Parking fee limit removed

By Jeff McDowell

Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA—A bill to remove the limit on parking fees at Montana University System campuses sailed through the Senate State Administration Committee Wednesday morning.

The committee unanimously endorsed House Bill 98, sponsored by Rep. Cal Winslow, R-Billings, which would remove the present $10-per-quarter limit on parking fees at the six state campuses.

The bill originally would have simply removed the limit on the parking fees. However, the bill was later amended to allow the president of each unit to set the fees for the respective campuses subject to approval by the Board of Regents after consulting with the respective student governments.

Winslow told the committee that removing the limit would give each unit the flexibility to provide adequate parking.

The bill has received strong support from the University of Montana and Eastern Montana College, which both face physical limits in expanding their present parking facilities.

CB approves contingency fund guidelines at meeting last night

By Kevin Twidwell

Kaimin Reporter

Central Board established guidelines for the newly created CB Contingency Fund at its final meeting of the quarter last night.

The board had unsuccessfully tried to establish how the fund was to be used at its meeting last week because board members objected to the wording of the proposed guidelines.

The fund was established by CB during the budgeting session last month as an emergency fund to cover the costs if all ASUM state classified employees quit their jobs at the same time. State classified employees are employees paid with state funds such as the ASUM secretary and accountant.

ASUM Business Manager Greg Gullickson said ASUM would be required to pay almost $14,000 in unclaimed sick pay and other employee benefits at one time if the six present ASUM classified employees suddenly quit their jobs.

Gullickson said the fund was established to act as a "safety net against such an emergency."

The guidelines require the ASUM accountant to take the number of classified employees and obtain a per-employee average that would be owed by ASUM if all such employees quit at the same time. The fund cannot drop below the funds necessary to cover the departure costs of three classified employees at one time.

Gullickson said that under the guidelines "between $10,000 and $12,000 of the fund will be held for such a case. He added that the "probability of losing all the employees at one time is very low" and said the fund probably won't be used.

The guidelines also state that the remainder of the fund will be available to groups that have emergencies that aren't covered by the ASUM Special Allocations Fund. This fund is used to allocate money to campus groups for unforeseen events not included in their budgets, such as attending conferences.

Gullickson said the remaining money in the contingency fund could be used to cover deficits incurred by campus organizations or other emergencies.

The Budget and Finance Committee will hear all contingency fund allocation requests but CB has final approval of any allocation.

Chapman supports bill allowing sale of beer, wine at UM Golf Course

By Vicki Minnick

Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Ray Chapman, University Center director, will testify at a Senate hearing Friday in favor of a bill that would allow the sale of beer and wine at the UM Golf Course.

House Bill 85, introduced by Rep. Earl Lory, R-Missoula, would broaden the present regulation governing beer and wine licenses to include a "publicly-owned golf course owned by the state, a unit of the university system, or a local government." Acceptance of the bill will allow the UM golf course, located at the intersection of South and Arthur Avenues, to obtain a seasonal beer and wine license for the sale of beer and wine during clubhouse hours.

Chapman said he expected little opposition to the bill in the Legislature.

The university is in the midst of remodeling the UM golf course clubhouse, Chapman said, adding that completion of the project will create a larger facility capable of handling the types of social functions for which the license is geared.

The UM Board of Regents cleared the way for the legislative request last February when it approved a policy change excluding the golf course from its standard code limiting the official serving or sale of alcohol on Montana University System property to special functions at which food must also be served.

Chapman said the adoption of the new bill would not alter the present rules pertaining to the serving of beer and wine on the UM campus.

Currently, alcohol can only be served at approved events and then only by a private catering service that is issued a yearly contract by the university. The events include not only student functions but also any private party contracted with the UC center. Despite the lifting of its restrictions for the golf course clubhouse, the board still refuses to consider the establishment of a bar on campus. Chapman said he was in agreement with the board on this issue.

