

"To a person who can't find a parking space, it's a major issue," he said.

A one thousand-space parking lot was added to the UM campus as a "precautionary" measure, ASUM has to either build a high-rise parking lot or an underground parking lot. Willett added that another reason why the test has never been implemented is to get space from wherever it can be obtained.

ASUM doesn't want money recycled

By Robert Marshall
Kaimin Reporter

As a "precautionary" measure, ASUM has frozen $225 allocated Spring Quarter to the ASUM Recycling Committee.

Jeremy Sauter, ASUM vice president, said ASUM is curious about who will spend the recycling money this year, since some of last year's committee members have left school and the committee has not filed a petition with ASUM this year.

A group must file a petition with the student governing body each year if it wishes to be officially recognized and receive money from ASUM.

"When a group files a petition with us, they must list on the form their constitution, membership, officers, purpose and description of what they wish to do," Sauter said.

After the petition is filed, he said, it then goes to the Student Union Board where it is either granted or denied. If a group is late with a petition, said Sauter, it will not necessarily be turned away.

Last year's Recycling Committee petition filed with ASUM stated the purpose of the committee was "to educate and promote recycling on the campus and in the community."

After a group has its petition granted, it must follow ASUM and Montana state guidelines and file an "Adjusted Budget Request" form, according to Brenda Perry, ASUM accountant. She said a group files the request form during Winter Quarter for the following year's budget.

The form, which tells what groups plan to do with the money they receive, is ruled on by the Budget and Finance Committee.

Last year's committee, according to Sauter and ASUM, was satisfied with the current parking situation.

"We have more (parking spaces) than the ordinance requires," Willett said.

Although UM meets that requirement, many students are not satisfied with the current parking situation.

Glenn Gibson, a senior in business administration, said the metered parking lot by the University Center was blocked off one day when he came to school and so he parked by a curb near the Men's Gymnasium.

The area was not posted for parking, according to Gibson.

The non-partisans have it

There has been a recent barrage of criticism at the University of Montana aimed at MontPIRG. The groups have ranged from how the organization is funded to how it doesn’t represent various sectors of the UM community. These complaints can be considered valid or petty, depending on how one views them. But the criticisms haven’t actually gotten to the root of the problem. In fact, the problem with the PIRG is in its roots.

What’s really wrong with MontPIRG is its hypocrisy.

Editorial

At MontPIRG’s informational meeting Tuesday night, it was announced that, along with further efforts to cripple the utilities in Montana, one of the group’s main objectives during the upcoming Legislature, the PIRG will be pushing a “truth in labeling” bill regarding political action committees.

The PIRGers say that it’s unfair and deceiving for Montana Power to name its PAC Citizens for Responsible Government.

Now that’s interesting. Ask a PIRGer what MontPIRG is, and he will quickly recite, “Yeah, it’s a non-profit, non-partisan research organization established by University students.”

Citizens for Responsible Government is no more fraudulent labeling than MontPIRG’s claim that it is non-partisan. It’s probably that a couple of members of the Montana Power group actually believe that the work the group is doing for a more responsible government, and most PIRGers believe that their organization is non-partisan.

The PIRG’s most blatant partisanship stems from the fact that many active members have an almost uncontrollable hatred for utility companies. It would be interesting to see one of them explain to the children of the 100-plus linemen in the state that MontPIRG’s efforts that help the utility’s customers to avoid rate increases are “non-partisan.”

Or how would a PIRGer like to explain to the Utica Sapphires 4H club that his “non-partisan” work was instrumental in keeping Montanans from being able to fund the safety award they have been working the last two years to earn.

And does MontPIRG, which is going to hire interns to do its lobbying at the 1985 Legislature, plan to hire those people Montana Power was going to hire as its interns but now can’t afford to?

After looking over MontPIRG’s crusades, aimed primarily at the big boys like Mountain Bell, Montana Power, the state’s banks and Montana’s car dealers, it is obvious that the group is led by a left-wing element. However, not everything MontPIRG has done is wrong. Montanans will be paying lower heating bills in the next few years, largely because of the PIRG’s work. And its numerous publications directed at aiding workers have been helping the UM’s struggling students.

