U.S. Latin policy said to be proper

By Julie T. Sullivan

Kaimin Reporter

U.S. foreign policy is working out almost "miraculously well" in Latin America despite recent problems in Nicaragua, according to Datus Proper, a career U.S. Foreign Service officer.

In a press conference at the journalism library, Proper, a specialist on Latin America who has served in Portugal, Ireland, Brazil and Angola, said the election of Jose Napoleon Duarte as president of El Salvador last spring was a "real break" for U.S. foreign policy.

On the University of Montana campus for the Model United Nations program this week, Proper said Duarte represents the democratic reformist center, a position which the United States traditionally has supported. He added that Duarte's government seems to be winning the war with the rebels.

Proper said he is fairly sure that the alleged shipment of Soviet MIG fighter planes to Nicaragua recently did not take place. He also said there is no foreseeable arms build-up in Nicaragua that the United States could not easily control.

However, he added that the Nicaraguan government may plan to build up arms so it can dominate its neighboring countries when U.S. attention is occupied elsewhere.

Consequently, Proper said, the United States is becoming increasingly popular in the countries neighboring Nicaragua. Nicaragua has frightened those countries, such as Panama, Costa Rica and Honduras, by exporting revolution.

MontPIRG may be dumped as ASUM's election partner

By Judi Thompson

Kaimin Reporter

If the chairman of the ASUM Elections Committee has his way, MontPIRG and ASUM will not conduct their elections together next year.

For the past two years, ASUM and MontPIRG have held joint elections and shared the responsibility of running them.

Robert LeHeup, Elections Committee chairman, said his committee has approved a proposal to separate the elections. He said the committee wanted students to realize that ASUM and MontPIRG are different groups, and that holding elections with MontPIRG was no more appropriate than holding elections with any other campus group.

C.B. Pearson, MontPIRG executive director, said he was uncertain of ASUM's position. He added that the two groups probably would discuss the problem further.

Pearson said he did not wish to comment on the committee's proposal because he did not know the particulars of its decision. He added, however, that he thought the reason behind the proposal was that ASUM is changing its elections process.

He said he is not aware of any conflict between MontPIRG and ASUM which might have contributed to the decision to separate the groups' elections.

According to Jeremy Sauter, ASUM vice president, there have been "a lot of problems" when MontPIRG and ASUM elections have been held at the same time.

"There were a lot of people who had no idea what MontPIRG was about when they came to vote for ASUM," he said.

Sauter said holding ASUM's elections separately from those of other groups will encourage more students to vote, since there will be fewer issues to decide.

The Elections Committee submitted its proposal Nov. 14 to Central Board for consideration. CB's approval is needed before the proposal can be adopted, and the issue is to be decided at the Nov. 28 CB meeting.

LeHeup said ASUM plans several changes in its election process. He explained that, in past years, three polling places were set up around campus and the election was held on one day. This year, there will be one polling place and the election will extend over two days, he said.

ASUM elections are tentatively set for Feb. 27 and 28.

Despite loss, Mirage termed a success

By Michael Kustudia

Kaimin Reporter

Neil Bucklew, University of Montana president, described the UM contingent's trip to Japan for the Mirage Bowl as a "huge success."

"Everyone came away feeling like they had had a special experience," Bucklew said Monday.

Bucklew wasn't alone in his appreciation of the trip.

He said the students he talked to "enjoyed themselves immensely" during the trip, and that it probably would be the "highlight of their college careers."

In addition to the football game, which the Grizzlies lost to Army 45-31, the trip was a chance to renew contacts with various Japanese universities, Bucklew said.

One highlight of the trip was a banquet Friday night at which Mike Mansfield, U.S. ambassador to Japan, spoke "to the delight of everyone," Bucklew said.

Mansfield, the longtime U.S. senator from Montana had some "enlightening observations" on U.S.-Japanese relations, which Bucklew said are important to Montana because of its trade relations with Japan.

Montana Lt. Gov. George Turman said that winning or losing the game wasn't the important thing, but that Montana was well-represented by the university and the football players, who "conducted themselves very well on and off the field."

