Pre-registration to return

By Brett French

Kaimin Reporter

University of Montana students who thought pre-registration would start Winter Quarter will be left out in the cold, according to Laura Hudson, UM assistant registrar.

However, students will have the opportunity to pre-register for Spring Quarter starting Jan. 30, she said.

Spring Quarter pre-registration will allow students to know which classes they are registered for by March 4. However, Winter Quarter registration will be the same as in the past—"arena" style, Hudson said.

Registration is now accomplished by filing into the Harry Adams Field House each quarter and signing up for classes. Students are allowed to register in alphabetized groups, usually on a first-come, first-served basis.

Students and departments are the main beneficiaries of the new system, Hudson said.

"Departments have the opportunity to see the demand for classes and also have enough time to respond to it," she said. Students will benefit from pre-registration by knowing which classes they are scheduled into before the new quarter begins.

"The arena process was crises-oriented for both departments and students," Hudson said.

Another advantage is that students will be able to pay in advance each quarter. However, pre-payment will not start until next Fall Quarter, Hudson said. Students will instead pay for spring classes on March 25 and 26 when they normally would have registered.

Hudson described the new pre-registration process as follows:

•The pre-registration form will be published in January with the Spring Quarter class schedule. Students will have

Tax-delinquent property available in Missoula

By Robert Marshall

Kaimin Reporter

Missoula residents can buy tax deeds to properties whose owners are delinquent taxpayers.

The properties are being sold by the Missoula County Treasurer's Office because the owners have not paid property taxes or Special Improvement District (SID) tax bills during the past four years.

SIDs are improvements such as new sewers or streets that are financed by tax-exempt city bonds. Special taxes are assessed on a person's tax bill for several years to repay the city for the cost of the improvements.

Chuck Sterns, fiscal analyst for the Missoula City Finance Office, said Monday that between 200 and 250 such properties are available in the city.

Prospective buyers can find out from Sterns which properties have delinquent tax bills.

The city is publicizing the availability of these properties because it would rather have Missoula residents buy the properties than take possession itself, according to Missoula Mayor John Toole.

Toole said he also hopes residents will buy these properties so the city will not have to levy taxes to support the SID delinquencies. The city has levied about $1 million to pay these fees during the past four years.

The delinquent city lots are in the Prospect Phase One, west of Reserve Street and about three-quarters of a mile north of Interstate 90; Mountain Shadows, roughly south of 39th Street, east of Cohosset Drive and west of Simons Drive; and Hillview Heights Nos. 6 and 7, roughly east of Gharrett Avenue, north of Colonial Lane and south of Skyview Drive.

Sterns said the property list also includes how much is owed in back taxes. The bill can be as small as several hundred dollars for a single-family home or more than $120,000 for a tract of land scheduled for multi-dwelling units.

People who wish to claim a tax deed on a particular property must pay outstanding taxes owed from 1981 to 1983, plus a 2-percent penalty and 10-percent interest rate calculated on the outstanding taxes.

"The person is then required by law to notify, by certified letter, the owner of the property, the occupants of the property and anyone who has an interest in the property, of the prospective buyer's intent to purchase the deed," Sterns said.

If the owner wants to retain the property, the delinquent taxes must be paid within 60 days, Sterns said.

He said that if the owner pays the tax bill, the prospective buyer's money is refunded, along with 8-percent interest.

If the occupant or anyone with an interest on the property doesn't pay the delinquencies or challenge the buyer's right to the deed, the buyer must pay the taxes that are due for 1984, Sterns said. Those taxes are due Dec. 1.

Sterns said Missoula County will be forced to foreclose on the properties in June if owners do not pay the delinquent taxes or a prospective owner does not come forward.

Studies, insurance discussed at forum

By Robert Marshall

Kaimin Reporter

The University of Montana faculty has revised the general curriculum requirements to reflect a broader education, UM President Neil Bucklew said yesterday at a Phoenix forum in the University Center.

Phoenix is a group composed of students over 25 or those who have been out of school for several years.

Bucklew has met regularly with Phoenix in the question-and-answer forum.

Lynne Fitch, Phoenix adviser, said Bucklew agreed to the meetings because they were a good way for students to ask questions and for him to ask students questions in return.