But as is with most political decisions (yes, it is a political decision), the simple solution is often difficult for a bureaucratic organization to implement.

Leotard retards?

I smile, smirk really, to myself whenever I see someone wearing a running or exercise suit. Although the style of some of the suits is amusing enough—leotards so tight that they appear to be painted on, or gray dingy sweatclothes that discretely obscure God-knows-what kind of human form that lies beneath—it doesn’t really matter; it is still an exercise suit. I smirk.

Regardless of material, snappy nylon or practical cotton, designer label or none, it’s the idea that people would actually go out of their way and set aside time to exercise to “keep in shape” that I find to be inane.

Moving mass through space against resistance, that’s what exercise is all about. And to what end? To move more mass farther through more space tomorrow; that’s why. And to what end? To be able to do it again tomorrow. One can only be able to do it for more tomorrow than one could if one did not exercise. Apparently it makes sense to some folks.

To me it simply seems a meaningless effort that expends energy only to allow the exerciser to accomplish the same effort at a later date.

I’m not against exercise. I myself exercise. I sure do. You bet. Instead of running around in circles like the proverbial headless chicken, or up and down the mountain to see the “M” (how many times need one look at it closely?), I stroll on down to the neighbors (I like walking). In lieu of twirling barbells like a baton I chop wood (a lot). I don’t even like to admit that I have ever heard of Jane Fonda or her workout book. Although the style of some of the suits is amusing enough—leotards so tight that they appear to be painted on, or gray dingy sweatclothes that discretely obscure God-knows-what kind of human form that lies beneath—it doesn’t really matter; it is still an exercise suit. I smirk.

I think of all the energy that they spend attempting to keep a little bit of stored energy off of their rickety frames.

I recall a farmer I used to fence for way back in Iowa during my summer (and slimmer) days. Hal was a big man, tall yes, but he also had a belly to boot. Occasionally he would take some ribbing about it, and his reply was eloquent in its simplicity and reason. “Hell, if a man has good machinery then he ought to have a shed to cover it all the energy that they spend attempting to keep a little bit of stored energy off of their rickety frames.”

The upshot of all this is that while I exercise, work actually, I accomplish something more than just the act of exercising. Those who exercise claim to derive all sorts of benefits of which “feeling good” is one. I guess that could be and if that is the way they wish to go about feeling good then it’s O.K. by me. However I intend to go home this evening, chop some wood, start a fire in the old pot belly (stove) and then me and my Rainier will add a few more two-by-fours to the old shed.
It's not March

EDITOR: On a recent afternoon on campus I happened to walk by the UM Marching Band which was practicing before its director in a cold and penetrating rain. Many of the members were not clothed in appropriate rainwear, the director was. As I continued past I reminisced of a similar situation that I was once a party to.

It was at the time one of 600 Marines on Parade before a new commanding officer. We were resplendent in peruniforms, pressed to perfection, multicolored battle streamers and omnipresent rifles when the threatening heavens made good on their import. A cold rain ensued. But, we were proud, we were enthusiastic; we were Marines. A little rain would not hurt us. The parade continued as and the scene ended there were 600 bedraggled and shivering Marines to be seen. The new commander had a tent.

The weekend following the event saw many of those proud Marines sick enough to have to spend Saturday and Sunday in bed, a most rare occasion on a Marine base! We subsequently found ourselves questioning the intentions of our new commander. While I in no way intend to belittle our fine and enthusiastic Marching Band, I do wonder how many band members, after this cold and wet practice, will be healthy and well for their upcoming game performance.

As I once questioned the intentions of a commanding officer, I also do so now of the leadership of the UM Marching Band.

Better ruggers

EDITOR: Regarding the underwhelming success of our first recruiting effort of the year, we would like, once again, to invite women to join Missoula's Better Side Women's Rugby Football Club. We know you're out there!

Women's rugby in Missoula offers a unique opportunity for spirited individuals to enjoy competition in a truly sportsmanlike atmosphere.