Jeff Morrison, chairman of the Board of Regents, also called the trip a "great experience" and said the Japanese were "extremely good hosts."

He said the game was well-handled and that he was impressed with the Grizzlies' play.

"The Grizzlies performed extremely well against a powerhouse team," Morrison said.

Harley Lewis, UM athletic director, also praised the Grizzlies on their performance, and said the game was "well-played on both sides."

Lewis said the "student athletes and cheerleaders were given an opportunity for exposure to another society and country."

Grizzly quarterback Marty Mornhinweg said that the team was "treated royally" by the Japanese.

Mornhinweg said he was sick in bed most of the week, so he didn't get to do much sight-seeing.

"What I enjoyed most was hearing Mike Mansfield talk," he said.

Sugar and spice...

EDITOR: To Shannon Hinds: Re; The Sisterhood.

Regarding your recent petty attack on the sorority system at UM, I felt it necessary to make a few points clear to you. First of all, it is obvious that you are or were one of the token one of twenty new sorority members who for some reason of another become disenchanted with sororities and just quit. The information you gave as reasons not to join sororities is not only blatantly unfair but you are misinformed as well.

Sororities govern themselves at a democratic level. Membership selection is handled with parliamentary procedure as every member has a vote and a say in the selection of new members. Supplementary evaluation forms are available on prospective rushees just as information is available to legislators on bills passed through Congress. Family income is only recorded as an indication that the new member may be able to meet her financial obligations to the house.

Sorority members choose the right not to have alcohol on the premises because of a legal standpoint. National chapters don't want to be liable if any member becomes involved in an accident because she was drinking at the house. In recent years some bars and taverns have been held liable for their patrons drunk driving accidents. Fraternities and dorms would be wise to consider alcohol awareness programs as well.

Your point about house duties is ridiculous. Sorority living teaches responsibility and courtesy to others. If a member makes a mess, it's her responsibility to clean it up. I would find it hard to believe that one member had to clean a whole house. Instead, housework duties are separated and shared. I also find it hard to believe that if a member was flunking chemistry, that she would be forced to attend a meeting. And since the primary goal of sororities is to promote scholarship within the members, failing a class would be a valid reason to miss a meeting to get to the library for some help.

Sororities create friendships, give moral support and instill a sense of permanency while in college, that is rare among collegians moving from dorm to dorm, apartment to apartment. Sororities may shelter some from reality, but realistically college is a cozy four to six year retreat before entering the big cruel world.

The Panhellenic system on this campus has worked hard in the past ten years to make sororities a viable and strong group worthy of membership.

Perhaps the saying is true, you get out of it what you put into it. Your disloyal and unserving attitude toward the women you once joined, is only an indication that you let them down and quit.

SCREWUM

EDITOR: Some points to ponder... Why are the Regents so willing and so adamant about defining ASUM as an integral part of the university system when they are taking our money, slapping us with a new regulation, or grabbing student powers but not when they have to stand up for us and spend some of our money (fees and taxes) on us students for things like liability insurance for ASUM groups?

Why is it that the Regents are so fond of saying that once we pay our fees our money is not student money but state money to be administered by their command, yet, if we and our money are part of the state, why can't we enjoy state holidays? I wonder if Mr. Noble and Mr. Dayton were working on Columbus Day? I wonder what kind of state insurance policy they are covered under?

I am sure that no one would ever accuse these wise men and their loyal corps of Sensationally Capable Regents in charge of Everlasting Wisdom on University Matters (SCREWUM) of adhering to a double standard for their own benefit.

Food for thought

EDITOR: I am curious about an ambiguity in the Fast for a World Harvest story that ran in the Nov. 14 issue. Would the reporter please clarify? I refer to the information that in 1983, $1.02 from each meal donated by a student went to Oxfam and that this total was divided equally between Oxfam America and the Poverello Center.