Bucklew said he thought the change in curriculum is the best thing to occur at UM since he arrived in 1981.

"I'm glad that we're returning to tough, conservative standards (in education)," Bucklew said.

He said that during the 1970s, education in the United States went through a "watering-down" process. The new trend, according to Bucklew, is for universities to toughen requirements.

"The university is involved in change," Bucklew said. "The nature of the student body is changing. I take special pleasure in that since we're learning how to extend education to a larger spectrum of students."

He said the changes are noticeable in the curriculum, scholarship and services offered on campus.

Bucklew also addressed the lack of an insurance plan at UM for families of students.

So few students purchased family-insurance coverage previously offered by the university that it became too expensive to maintain, Bucklew said, so it was discontinued.

Susan Gobbs, a law student, said a Phoenix study shows that student interest in family coverage has increased tremendously since the previous policy was discontinued two years ago.

University of Montana student Mike Cimino, who worked at Montana State University in the student-housing office, said students at MSU got tired of complaints about the cost of family insurance, so they compared the cost of coverage by different companies.

"(MSU is) trying to get mandatory insurance where the undergraduate students would pay to help the non-traditional students. If UM and MSU could get together on one policy they might be able to get cheaper rates," Cimino said.

Unconstructive destruction

It was good to hear that the Students for Nonviolence were going to stage a protest against CIA representatives recruiting on campus. The CIA hasn't exactly been setting a great example for American diplomacy in Central America lately and it should receive protest. Besides, since college campuses are all supposedly becoming bastions for the Young Americans for Freedom, it is good to see there are still students on this campus who haven't jumped on the conservative bandwagon.

But that was before the graffiti and the red paint. Instead of a meaningful, educational protest, the Students for Nonviolence resorted to needless defacement of public property. Apparently, the Students for Nonviolence were attempting to draw attention to their cause and to educate people about the CIA-backed atrocities in Central America. But I doubt if insightful words of wisdom such as "CIA out" splattered across campus walls and sidewalks educated many students about the situation in Central America. I also doubt if many students were intrigued enough by the art work to join the Students for Nonviolence in their protest on the Oval.

Editorial

About 40 protestors did participate in the rally. Joy DeStefano, a spokeswoman for the group, wondered why there weren't more. Probably, Joy, because many students who agree with the Students for Nonviolence stayed away from the protest so as not to associate themselves with anyone childish enough to scribble on sidewalks and walls.

It's not that all civil disobedience, or even vandalism, is bad. Sometimes constructive destruction, a la Edward Abbey, is the only recourse guardians of the environment have to combat wanton development. A few properly placed railroad spikes in a stand of trees about to be logged into oblivion, or a cup of sugar deposited into the gas tanks of some heavy equipment about to be used to put a road into a wilderness area, are useful tools for stopping, or at least slowing down, those who would ruin our only earth for their own short-term profit.

But writing graffiti on sidewalks, come on. Scribbling on walls is the equivalent of name calling. And all name calling does is draw adverse reactions and bring smiles to the faces of adversaries who realize they are not dealing with a very formidable opponent.

What the Students for Nonviolence could have done was hold a forum in the University Center Mall in order to better inform fellow students about Central America. Perhaps a prominent professor or two could have been invited in order to give such a forum more luster and attract more people.

Students keep hearing about Central America, but probably not all that many have informed opinions on what is actually going on down there. If the Students for Nonviolence would have presented their side of the story in an intelligent manner, more people would have listened. Then, the protest on the Oval might have had more meaning and, probably, would have drawn more of a crowd.

In its ongoing battle with the College Republicans, the Students for Nonviolence have usually managed to stay a step or two ahead. That isn't hard. The type of antics the College Republicans use—name calling, anonymous fliers and other 'courageous' attacks against "mushy-headed liberalism"—make them an easy opponent. But with the latest effort from the Students for Nonviolence, it seems the two groups aren't that much different tactically. But not even the College Republicans have stooped to unconstructive destruction.

Carrying On

Who cares?

Although no one knows for sure, at least a third and possibly half of University of Montana students do double duty as parents. Most also work.