"Most of the traffic at the University of Montana occurs during class hours," he said. "After 4 p.m., for all practical purposes, the campus is quiet."

Chapman also said that the details involved in a project like a bar on campus have more disadvantages than advantages.

"The private sector that shares the ability to entertain and serve large social gatherings would then become direct competition," he said.

Chapman said UM and the private sector have a good relationship and that the university does not take bookings for events that the Missoula area businesses could handle. University of Montana policy is to decline events of less than 400 people, he said.

Scream bloody hell

For five years the people of Milltown have been hauling water to their houses to drink because the groundwater in the area contains arsenic and heavy metals.

For years Milltown has been on the Environmental Protection Agency's list to receive "Superfund" money, a program to clean up some of this country's worst hazardous waste sites.

Milltown finally has the EPA money and county health officials are saying that by mid-March new wells should be started, with the possibility that Milltown residents will have a fresh water supply by summer.

Editorial

Still, the five-year delay highlights a major flaw in American government. That flaw is the refusal to act quickly on matters concerning the environment and at the root of the problem is an unwillingness on the part of government to take action against business and industry.

President Reagan's attitude is that all economic growth is good. That's a problem where the environment is concerned, since many businesses have made their fortunes while unloading millions of tons of toxic wastes into landfills, rivers and oceans.

The message he's sending is that his administration, as well as an apparent majority of the American people, is willing to suffer nothing in the present and is fully prepared to inflict the horrors of a disastrously polluted world on future generations.

Something has to change, even if it means putting the clamps on industry for a while.

Of course, occasionally a case gets so bad that the government just has to take action and require an industry to foot the bill for a clean-up. But more often the polluter makes out fine and the people of the polluted community are left to deal with the problem. A case in point was the catastrophe at Love Canal, New York, where Hooker Chemical Co. leaked a Pandora's Box of toxic chemicals for 40 years and then left town before the full measure of the damage done to the town's people was known.

The residents of Love Canal had developed a high incidence of cancer, and suffered an inordinate number of stillbirths. Hooker Chemical did not pay for the damage.

The government should have tanned the hide of Hooker Chemical but it didn't. Sometimes the government seems to jump right in bed with the polluters. In Midland, Mich., Dow Chemical Corp. manufactures herbicides. The EPA did a study in Midland, determined that Dow had dumped dioxin (a herbicide by-product) into the Saginaw and Tittabawassee rivers, and planned to submit the report to the state. Before making the study public, however, John Hernandez, interim chief of the EPA, gave the report to Dow Chemical to edit.

Of course Dow did what any polluter would do. The company removed all reference to the fact that it had dumped dioxin. With the edited report in hand, Hernandez and the EPA gave final approval to the study. Hernandez was forced to step down at the urging of Congress.

This sort of government collusion with polluters is entirely unacceptable and unethical. The American people should not condone it but somehow we do. We do because we are concerned with the almighty dollar. So does the government.

What we need is a sacrifice on the part of government and industry. Government must act to ensure that industry takes the proper safeguards against pollution, even if the Gross National Product takes a dive.

The American public is the key to the sacrifice. We must elect people willing to make laws that will give us a planet to worry about. And we must scream bloody hell if they don't.

In Defense of Liberty — By Bradley S. Burt

A Choice or an Echo?

My heartiest congratulations go out to Bill Mercer for his election as ASUM president. Mercer certainly has all the qualifications to make his term in office a successful one. He is bright, articulate and energetic. But what criteria should be applied to Mercer's term of office this time next year to determine whether it was a success or a bust?

Mercer's personal popularity at the end of his term, be it high or low, would not be an accurate measure of his success. Nor could a Mercer term be labeled a success if he simply ended up as caretaker of the status quo and handed over to his successor a student government in a condition no better or worse than at the beginning of his term.

Real success will be gauged by Mercer's willingness to take on the political special interests that are bleeding ASUM coffers dry and his skill in redirecting debate from a question of how much money ASUM should give to some left-wing political action group to a question of whether left-wing political action groups have any right to receive student funds in the first place.