It also state that the Food Service pledges "the cost of the food" for each meal to Oxfam. Since according to 1984 calculations culled from the general catalog on Meal Plan A and B, the pre-paid cost breakdown to the student is $2.60 and $2.78 respectively, I assume this means that the Food Service keeps the remaining $1.50 plus—depending on the 1984 average that goes to Oxfam—and that this difference presumably means the student for wages, salaries upkeep and whatever, that are not part of the total donated to Oxfam.

I am confused on this. If my assumption is mistaken, please enlighten me, if I am correct, please enlighten the student body, for it would appear a direct donation of cash would be much more effective and meaningful for Oxfam and the full use of a student's meal ticket would be put of better economic use, especially as how the Food Service is not exactly a bargain to begin with.

Students wise to learn early about money matters

By Brett French
Kaimin Reporter

College students should not worry about finances during school, a University of Montana professor says, but would be "wise to learn" about money matters while they have the time.

People can achieve their major financial goals if they start young, says Dave Weber, UM professor of accounting and finance.

But how many students know how to invest the paychecks they will earn after graduation?

"Probably not an awful lot," Weber said last week. That's why, he said, he likes to work with students.

"It's amazing what you can accomplish," he said.

Weber teaches the Personal Financial Planning and Investment class through the business school. It is a 200-level class but has no prerequisite and is open to students of all majors.

Weber said he hopes the class helps students achieve their financial goals by giving them the tools they need to become their own financial planners.

"It is more important to learn how to think than to learn the specifics," he said.

This thought process can then be applied to financial problems that Weber said most people don't understand, such as life insurance, taxes and IRAs (Individual Retirement Accounts).

IRAs are especially important to college students now, who pay into Social Security but may get nothing in return. This is because when the large number of "baby boomers" come of retirement age, more people will be drawing from the system than are contributing, and that could spell bankruptcy.

IRAs can build up dollars for retirement in that event, as well as provide a tax shelter during high-earning years, Weber said.

Tax shelters may be important when a college graduate starts earning a large paycheck. Therefore, Weber advises that the student become familiar with income-tax preparation now.

"People are silly to pay someone else to do their income taxes," Weber said.

"You know more about your financial affairs than someone who doesn't even know you."

Weber added that paying $100 now to learn to complete income-tax forms would quickly pay for itself in the money saved by not paying an accountant.

Finally, Weber warns students to be especially careful about life insurance.

"People get sold the wrong kind and the wrong amount because they don't have the basic knowledge to analyze the policy," he said. Most students do not need insurance, Weber added, unless they have financial dependents.

Weber also advised that all people play an active role in society to control their financial future. One way of doing this is by trying to get politicians to "bite the bullet" and work for a financially sound system, he said.

Measles widespread on college campuses

CPS — More campuses have suffered measles outbreaks this fall, the American College Health Association reports in its most recent newsletter, but efforts to control the disease appear to be helping.

Twelve campuses report outbreaks of the disease so far this fall, with epidemics erupting at Miami of Ohio, Houston, Louisiana State and Dartmouth.

Indiana University had its second outbreak in two years.

Nevertheless, "the number of cases is down compared to previous years," said Dr. Benjamin Nkowane of the Center for Disease Control. Officials don't expect a replay of the nationwide outbreaks of the last three years.

Vigorous, state-level attempts to vaccinate those most susceptible to measles and other communicable diseases will help quell further outbreaks, he added.

And because students are among those most vulnerable to measles, many colleges also now demand proof of immunization before letting students register.

In Mississippi, all state schools now require immunization and will vaccinate any student attempting to register without proof of immunity.

A new Massachusetts law, effective Sept. 1, 1985, requires all incoming freshmen to be immunized against measles, mumps and other communicable diseases.

The requirement will extend to graduate and undergraduate student in 1989.

Student health services also are devising programs to test students' immunity, and providing vaccine and information on the effects of measles.

The University of Kentucky's clinic offers $5 measles vaccinations, but does not require students receive the shot.

Dartmouth College officials are notifying students whose records don't clearly indicate a vaccination date in hopes the students will seek inoculation.