How do they do it? They somehow manage to juggle a schedule filled with classes, study, reading, writing papers, work, fixing dinner, washing dishes, laundry, cleaning house, meetings, exercise, recreation, managing finances and caring for their children.

"Well," said one student mother of three, "you have to be organized." That is an understatement. Later, when asked if she ever had any time to herself she said, "What's a break?"

Good day care at reasonable rates makes life easier for student parents. ASUM Day Care was set up to provide this service. There is a day-care center in McGill Hall for older children and a network of ASUM day care homes in the community for younger children.

But, day care for the children of UM students is in trouble. Last year, ASUM Day Care had a $16,000 deficit. Most of the deficit was caused by budget miscalculations for the day-care homes program.

Those in charge of trimming the federal deficit could take a lesson from the way ASUM administration, the Day Care Committee and student parents have responded to the deficit. Every conceivable step to reduce the deficit has been taken. There have been program cuts, staff cuts and increases in fees and in ASUM allocations. According to ASUM Accountant Brenda Perry, the deficit should be reduced by $5,000 this year.

But a problem remains. There is a long waiting list for the day-care center and only a handful of day-care homes for students with younger children. Services were cut, but a need remains.

Maybe for those of us without children, it's hard to imagine what it is like to try to balance school with the responsibility of parenthood. For single parents, especially, no day care means no schooling. Adequate day care is a necessity.

One area where help could come from is the UM administration. About five years ago, ASUM Day Care started paying rent for the use of university facilities. This year they will pay about $7,600 for renting space in McGill Hall. But wait a second, students with children at MSU have day care space provided rent free; why not at UM?

The administration claims its hands are tied by state law. This law (M.C.A. 20-25-302) forces the administration to charge rent to ASUM Day Care for use of McGill Hall because "in the regents' judgment" it is not "consistent with the full use thereof for academic purposes." The day-care facilities in Bozeman, located in married student housing, do not have to meet this test. Nor would ASUM Day Care if it was located somewhere else. Stringent state regulations have to be met for day-care facilities. There is no suitable space on campus other than McGill Hall.

The administration seems to be reluctant to take the academic usefulness of day care for child development classes into account. But, however weak, they do have a case.

So what now? Back to the bake-sale circuit?

There is another possibility. The UM administration conjures up an image of the law as if it was carved, immutable, on granite tablets. But laws can be changed. The Montana Legislature convenes in January. We've elected some excellent legislators from Missoula and the university area.

A very strong case can be made for supporting day care on campus, given the increasing numbers of returning students, even if that support merely consists of allowing reduced rent for campus day-care facilities. If the administration and the rest of the university community cares enough to push for a change in the law then ASUM Day Care could get out of trouble and on with its job.

It's our problem

EDITOR: I am writing this letter in response to Steve Smith's recent column in the Kaimin. From what you said in your column, Steve, you think it is better to let people starve than to feel a twinge of guilt. It's their problem; let them solve it.

Drought and overpopulation are not the only reasons why people starve.

Did you know that the countries most plagued by hunger grow specialty food for the wealthy countries because they need the income, consequently letting their own people go hungry? Food accounts for one-third of the exports of Asia, Africa and Latin America, exports destined for North America, Europe and Japan. Ethiopia? They grow coffee to export to the United States.

The United States and the Soviet Union know what's best for these countries; therefore, we will stick our fingers into their business and make it all better. The result? We upset the balance of life these people have lived with for centuries. We take farmers out of the field and give them guns, resulting in less food and more mouths to feed.

There is more than enough food to feed the world. Having helped on farms you must know about programs to pay farmers not to plant because we don't know what to do with our surplus. Yet we hesitate to send that surplus where it's needed and we demand they export what we want.

I've just begun to realize that their hunger problem is not their problem, but our problem. We helped cause it, so we had better be willing to try to correct it.

The first step is for us not to slam the door in their faces but to be courageous enough to face the horror that we, as U.S. citizens, have let occur through our foreign policies.

So now, what can we do? I think the most important step is to educate ourselves. We need to learn the real reasons for hunger in the world and fight to correct the wrongs you and I have let occur.

Health-food junkie

EDITOR: I hope everyone takes that "In Defense of 'Junk Food'" article in the November issue of Newsweek On Campus with a grain of salt.