In other words, for those of you who like to play hard, beer, drink, travel to exotic places (like Idaho and Washington) and regularly break the fun barrier, rugby is for you!

The beer is on us! Come check us out Friday night at our party for new recruits. There will be explanations of the game, footage of past matches, lots of new faces and nothing to lose but pride.

We'll see you at 625 S. 6th E. (behind the Health Service) around 8 p.m. Bring a friend!

Suzanne Hackett
Graduate, English

P.S. Rugby has a place for women of all athletic abilities and temperaments, and like life, the game is learned only by playing. So, what's your excuse?

Ah heck, Fritz

EDITOR: I enjoyed Gary Jahrig's recent editorial condemning the practice of heckling speakers and candidates on campus. However, I would like to emphasis a few aspects the editorial missed and correct some erroneous statements.

First, the examples Mr. Jahrig cites, with the sole exception of Walter Mondale, are of conservative and/or anti-communist speakers being heckled. The liberals were exercising their First Amendment rights at the expense of others. Unfortunately, this behavior is usually only condoned when the reverse is true. What's sauce for the liberal goose is not always sauce for the conservative gander.

Finally, the charge that "Fritzbuster" groups are responsible for harassing Mondale is false. "Fritzbusters" are used exclusively to warn up rallies for Republican candidates. Any "Fritzbuster" in full costume could not get within 1,000 yards of Mondale without being stopped by the Secret Service, due to security precautions concerning the "nuclear enhancers" (they might be loaded).

All "Fritzbuster" groups must abide by rules set down by CR National Committee, i.e. no heckling, off-color remarks, etc. The College Republican National Chairman recently sent a memo to all club chairmen, condemning heckling of Mondale.

College Republicans believe in personal liberty and will defend Walter Mondale's right to free speech no matter how boring or insane that speech may be.

Know the game before you aim

EDITOR: I would like to have a serious discussion with whomever wrote and layed out the article on hunting season, with the accompanying photo of the magnificent bull elk.

A few friends and I (who do consider ourselves true hunters, we don't simply sit there leaning against a tree waiting for game to walk past when we hurt) got together and decided to buy this person a guide to North America Big Game Species. If this person reads as well as they identify game, I will offer the use of my younger brother, who is only 8 years old, but is fully competent to announce to you the species as it happens to walk past you in the woods. I'm sure my younger sister could probably tell the difference between a bull elk and a mule deer.

If, however, you would like to learn true hunting skills, one's that would make you proud to hunt, feel free to contact us and we'll be happy to teach you stalking, tracking, proper game identification and shooting skills necessary to call yourself a hunter without out embarrassing the rest of us. The thrill of bugling in an elk and having him walk to within a few yards is what hunting with a bow is all about. It's not the "monotonous woods" or "aching back" from leaning against a single tree all day. Any sore muscles you have should be due to fatigue because of the terrain you covered or the elk you packed out, not from an uncomfortable seating position.

Maybe if someone had shown you what hunting was really all about, you wouldn't have these problems. But don't worry, there are always true hunters willing to help you. Until then, please don't degrade my sport by displaying your lack of knowledge to the public.

I know two things

EDITOR: I am not sure where the Kaimin finds its laws of particle physics, nor do I know where it gets its file photos of bull elk.

There are at least two things that I do know though. One is a basic law of motion mechanics that states: when traveling in an auto at n.m.p.h, 2 to the power of n bugs will hit the windshield in any given hour.

The other is that the probability of surviving this hunting season is directly proportional to the distance between you and the nearest member of the Kaimin staff.

From the cheap seats

By Layne Ralston
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Adams Fieldhouse has served as the classroom this week for Montana Grizzly basketball squad that opened fall workouts with "an awful lot of brainwork."

Coach Mike Montgomery, starting his seventh season with the Grizzlies, said that he tries to "get a lot of teaching done" in these early days of practice. That teaching, he said, consists of reeducating the veterans and introducing the new players to the Grizzly basketball program. Early practices emphasize drills and learning the offense rather than scrimmaging.