Though University of Maryland officials claim the risk of measles is not high there, health center administrators are distributing cards to educate students about the disease and to encourage immunization.

And Cornell University, following a 50-case measles outbreak last spring, set up clinics to prevent a reprise.

Serious measles outbreaks have erupted on college campuses annually since 1981, when 101 college cases were reported nationwide, the ACHA noted.

By 1983, the number had mushroomed to 282.

The ACHA estimates college students are 20 percent more susceptible to the disease because many young adults never were immunized or were vaccinated before 1970 with ineffective vaccine.

And many states had no immunization requirements before 1977.

"The immunization initiatives implemented in the late 1970's affected only children entering elementary school," Nkowane said. "College and high school age students were not a priority."

"Then those students went to college, and we found many of them were not immune," Nkowane said. "So we had major outbreaks of measles in 1982 and '83."

College campaigns to vaccinate their students are a "major contributing factor" to this year's lower measles rate, he said.

Model UN gives students chance to learn about world

By Brian Justice
Kaimin Reporter

About 280 Montana and Idaho high school students are taking advantage of University of Montana's resources to learn about international relations.

The 20th annual Model United Nations began yesterday in the University Center Montana Rooms and will be completed today. Twelve schools from Montana and one from Idaho participated in the program.

The students will deal with international affairs, public speaking, parliamentary procedure and practical politics. The Model UN will simulate the activity of the UN with high school delegations representing member nations.

Students will debate current issues, introduce and support resolutions and participate in meetings of standing UN committees and the Security Council.

Bridget Cavanaugh, a UM freshman with an undeclared major and a former MUN participant from Bozeman Senior High School, called MUN a "great learning experience" that enables students to broaden their view of foreign political situations and current events.

MUN gives students a "direction which isn't obtainable from printed sources," said John Free, MUN advisor from Bozeman Senior High School. The curriculum allows students to deal with specific issues such as the U.S. involvement in Lebanon, he added.

Free, a MUN advising participant since 1968, said the idea was initiated about 20 years ago by UM students who had participated in college models of the United Nations.

In the beginning stages of the program, Free added, MUN was only supported in moderation by the UM faculty and their support was "weaned until nonexistent."

MUN was "an orphan" supported only by UM students,

Free said, adding that the students kept the program going.

Despite the lack of faculty participation, Free said, during the past several years interest has in the MUN program has reawakened.

Free said UM President Neil Bucklew, James Flightner, associate dean of the college of arts and sciences, and Maureen Curnow, associate professor in French and foreign languages, responded to appeals from UM students and sponsors from Montana high schools to re-initiate faculty support for the MUN program.

Outstanding participants will be awarded scholarships.

Colleges to get more attention, may face numerous changes

CPS — Student and college officials nationwide think a newly-released government report on higher education probably has begun a long reform period for the nation's colleges, and could eventually make students go to school longer and take more liberal arts courses to graduate.

While most sources agree the report has brought much-needed attention to colleges, they're more concerned about the thoroughness and reliability of the study itself.

The new study, together with others due to be released in the next two years, signals that "this will be an important decade for the re-alignment of higher education and for setting goals," said Ernest Boyer, president of the Carnegie Foundation, and author of last year's highly-acclaimed study, "High Schools," which made secondary education a major political issue.

"We hope the report will generate as much interest in higher education - both its strengths and weaknesses - as the 'Nation At Risk' report on secondary education did for junior high and high schools last year," said Bill Kroger, spokesman for the American Council on Education (ACE).

"Although we don't expect the new report to draw the same kind of attention for colleges that was seen last year for high schools, you certainly could look at it" as the anointing of higher education as a political issue, said Cliff Adelman, spokesman for the Department of Education's National Institute of Education (NIE), which sponsored the new study.

The report, "Involvement in Learning: Realizing the Potential of American Higher Education," was prepared by a seven-member panel of higher education experts at the behest of U.S. Education Secretary Terrel Bell.