I think the author wrote it mostly tongue in cheek, maybe on the theory that it is easier to get published if you are a little outrageous.

I think the author means that eating junk food some of the time won't kill you. I agree. I eat some junk food myself.

But if you are changing your diet to 80- or 90-percent health food don't let this article cause you to backslide. I know many people who have reaped all the following benefits from changing their diet:

—They lose weight;
—Their faces do not break out as often;

—They feel better, think better, study better.

Of course, you can't expect results overnight. In fact, for the first month after changing your diet you might feel terrible.

But keep on. When I was in college I ate myself up to 150 pounds. I switched to health food—most of the time—and got down to my present 126, which I've been holding ever since.

Hara-kiri or sepuku?

EDITOR: This letter is in response to all the people who did not get to go to J-land.

What we will do is get together all the Japanese students and staff on the University of Montana campus and meet you at some pre-ordained place. We will speak only Japanese to you, make you take your shoes off at the door and cook you some typical Japanese food. We will also teach you how to eat real rice (not Uncle Ben's or Minute Rice) without butter, sugar or cinnamon.

By the time the evening is over you will all be short, have dark hair and your eyes will no longer be blue and/or round. For the grand finale we will teach you how to properly commit hara-kiri (for men) and sepuku (for women).

All in all, we will have one real good time.

Food for thought

EDITOR: Stephen Smith's article on the Oxfam skip-a-meal program was thought-provoking.

Although all of us would like to feel we can do something about the Ethiopian famine, no organization can be quite the miracle worker we'd like. Many of the groups are in fact scams, whose own purposes grow fat long before the people they deign to help, although I believe Oxfam is not among these.

I would like to clear up two of Mr. Smith's misconceptions, however. Yes, agricultural chemicals do provide a certain surplus of grain—for a time. Eventually herbicides, pesticides and the rest of the gamut begin to account for smaller and smaller yields, as well as watershed contamination and other hazards, as the soil becomes too damaged to bear.

Ideally, crop rotation decreases the need for such chemicals, but farmers are hard pressed to grow cash crops only, to use all their arable land to provide this "surplus," so that they can break even.

Second, famine and such disasters have indeed occurred before, and if the situation were really that simple we might be right to shrug our shoulders and turn away. One of the factors at work in much of Africa, though, is poor management.

The current drought would not have had nearly the effect it has if successive deforestation and desertification had not virtually eliminated moisture-holding vegetation. On the Ganges plain, inhabitants now have the opposite problem: as the last trees of Nepal are being cut for fuel, unchecked runoff from the Himalayas is flooding the area. Both tragedies could have been in part prevented.

Since human error has wrought this problem, human intervention is called for to right it.

No sensitivity

EDITOR: Regarding Stephen Smith's intellectual rationalization of people starving in Ethiopia (Kaimin, Nov. 16).

While the poor and defenseless may be with us forever, their suffering is something the rest of us have the ability to ease if we so choose.

Will we be as fortunate to see an improvement in your apparent lack of sensitivity toward the suffering of others?

Griz slowed by Stout, narrowly avoid defeat

By Doug Whittaker

Kaimin Sports Editor

Wisconsin-Stout Coach Dwain Mintz could not have planned it better. With 1:20 left in the game, his team was down 53-52 but had the ball. His team had been patient the entire game, passing the ball around the perimeter, frustrating the more talented University of Montana that wanted to see the game open up. One good shot was all it would take for the NAIA Division III school to score a big upset.

But it was not to be. With 10 seconds left, the crowd on its feet and roaring for the Grizzlies to hold on, Stout guard Glen Fischer was called for pushing off UM defender Leroy Washington. An offensive foul. Away from the ball. The threat was over.

Washington sank both free throws, and although Stout State tossed in a 20-footer with six seconds left, the Griz played smart and picked up a foul in the last two seconds to ice it, 56-54.

Despite the exciting finish, this was not a game of spectacular efforts and raw skill, but a game of tactics. Stout plainly had less firepower than Montana and had to avoid a run-and-gun pace. Neither the Grizzlies nor UM fans were appreciative.