Montgomery said that from what he can tell, this season's squad will be a very different one from the team that finished the 83-84 season with 23-7 record and a second place finish in the Big Sky. After losing three-year starters Marc Glass, Doug Selvig, and Rob Hurley to graduation, Montgomery believes his task is "to develop a different character for this year's team."

Heading the squad will be returning starters Larry McBride and All-America candidate Larry Krytowiak, a center-forward duo that Sporting News magazine compared to the Houston Rocket's Akeem Olajuwon - Ralph Sampson combination in the National Basketball Association. Krytowiak, the Big Sky's most valuable player last year, led the conference in both rebounding and scoring.

Senior Bruce Burns and junior John Bates should both see action at the small forward slot.

Montgomery hopes the inside strength will take some of the pressure off the relatively inexperienced Grizzly perimeter players. Lercy Washington, a senior whom Montgomery calls "a known commodity," inherits Glass' job at point guard. He should get help from sophomore Scott Zanon.

The big question mark for the Grizzlies is at the off-guard position where Montgomery says, "we have no experience at all." The leading candidates for the spot are sophomore Todd Powell, junior John Boyd, and junior college transfer Mike Wnek. Montgomery said that each player has the size and shooting ability to get the job done.

Montgomery has been pleased with the attitude and enthusiasm of the squad this week, but confessed he is "a little concerned about the fundamentals." The Grizz appeared rusty in Wednesday's practice, missing several lay-ups and passes.

The only injury in practice so far came when Scott Zanon fractured a bone in his foot after coming down on another player's foot. Montgomery doesn't expect him to be at full strength for two to three weeks.

Weber State, with three starters returning up front, is the preseason favorite in the Big Sky, according to Montgomery. He said that Weber should benefit from the league's new three-point shot that none of other team because they also have two fine shooting guards.

Montgomery said that the three-point shot, "cheapens the game a bit." The Grizzlies will not specifically concern themselves with the three-pointer, he added.

Practice should get more intense as players vie for starting spots in their season opener, a home game against Simon Fraser University, on Nov. 19.
Haydn from rags to riches

By Rob Buckmaster
Kaimin Arts Columnist

It's been two hundred and fifty years since the birth of Joseph Haydn. And the Music department is celebrating by performing selected pieces this Sunday night at 8 p.m. in the Music Recital Hall. The concert coincides with a touring exhibit on loan from Austria that includes facsimile paintings, documents, memorabilia, and Haydn scores.

His career has been cited as the proverbial "rags to riches" story. He was born in a small Austrian village in the early 1730s. Singing in his church's choir, he developed a love for music when he was very young. Haydn rose from obscurity as soon as his symphonies started to be played. His music appealed to a wide audience because it was simply stuffed with the charm and intellectual wit that was also characteristic of his personality. The aristocrats loved him as much as the peasants, and he became the most popular of his contemporaries (who included Mozart).

He wrote everything from symphonies to instrumetals to religious music in his early career, while his later years focused on vocal works, such as comic operas and oratorios.

After a long and successful career, Haydn died in 1809 at the ripe age of 77.

The University Choir and Chamber Chorale will sing excerpts from The Creation and the Lord Nelson Mass. The Montana Duo, the Montana Baroque Ensemble and the UM Piano Trio will also present various works, such as the London Trio no. 3 in G major and the Duet for violin and cello, in D major.

The exhibit (now showing through October on the fourth floor of the Mansfield Library) will be set up in the lobby of the Music Recital Hall the evening of the show. And on Tuesday at 11:45 a.m. the University Choir plans to sing in the lobby of the library. There is no charge for either performance.

This Bud's For You.
By Dave Fisher
Kaimin reporter

"Any sensational news today, Phoebe?" a reporter asked ASUM President Phoebe Patterson last week.

"No," she said.

"Why not?" the reporter asked.

"Because everything's running smoothly," she said.

Her answer described ASUM's performance so far under her administration.

"I like to think that I'm a facilitator," she said in her office Monday, as a phone rang down the hall.

She answered, and transferred the call to another office. Although she runs what she calls "a half-million dollar corporation" at ASUM, she answers office phones in the early afternoons.