Comparing colleges' problems to a mild case of the flu, Bell said the report shows that "American higher education has the sniffles," adding "it might come down with a bad cold or even pneumonia if we don't do something about it."

"I don't know how a case of the sniffles compares to a rising tide," said Boyer referring to Bell's 1983 characterization of public education as a "rising tide of mediocrity."

"But I guess he means the problems in higher education aren't as bad as in the public schools," Boyer added.

The NIE report charges American colleges are plagued by problems.

For example, faculty salaries are so low that "the (teaching) profession itself has become less attractive to our brightest students," the report says.

In addition, "increasing numbers of students are majoring in narrow specialties" in which the programs are "isolated from one another." Thus, "many students end up with fragmented and limited knowledge."

The panelists want all students to take at least two years of liberal arts courses - even if it means extending the length of their educations - and pass a series of tests to prove their skills.

But some sources complain the report is statistically inaccurate, neglects "non-traditional" students, and seriously lacks student input and involvement.

"The report is wrong in saying that only half of all students complete their BAs," said Kroger.

Instead, he said "65 percent of all entering freshmen complete their BA degrees within four years, and 75 percent complete them within 10 years."

NIE's Adelman, however, says the report's 50 percent dropout rate, unlike the ACE's, takes into account all entering freshmen, not just full time students.

"It clearly is a report that did a good effort at examining higher education," said Kathy Ozer, legislative liaison for the U.S. Student Association. "But it neglects the funding issue altogether, lacks student input and involvement, and there's a good deal of rhetoric in the text that doesn't belong there, and I'm not sure what it means."

Grizzly hoopsters win warm-up

By Mike Olinger
Kaimin Sports Reporter

As the Grizzly men's basketball team prepares for its Nov. 27 game against Wisconsin-Stout, the players and coaches will now have a way to measure themselves. The Grizzlies easily outdistanced their first foe Friday night, dispatching Simon Fraser 87-52.

The outcome of the game was evident early as UM had built a 30-point lead in the second quarter.

The ease of the victory took much of the luster away for fans, but coaches were pleased.

"Overall we gave a fair performance," said Coach Mike Montgomery. "We had no glaring weaknesses although we didn't have the type of competition we had hoped for."

Prior to the game, Montgomery had said that a number of players would see action in different combinations and situations.

True to his word, 11 of the 14 Grizzlies saw playing time. Only the three potential red-shirt freshmen were held out so as to remain eligible for redshirting.

Montgomery continually went to his bench, with no apparent loss of effectiveness.

"We had good contributions off the bench," said Montgomery. "We did lack a little intensity in the second half but when you are that far ahead, it can be difficult to play your best."

Every victory counts though and the Grizzlies are certain to see tougher competition as the season progresses.

UM dumps Cougars

By Doug Whittaker
Kaimin Sports Editor

Led By Anita Novak's 21 points, The University of Montana women's basketball team downed the Washington State Cougars 75-52 last night in Dahlberg Arena.

UM Coach Robin Selvig said he was pleased with the effort, but admitted that the team still has a lot of question marks.

The Lady Griz came out strong in the season opener, taking advantage of a flurry of Washington State fouls and travelling errors, and shooting a hot 59 percent to take a 42-21 halftime lead.

But in the second half, WSU came out and reeled off eight unanswered points, putting some life in the game. "I'm not sure why they self-destructed in the first half, but they are a good team," said Selvig.

The Cougars however, could never get closer than ten points, although they managed to score only two shy of the Montana total in the second half.

Selvig was very pleased with forward Novak's effort, as well as that of Barb Kavanagh, the point guard and field general for the Lady Griz, who scored 18 points. Also in double figures was center Sharla Murali, who hit for twelve more points against a tall WSU squad, although she had trouble connecting in the second half.

Selvig mentioned that Kavanagh also made things easier for the two starting freshmen on the team, Dawn Silliker and Cheryl Brandell, both of whom turned in impressive performances. "They made some mistakes," said Selvig, "but they did a lot of good things too."

A third freshman, Marti Leibenguth, also got significant playing time, and tossed in eight points.