When the game's snail's pace became obvious about midway through the first half, Dahlberg Arena echoed with the chant of "boring, boring, boring." And with a little more than two minutes left in the half, leading scorer Larry Krystkowiak vented his frustration with a little pushing and shoving after he was fouled driving to the basket.

Krystkowiak, however, did not let that detract from his game, as he ended the night with 22 points. The junior power forward, last year's Big Sky Conference Most Valuable Player, was clearly the best player on the floor and attracted the attention of a sagging Stout defense for much of the night. The result? Krystkowiak scored eight of his points, on eight tries, at the free throw line.

Montana shot an excellent 86 percent in the first half, but that only added up to 29 points because of Stout's slowdown tactics. Three patented Krystkowiak turnaround jumpers from the key and a pair of center Larry McBride slams paced the Grizzlies up front, while guards Mike Wnek and Todd Powell shot well from the outside. The Wisconsin school only stayed in it by popping for 22, mostly on long-range shots from the corners.

In the second half, UM's offense came up flat and Stout doggedly caught up to tie the game at 44 with 8:21 left, though it could never take the lead. Krystkowiak's play was again the difference, as he hit a lay-up and a turnaround and tipped one in during the home stretch that led to the close finish.

McBride was the team's leading rebounder with six, and Leroy Washington had the most assists, with seven. Stout's Kurt Stellplug led his team with 17 points.

PSC to hold hearings on phone rate increase

By Michael Kustudia
Kaimin Reporter

The Montana Public Service Commission will hold a hearing on Mountain Bell's proposed $28 million rate increase Thursday at 7 p.m. at the Missoula City Council chambers.

The hearing, according to Joan Mandeville, PSC rate analyst, will be concerned with Mountain Bell's rate of return, (the amount of money returned on its investments), and also with the types of services that may be increased.

The PSC will hold other hearings around the state, and a larger, general hearing will be held in Helena on Dec. 4.

Tom McGree, Missoula area operations manager for Mountain Bell, said the PSC currently allows Mountain Bell an 11.23 percent rate of return on its investments, and if the new hike is approved, it will be raised to 13.32 percent.

McGree said the rate of return is used to pay interest on loans, dividends, and to fund the company's construction budget.

Last year's construction budget came to $58 million, he said.

If the $28 million, or 48 percent, hike is granted in full, McGree said the phone rates would increase as follows:

- Coin phones from 10 cents to 25 cents;
- Single party rates from $8.36 to $12.38 per month;
- Two party rates from $6.44 to $9.54 per month;
- Business lines from $30.36 to $44.96 per month.

Mountain Bell's proposed rate hike has already met opposition from several groups.

Ann Smith, staff member of Montana People's Action, a citizen's group, said that the rate increase would place an unfair burden on local service users because the company has not asked for increases in long-distance rates.

She said that since the breakup of AT&T, phone companies across the nation have filed for $9 billion in rate increases for local service.

Smith said Mountain Bell, which currently receives 53 percent of its revenue from local service is following the nationwide trend.

Smith said if the proposed increase is approved that figure would rise to 62 percent.

Smith also said that Mountain Bell is trying to gain new customers with new advanced technology communication systems—systems that are not needed for local service.

Local service customers "basically need a pole and wire" for telephone service, said Smith.

"It's just one more large company making the majority of small people pay for innovations," said Bobbie Nelson, a Montana People's Action member.

Reagan win may mean more cuts in college funding

CPS — As this year's election results sink in, most education observers say they expect President Reagan's landslide win to cause deeper cuts in federal funding of colleges and students during the next four years.

And at least one source, who helped to shape the education policies of the first Reagan term, says they're correct.

About the only change will be that President Reagan probably won't propose abolishing the U.S. Department of Education again, said Ron Docksai, author of the education section of the conservative Heritage Foundation's landmark "Mandate for Leadership" report, which recommends that the control of education be shifted from Washington to state and local governments.

In his first term, President Reagan tried to implement virtually all the education policies Docksai outlined.

But Docksai has competition from others hoping to help mold education policies in the second term.

"We want to assist," said Garvin Hudgins, communications director of the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges.

But when asked if he expects the administration will try to cut student aid anyway, Hudgins said, "It certainly seems likely at this point."