"I don't get much coverage (in the Kaimin), and that doesn't bother me," she said.

"As long as the job gets done."

"The job" has gotten done at ASUM since students voted 3 to 1 last spring to elect her to the presidency.

As ASUM president, Patterson is ultimately responsible for spending more than $500,000 in student fees. She is also responsible for representing the interests of the student body before the UM administration and the state Board of Regents, and for keeping campus committees positions filled with student volunteers.

She chairs the Central Board's weekly meetings, and is largely responsible for the subject, if not the content, of its debates.

The responsibility is a new experience for her.

After graduating from the University of California at Davis in 1978 with a degree in renewable natural resources, she moved to Montana and bounced from low-paying job to low-paying job, mostly with government agencies.

She enrolled in UM in the fall of 1982 to pursue a graduate degree.

She applied for a vacant Central Board seat in her first quarter of school. She served on the board for two years before deciding last year to run for higher office.

She has since worked to build her administration into an efficient operation. According to ASUM Accountant Brenda Perry, who has worked with four administrations, including Patterson's, she has succeeded.

"When she first took office, she wanted to gain respect," Perry said. "But she hasn't pulled some of the things we've seen in the past."

Other ASUM presidents tried to use their positions to gain special favors and perks such as special treatment at registration and free football tickets from the UM administration, she said. They also tried to coerce CB members to support their views. Patterson has not.

Instead, she has involved ASUM officers in all of the decisions her administration makes. Perry said, and they have gradually learned to work as a team.

She "persuades," rather than coerces. CB members to back her stands on the issues, Perry said. Her persuasiveness rests on her ability to research her positions thoroughly before she presents them to the board for its approval.

Patterson has gained the respect of both the UM administration and the Board of Regents, Perry said, because she researches her issues well, and supports the student body's interests coherently.

For example, she said, when the regents attempted last spring to force ASUM to buy an insurance policy formerly carried by the state, Patterson reacted quickly, and was able to dissuade them. Her appeal saved the student body several thousand dollars.

"The regents saw that Phoebe had put some thought into what she was saying," Perry said. "And that has given us (students) more credibility with them."
UM alumni return to school for conference

By Gordy Pace
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

When University of Montana alumni return to campus next week for Homecoming festivities, they will have the chance to return to class—Alumni College.

The "college" will be held next Thursday in the University Center Montana rooms. The four presentations, given by UM faculty, will be built around the theme "1984: Looking Back on the Future." Each presenter will offer a different perspective on George Orwell's novel "1984."

"We chose the topic last January," said Sheila Stearns, director of the UM Alumni Association. "1984 was a new year and it seemed like a good time to use this as a theme. Since this is a liberal arts college, we were certain there were faculty members who had been thinking about '1984.'"

Stearns was right. Several faculty members had been thinking about the implications of Orwell's novel, and four of them will share their views with alumni.

Richard Drake, an assistant professor of history, will discuss why "1984" has been one of the greatest bestsellers in history. He will examine the attitudes of the 1940's, when the book was written, as well as the present time, when the book is more popular than ever.

Stewart Justman, associate professor of English, will look at how language is used to control people in society, particularly the language of politicians, and compare that political language with Orwell's language of Newspeak.

Ruth Patrick, the dean of the UM Maureen and Mike Mansfield Library, will discuss access to information as a protection against the thought control about which Orwell wrote.

Finally, John Pulliam, dean of the UM School of Education, will predict what is in store for society in the year 2002, which is 18 years into the future and one-half the time-span of Orwell's prediction.

Alumni College has traditionally been a two-to-three day weekend program in a resort setting during the summer. Stearns said. But this year, the program had to be cancelled this year because of a lack of participants. Stearns blamed the low turnout on a poor selection of the weekend, pointing out that the planned days, the first weekend in August, were during the Summer Olympics.

But rather than give up the program, Stearns said, she asked the professors to regroup and offer an abbreviated version of Alumni College during Homecoming.

"It's an experiment, definitely," she said. "It's an effort to preserve what we thought was an excellent program..."