Selvig is satisfied with the team depth, something he admitted was somewhat surprising. That depth should improve in three weeks, as regular starter Natalie Streeter returns after an appendectomy last Thursday.

The next Lady Griz game is against Division II power, the College of Great Falls, at home on Nov. 24.

Offensive prowess was no mirage at bowl game

By Mike Olinger
Kaimin Sports Reporter

Thousands of miles of air travel, four days in a foreign country and eleven hours of time difference could tax anyone's endurance, let alone that of a football team.

But fatigue was not in evidence in Tokyo, Japan where the University of Montana football team battled the Cadets of West Point in the eighth annual Mirage Bowl.

Montana lost the match, 45-31, but made an offensive showing that no one, save an eternal optimist, would have expected. Only Boston College scored more points against the Army defense this season.

Indeed, penalties and missed opportunities kept the Grizzlies from narrowing the margin of defeat. A penalty nullified a 63 yard touchdown pass from quarterback Marty Mornhinweg to wide receiver Paul Lamb and kicker Eby Dobson missed two long field goal attempts.

The offense performed well, as it has on several occasions this season. That came as no surprise to Head Coach Larry Donovan. "We were absolutely sure that we could move against them offensively. They shut off our running game early on so we altered by going to the air and they couldn't stop us."

For the third time this season Mornhinweg broke his own single game passing record by completing 31 of 48 pass attempts for 424 yards. The previous record of 378 yards was set against the University of Idaho earlier this season.

Mornhinweg received the Fighting Spirit Award for his Mirage Bowl performance while Army quarterback Nate Sassaman was the game MVP and Army linebacker Jim Gentile, was named the Outstanding Defensive Player.

The Montana defense was faced with a difficult task. It had been the weak spot for the Grizzlies throughout the season and faced an outstanding running attack in Army's wishbone formation.

The Cadets ran through Montana's defense gaining 633 yards on 82 carries. "We only had one day to prepare for their wishbone formations," said Donovan, "and that is just not enough time."

The Grizzlies closed the 1984 season with a 2-8-1 record, but Donovan gave credit to the team. "They were a credit to Montana and to the University. They handled themselves well and played their hearts out, just as they have all season."

UM spiked in Mountain West tourney

By Doug Whittaker
Kaimin Sports Editor

The University of Montana volleyball squad dropped a pair of matches this past weekend at the Mountain West Conference championship tournament, finishing its season in fourth position.

Assessing the team's performance against tournament winner Portland State and third place finisher Montana State, Coach Dick Scott said his team "played hard—but like a fourth place team."

Montana played fairly well against Portland, according to Scott, but the conference powerhouse was able to dig almost every UM spike, and put its own strong attack on line. PSU won the match in three straight games, although Scott added that it was a long match, and UM was particularly tough in the third game.

Against Montana State on the next night, the Lady Griz were less impressive, dropping three straight, and never seriously challenging. It was the fifth match between the cross-state rivals this season, and MSU won three.

On the year, senior setter Mary Pederson was awarded conference honorable mention, while senior outside hitter Mary Beth Dungan received first team all-conference honors.

Those two, along with senior Carol Ziemba, leave the team, while the rest prepare for next year by participating on a United States Volleyball Association club team.

The club, while coached by Scott, and having most of the Montana players on it, is not sponsored by the University. Still, Scott sees it as a vital part of the UM program. He said that virtually every university team on this level is associated with a USVBA club.

Scott is excited about next year, as his younger players, particularly Allison Yarnell and Cindy Pitzinger, played well in the latter part of this season.

In Brief

Ice hockey

The Montana Tech Buzzards scored with about three minutes gone in sudden-death overtime Saturday night to defeat the University of Montana Flying Mules ice hockey club. The final score of the game played at the Butte Civic Center was 6-5.

Scoring one goal each for the Mules were Andrew Hayes, Pat Menahan, Sandy MacLeod, Gary Jahrig and Lee Johnson. The goaltending was split by Graham Barnes and Skip Madsen, both of whom made several excellent saves.