A number of educators and student leaders around the country also want to befriend the winners, though few believe the gesture will stop the administration from proposing more cuts.

"In the future," said Greg Moore, president of the U.S. Student Association, a traditional power in the youth wing of the Democratic Party, "USSA will attempt to have more contact with the White House."

"Since Reagan captured the youth vote nationwide, it could mean he will have more concern for the youth," said Jim Kessler, a political activist at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst.

But Mike DeSanto, national director of the nationwide Coalition of Independent College and University Students, predicted, "they're going to come back for us hard, and they're going to try to cut."

"All federal programs will be under close scrutiny," said Charles Saunders, head of government relations for the American Council on Education. "I'm optimistic (cuts can be avoided) because the Republicans in Congress are supporting higher ed."

"I think the next four years will be like the last four years," added Dennis Martin of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators. "There will be very little growth (in the programs), but we hope to have support from Congress."

"Congress must hold the line on financial aid," said Leslie Woolf, who Reagan fired as head of the Women's Education Equity Project in his first term, "and I don't think Congress will blow it."

Since 1982, Congress repeatedly has rebuffed presidential requests for further drastic cuts in aid programs, and the recent elections did not alter Congress's makeup substantially.

But some observers worry Reagan's victory was big enough to force cuts in student aid anyway.

"There has been a loss of grants, 25 percent since 1980, and that's with Congress rejecting most of Reagan's proposals," said Kathy Ozer, USSA's lobbyist.

Others also fear Congress can't prevent further weakening of laws to protect women from campus discrimination, more cuts in funding of black colleges and libraries, or political interference in federally-funded research.

Pre-registration

two weeks to choose courses and meet with their advisers.

•Pre-registration materials will then be returned to the registrar's office, where all requests will be entered into a computer. Once completed, the listings will be sent to department heads, who will then be able to cancel or add sections.

•Departments will return the revised listings to the registrar's office, where a computer will determine which courses a student gains entrance to according to a priority basis. This is essentially the same as the alphabetical priority now used, along with the priority given to new, handicapped and night students.

UM had pre-registration in the 1960s, according to Hudson, but the sectioning process was done by hand instead of by computer. Hudson said the reason UM waited so long before initiating new pre-registration was that other programs had priority.

"It was not high on the list," she said, adding that items such as computerizing the admissions process was deemed more critical.

In contrast, Montana State University has had a preregistration process since 1970, according to MSU Registrar Joe Frazier. Frazier also said he has talked to UM Registrar Phil Bain and exchanged ideas about pre-registration.

Vote to approve legislative intern slated for CB meeting

By Dave Fisher

Kaimin Reporter

Central Board will vote on ASUM President Phoebe Patterson's appointment of Monte Koch to a legislative lobbyist post when it meets today at 7 p.m. in the University Center Montana Rooms.

If CB approves Koch's appointment, he will help guide student interests through the Legislature when it convenes in Helena in January.

ASUM will pay two lobbyists $3,000 to $4,000 each, depending on the length of the session.

CB approved Patterson's appointment of Mark Blewett, 28, a graduate student in business administration, to the other post on Oct. 24 — but not without a fight.

CB members questioned Blewett's lack of experience with the Legislature and ASUM for more than 45 minutes at the meeting, before voting 13-3 to approve his appointment. Five CB members abstained.

Blewett told the board he felt his experience in computer sales would help him sell student proposals to the Legislature, despite his lack of experience with the system.

Some CB members said after the meeting they felt Patterson should have appointed someone with more ASUM experience to the job. Two CB members, Off-campus Reps. Bill Mercer and Glen Campbell, who abstained on Blewett's ratification vote, had also applied for the position.

Patterson said she expects no problems with Koch's ratification vote, since he has experience with both ASUM and the Legislature.

Koch is a former chairman of the ASUM Legislative Committee, and a former legislative intern for UM President Neil Bucklew's office.

CB Reps. Cindy Crilly, Tracy Reich and Dan Henderson, who all voted against Blewett's appointment, could not be reached yesterday afternoon for comment.

In other action, CB will hear Jeff Weldon, chairman of the ASUM Legislative Committee, explain the committee's proposed lobbying strategy for the upcoming legislative session.