The event begins at 9 a.m. and runs until 2 p.m. Despite the title, the program is open to all UM faculty, staff and students. The fee for the program is $10, but Stearns said students don't have to pay the fee if they don't attend a planned luncheon. She added that the program is informal and people are welcome to come and go as they wish.

"We chose the topic last January," said Sheila Stearns, director of the UM Alumni Association. "1984 was a new year and it seemed like a good time to use this as a theme. Since this is a liberal arts college, we were certain there were faculty members who had been thinking about '1984.'"

Stearns was right. Several faculty members had been thinking about the implications of Orwell's novel, and four of them will share their views with alumni.

Richard Drake, an assistant professor of history, will discuss why "1984" has been one of the greatest bestsellers in history. He will examine the attitudes of the 1940's, when the book was written, as well as the present time, when the book is more popular than ever.

Stewart Justman, associate professor of English, will look at how language is used to control people in society, particularly the language of politicians, and compare that political language with Orwell's language of Newspeak.

Ruth Patrick, the dean of the UM Maureen and Mike Mansfield Library, will discuss access to information as a protection against the thought control about which Orwell wrote.

Finally, John Pulliam, dean of the UM School of Education, will predict what is in store for society in the year 2002, which is 18 years into the future and one-half the time-span of Orwell's prediction.

Alumni College has traditionally been a two-to-three day weekend program in a resort setting during the summer. Stearns said. But the program had to be cancelled this year because of a lack of participants. Stearns blamed the low turnout on a poor selection of the weekend, pointing out that the planned days, the first weekend in August, were during the Summer Olympics.

But rather than give up the program, Stearns said, she asked the professors to regroup and offer an abbreviated version of Alumni College during Homecoming.

"It's an experiment, definitely," she said. "It's an effort to preserve what we thought was an excellent program..."

The event begins at 9 a.m. and runs until 2 p.m. Despite the title, the program is open to all UM faculty, staff and students. The fee for the program is $10, but Stearns said students don't have to pay the fee if they don't attend a planned luncheon. She added that the program is informal and people are welcome to come and go as they wish.
America's military incompetent, Williams says

By Pam Newbern
Kaimin News Editor

America's military is incompetent, according to Rep. Pat Williams, (D-Mont.).

"America has not had a successful military venture since the early days of Korea," Williams said yesterday afternoon in an interview with the Kaimin. "The cost of our military incompetency has been hundreds of thousands of dead young Americans and billions of dollars of misspent taxpayer's money."

Williams, who was in Missoula to address a Montana Education Association forum on child abuse, said America's military incompetence is due to "a handful of high ranking military people" and the incapability of top bureaucrats at the Pentagon.

In addition, he said, the incompetence is also "due to poor manpower planning, bad procurement procedures and political infighting at the Pentagon, which has caused each of the three branches of the military to all want, and get, their own air force, navy and their own land operations."

Williams said the solution to America's military incompetency is a "good meaningful review of Pentagon operations." He said he believes the next Congress and President will order such a review with "the goal of a lean, mean efficient military. Right now, we have a sloppy, bureaucratic, inadequate defense for which Americans are paying through the nose."

Conventional military forces, such as men, tanks, planes and material have been allowed to deteriorate, Williams said, while President Reagan has built up a nuclear arsenal, "The Pentagon leads political leaders astray," Williams said, adding the military should concentrate on its conventional forces, instead of wasting money on nuclear defense.

An opponent of nuclear build-up, Williams supports a moratorium on nuclear weapons.

Williams, who was first elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1978, is in Montana campaigning for re-election as First District (Western Montana) Representative. He is running against Republican Gary Carlson and Libertarian Royer Warren.

In addition to the military, Williams also talked about Reagan's cuts in education benefits for students.

"He has recommended significant cuts at every level of education from head-start through graduate school," Williams said. "If Congress had gone along with all this president had asked for in cuts in education, it would have taken us all the rest of this decade to get back to the quality of our schools (that) we had when he assumed office."