The Mules record now stands at 4 wins, 3 losses and 1 tie since the current season began in September.

The Gallatin Valley Red Dogs, from Big Sky, will be the Mules next opponent. The game is scheduled for Saturday, Dec. 1 at the Butte Civic Center.

Cross country

Junior Ken Velasquez of the University of Montana Cross Country squad placed 43rd in the NCAA Division I National Championships held in State College, Pa. yesterday.

Ed Isetone of Brigham Young University won the race with a time of 29:28.8.

Velasquez finished slightly over a minute behind Isetone with a time of 30:41.1.

ASUM student handbooks to be available next quarter

By Robert Marshall
Kaimin Reporter

ASUM is assembling its 1984-85 student handbook and hopes to have it available for students by the start of next quarter's registration.

According to Greg Gullickson, ASUM business manager, other school's associated student groups have pamphlets, but not handbooks, describing their services and organizations.

The handbook will contain a list of all groups—about 50—to which ASUM gives money. A list of the 30 to 40 non-funded groups that ASUM recognizes will also be included.

"We don't fund political or religious groups, but we still recognize them if they register with us," Gullickson said.

Along with the list of ASUM-recognized groups, Gullickson said, the handbook will include all student committees and university committees on which students can sit; ASUM's bylaws, constitution, fiscal policies and the newly revised election committee policies; a description of the University Center and UC services; the ASUM student loan program; and a description of ASUM offices.

"We can't have the handbooks out at the beginning of the fall quarter because we have to gather all the information," Gullickson said. "Last year we gathered all the information and put it in a file; this year we plan to put it in a computer file so that if it needs to be revised we can call it up easily."

Last year ASUM had the University of Montana print shop print 1,000 copies, according to Gullickson, but this year ASUM will order more copies.

Gullickson said he hoped ASUM could get to work on the handbook over Christmas vacation so the handbooks will be available at registration in January. According to Gullickson, some members of ASUM's staff stay at the UM during the break to keep ASUM at work.

Money for the handbook will come out of the ASUM printing account, Gullickson said.

Reagan to approve more student aid

(CPS)—Students locked out of 1984 federal financial aid programs could find some opened doors next year if President Ronald Reagan signs the fiscal 1985 education funding bill now on his desk.

Experts predict Reagan will sign the bill, which contains the federal education budget for the Oct. 1, 1984 to Sept. 30, 1985 fiscal year, and was passed Oct. 11 by both houses of Congress.

Student financial aid funds comprise nearly $8 billion of the total $17.9 billion education package, with $3.6 billion earmarked for Pell grants and $3 billion for Guaranteed Student Loans (GSL).

"We think the increases will loosen up financial aid substantially," Lou Dietrich, Department of Education spokeswoman reported. "The budget exceeds our request for 1985 and provides a great deal of aid."

Nevertheless, some aid directors around the country fear the increases may be too little, too late to help current students, and that they're not big enough to help students new to the air programs.

Still, Congress' aid budget is $1.7 billion more than last year's, and nearly $1.5 billion more than the president wanted in the 1985 budget.

In his budget request, delivered to Congress last February, Reagan wanted to fund the Pell program at its 1984 level, eliminate Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants (SEOG) and State Student Incentive Grants, drastically cut National Direct Student Loans (NDSL) and increase Work/Study and GSL allocations.

In addition, the Office of Management and Budget earlier this year proposed letting inflation eat away more aid programs by keeping budgets the same through the next four years.

Congress instead has increased the total education budget by 14 percent and sent it to the White House for Reagan's signature.

"There are increases in just about every program for 1985," Dietrich noted. "It certainly provides students with more aid options."

The SEOG program would get $40 million more, NDSLs' $35 million more and College Work/Study $37.5 million more than 1984 levels if Reagan signs the bill into law.

College financial aid directors around the country, battered by four years of aid cuts, seem relieved but still not completely satisfied.

"We've always had a problem here with lack of funds," Alan Shipley of Northern Arizona University explained. "Any increase will make it easier for students to apply for and receive the dollars they need."