"The president has done a fairly good job at focusing America's attention on schools," said Williams, a former school teacher. "He's done a terrible job at providing the necessary resources to assist education to meet challenges over the 1980s."

Williams also talked about the economic situation facing Western Montanans.

"The answer to Montana's economic difficulties is to lower interest rates," he said, adding he expects whoever is elected president in November to institute legislation to cut federal spending.

"The President now says he will not raise taxes," Williams said. "What he means is, he will not raise taxes for rich people. I think the president is going to ask for spending cuts and increased taxes."

Williams said he was assuming Reagan will win the November presidential election, but added that if Democratic contender Walter Mondale is elected, he also will ask for spending cuts and increased taxes.

Reagan is ahead in the presidential race, Williams said, adding that if Mondale "stuff's Reagan again" in Sunday's presidential debate, he thinks the election will be very close, although he did not say which candidate he thinks would win.
NOW says 'Deep Throat' raises more than just money

(CPS) Several campuses during the past month have opted to approve using campus funds and facilities to run pornographic movies.

Most recently, University of Virginia President Frank Hereford has refused a National Organization of Women (NOW) invitation to view the movie "Deep Throat." NOW wanted to enlist Hereford’s support in banning the film from UVA, where it was shown as a fundraiser for the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity two weeks ago.

Hereford, in a letter to Cynthia Taylor, president of the Charlottesville, Va., NOW chapter, said that while he personally abhors pornographic movies, he feared banning the film would violate the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Also fearing it would quash free speech, a dorm student government at Indiana University last week approved a motion to let students keep showing X-rated movies in the dorm.

The week before, 25 University of Iowa protestors tried to disrupt a campus showing of a movie called "Peeping Tom.

The anti-pornography forces have won a few times. The manager of a University of Texas at El Paso campus pub recently ordered the pub’s pay-TV channel which shows late-night pornographic movies turned off at 10 p.m.

Soon after the Indiana dorm council approved showing pornography, the campus-wide Indiana University Student Association passed a resolution condemning pornography and offering to work with the dean of students to teach students "about the effects of pornography on our society.

Generally, however, students and administrators reluctantly go along with the screenings, which are usually staged by fraternities or campus film societies.

"This situation is not a winner in any respect," said William Fishback, an aide to Hereford at Virginia.

Fishback said Hereford finally decided that "we're talking about an issue of freedom here. We will not ban movies because this could lead to book burnings and such." "This is a very complex issue of values," NOW's Taylor said. "Hereford claims the school won't do anything that is against community standards, but in Charlottesville, this is against community standards. She said "the cost of human dignity is too great to show this type of film on public grounds of a state school, especially as a fundraiser."

Taylor also sees the issue as "the last bastion of men against women at a university.

The courts, however, have been quick to rule against those who would ban movies, books or other forms of popular culture.

In a May 1983 landmark case, a Michigan federal judge forced Grand Valley State College administrators to pay the $250 rental fee for a X-rated film a student group wanted to show.

The college routinely has paid film rental fees in the past, but didn't want to fund a pornographic film.

Private Marquette University last fall banned "Porky's" because it included "excessive sex" and "Monty Python's The Meaning of Life" because it was "anti-Catholic." Administrators received no legal challenge, a Marquette spokesman says.

ACT, SAT college test scores post slight gains

Like the SAT, the ACT measures high school seniors' knowledge of math, English, natural science and social studies. ACT math scores were the most improved, rising four-tenths of a point to 17.3. English scores rose three-tenths of a point to 18.1, social studies two-tenths of a point to 17.3, and natural science one-tenth of a point to 21, according to ACT spokeswoman Judy Emery.

Both men and women did best in natural science. Men posted an average score of 22.4, the same as in 1982-83, and women averaged 19.9, an increase of three-tenths of a point.

Women scored lowest in math with a 16.1 average. The men's lowest average was 17.5 in English.

Overall, women's average scores went up three-tenths of a point to 17.9, while men notched a 19.3 average, a two-tenths of a point hike over last year. Emery said.

A perfect score on the ACT is 36 points.

Thirteen percent of the students scored in the 26-36 range, 26 percent scored from 21-25 points, 28 percent scored 16-20 points and a third of the test takers scored 1-15 points. Point distribution has remained fairly constant for two years, Emery said.

Participants reported an average grade point of 2.92, slightly lower than last year, but Emery said "students did well on the test so they may just be more conservative in reporting their GPAs."

ACT officials stress that the scores forecast no significant upward trend. Test averages have fluctuated slightly since 1975-76, when scores leveled off after a six-year drop.

The unexplained slump followed ACT's highest average of 19.9 in 1969-70. The ACT test is given nationally five times a year from October to June. Student narrative reports of individual scores are sent to each participant's high school. Emery explained, except for June scores which are mailed directly to the student.

Weekend

Continued from page 5 showed flashes of potential in the past two games, was dealt a serious setback this week with the injury to QB Marty Mornhinweg. He is listed as questionable with a sprained knee and may not even make the trip with the team. Kelly Richardson will start in his place tomorrow. With a little help from above the Griz will someday soon win a game.

A world record set right here at UM? Could be, if the women's swim team proves up to the challenge of 100 miles of swimming in a little over 24 hours.

The 12 person team is undertaking the challenge of raising enough money to train in Hawaii over Christmas break. They begin their task at 5 this evening and each swimmer will go nearly 9 miles in 25 yard increments. The swim itself may not be the toughest aspect. To start each leg, swimmers will dive from the blocks. If there are 1760 yards per mile, that figures out to be somewhere in the neighborhood of 600 dives per person. Ouch!

If the difference between men and boys is the price of their toys, then it will be Christmas in October for many of Montana's hunters. They can take to the woods and prairies with their newest purchases this Sunday, as big game season opens over much of the state. Count on many hunters to toss and turn Saturday night because of trophy size elk and deer running through their dreams.

Enrollment takes a dive

The University of Montana has 157 fewer students enrolled than it did a year ago.

There are 9,213 students enrolled at UM this quarter, according to official figures released Thursday from the UM Registrar's Office. That number is down from the 9,370 students enrolled at UM during Fall Quarter, 1983.

Phil Bain, UM registrar, listed two reasons for this year's decline in enrollment. He said that last year, the economy was poor and more people stayed at home. In addition, he said, the number of high school students in Montana has declined, so fewer graduating seniors go to Montana colleges and universities.

Bain said he thought all the six units of the Montana university system have experi­enced enrollment declines He said he had heard enrollment at Montana State University in Bozeman had dropped as much as 3 percent, compared to UM's 1.7 percent. Officials at MSU were not available for comment.

non-parking, Gibson said, but he later received a ticket. He added that he found out after he had gotten the citation that there was no parking sign posted by the Field House. “Now, how am I supposed to relate a sign by the Field House to a curb by the Old Men’s Gym?” Gibson asked. “If they (UM Security) want people without decals to not park in those areas, they should put up more signs, paint the curb or some damn thing. I think it’s ridiculous.”
Ed Hudson, a junior in inter-personal communications, said that last year when he lived on campus, he bought a parking decal, but could seldom find a place to park his car.
This year, Hudson said, he has moved off campus and must commute by car to school. He added that he usually can’t find a parking place close to the buildings where he has classes.
UM students have also complained about the fee increase for parking decals from $15 to $16 per year. The increase, Willett said, is to meet the higher costs of maintaining and improving the UM parking lots.
Even with the increase, the survey revealed that UM ranks competitively with Montana schools. Northern Montana College’s parking fee is $16 per year, Montana State University’s is $16 per year, Eastern Montana College’s is $27 per year or $10 per quarter and Montana Tech’s is $10 per year. Western Montana College, on the other hand, has no parking fee.
Montana university students have it easy when compared to USC, Stanford and Purdue, the Kaimin survey revealed. USC, located in Los Angeles, has semester fees of $38 for commuter students, $93 for on-campus residents and $85 for faculty members. Stanford, located in Stanford, Calif., has fees varying from $60 to $100 per year, depending how close the spaces are to the campus.