"The increases are good," Jeff Baker of San Francisco State said. "But I'd like to see more of them and more changes."

"We have a critical problem here," Montana State Financial Aid Director Jim Craig said, hoping the increases won't come too late. "Lots of students apply and we have no funds for them."

"The budget for financial aid has not grown with the cost of living," he added.

But while education experts are happy about the increases, they note the funding is not as substantial as it looks.

Lucille Jesse dead at 90

Memorial services for Lucille Jesse, one-time chairman of the women's physical education department at the University of Montana, will be held today at 1:30 p.m. in the Episcopal Church of the Holy Spirit in Missoula.

Mrs. Jesse, 90, was an enthusiastic supporter of Grizzly basketball for more than 60 years.

She lived in Missoula until 1981, when she moved to Spokane's Alderwood Manor Nursing Home, the place of her death.

Her home on campus, at 610 University Ave., was demolished earlier this year. After her husband's death, the home became the property of UM, but remained Mrs. Jesse's home as long as she wanted to live there.

Mrs. Jesse met her future husband, Richard H. Jesse, the first dean of men at UM, shortly after moving to Missoula in 1918. They married in 1921.

Mrs. Jesse is survived by a son, William Jesse, Los Olivos, Calif.; a daughter, Margaret Fanning, Spokane, Wash.; 11 grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Society to award fellowships

Alpha Lambda Delta, a freshman honor society at the University of Montana, will award several $3,000 fellowships for graduate study.

Any member of Alpha Lambda Delta who will graduate with a cumulative grade point average of 3.5 or better is eligible. Graduating seniors may apply if they have achieved this average at the end of the first quarter of this year.

Applicants will be judged on scholastic record, recommendations, the soundness of their stated project and purpose, and need. Applications and information may be obtained from Frances Hill, UM professor of psychology, at Pharmacy-Psychology 225.

The application form must be received by Jan. 15, 1985 at the National Headquarters of Alpha Lambda Delta, P.O. Box 88, Muncie, IN, 47305.

Proper

"The closer you are to Nicaragua, the more pro-American you tend to be," Proper said.

He said Nicaragua is the only place where the United States has sponsored terrorism. He was referring to the recently discovered Nicaraguan rebel manual prepared by the CIA. Proper said that the U.S. role in that country is the only controversial aspect of U.S. foreign policy in Latin America.

He said that the United States is pushing for economie and political reforms in Latin America: for every dollar of military aid sent to those countries, $2 to $3 of economic aid is also sent.

Proper cited El Salvador as an example of the success of those reforms. He said it has gone from being run "like a private club" by a few wealthy families to a democratic country where the middle-class and working class have gained some power.

Louis Hayes, UM professor of political science, said Proper's remarks were typical of the "standard government line." Hayes said they were the "everything-is-wonderful stuff" that most government officials use in discussing any highly controversial issues.

Proper began the session by admitting that, while working in Washington, D.C., for the past two years, he learned that few people want to go on the record as saying anything.

"So if I seem a little bit evasive, it's because I am being evasive," he said.

About 18 people attended the question-and-answer session.

3 scholarships available

The University of Montana Financial Aids Office has announced that applications are now being accepted for three scholarships at the University of Montana.

The Ravalli County Extension Homemakers are offering a scholarship of $100 or more to be used during Winter Quarter, 1986. Applicants must be Ravalli County residents and have financial need. The deadline for applications is Aug. 15, 1985.

The Montana Cowbelles are offering a $900 scholarship for the 1985-86 academic year. Applicants must be from a Montana home and be marrying in home economics or an agricultural-allied field. Applicants must apply as sophomores, and the scholarship will be awarded in three installments during their junior year. The deadline for applications is Feb. 1, 1985.

Professional Secretaries International are offering a $200 scholarship to be used by students for post-secondary secretarial education. The deadline for applications is Nov. 30.

Contact the UM Financial Aids Office, Lodge 222, at 243-5373 for more information on these scholarships.