The campaign didn't shed much light on Mercer's agenda while in office. As in most ASUM presidential contests substantial issues were not addressed, but rather the debate between the two candidates dealt with vital issues such as which candidate was the most sympathetic to the problem of day care and who best represented vegetarian feminists for peace.

Neither Mercer nor Weldon can really be faulted because their campaigns talked of issues that would have bored even Walter "Charisma" Mondale. Such is the nature of ASUM contests. Style passing for substance.

Assuming Mercer desires to have a lasting impact on this university, he would be well-advised to do all in his power to appoint as the director of the Student Action Center(SAC) an individual who does not believe that the United States is on the same moral level as the Soviet Union or that free market capitalism is an oppressive economic system. At the very least, Mercer should appoint a director who will take SAC out of the realm of New Age politics and put it to work on such general interest issues as helping the Humane Society, recruiting students to be Big Brothers or Sisters, picking up litter or a host of other projects that would not offend the political sensibilities of those who are not as progressive as SAC would prefer. Such a Student Action Center would do wonders for the university's image while soothing those of us who are enraged at the thought of our activity fees being used to support causes we find repugnant i.e. appeasement, America-bashing, etc.

A change of priorities via a new SAC director is not, however, going to solve the basic problem. Future presidents could appoint other New Age pioneers that would again lead SAC in the direction of irrationality. The most effective way of preventing a student-funded group from using those funds to promote far-left policies is quite simple: Quit funding them. Let them raise their own funds in this time of rising tuition and parking fees rather than feed off the limited funds of the student body. I don't think that a student body who gave President Reagan a plurality on Nov. 6 wants their money used to support nuclear weapons protests or lesbian consciousness-raising sessions.

Mercer will make a few enemies, but those people probably didn't support him in the first place. And just think of all the band members and ultimate discers who would appreciate the added money that could be budgeted for their groups.

Bill Mercer has the makings of a fine ASUM president. All he must do is stay away from the me-tooism of special interest politics and do what has to be done sooner or later—stop student funds from being spent on political groups of any nature. Especially those that don't even remotely represent the majority of UM students.

Black conformity

EDITOR: Conforming is the name of the game in today's society. Not since the 1950's has there been so much pressure on people to be just like the rest.

Conformity may be good, just think, a whole country of people that think and act the same, sounds like life in the USSR. This dark force can even be found in the university philosophy department. Ever since the mid 1970's, there has been pressure to weed-out radical, nonconforming professors. The Reagan administration will be grateful to know that the philosophy department is kicking out one more of these potentially dangerous professors, Bryan Black.

One change against Professor Black is lack of clarity in his writing. They feel Prof. Black should conform to a particular standard of writing. One requirement of this standard seems to be that papers should be written so they can be completely understood after the first reading, (ie. like a Nancy Drew mystery novel). If a paper requires numerous readings, perhaps one can gain new insights with each reading. But this would require written material to be alive. The present view is once facts are down on paper they become dead.

Another problem may be that the philosophy department here is full of people that can teach philosophy but are not philosophers themselves. Thoreau puts it this way: "to be a philosopher is not merely to have subtle thoughts, nor even to found a school, but so to love wisdom as to live according to its dictates, a life of simplicity, independence, magnanimity and trust. It is to solve some of the problems of life, not only theoretically but practically."

How many of the department members are trying to understand how modern folks are on the edge of vaporizing the earth and trying to develop new ways of getting together as a "we" without losing individual freedoms?

Official fascist

EDITOR: To Mr. Burt. I was shocked and dismayed to learn from your column on Feb. 28 that the Left (and, from all appearances, the Right also) have been unable to uncover a real live Fascist at the U of M.

To put right this incredible flaw in the student makeup of this University, I wish to nominate myself as the official U of M Fascist. My qualifications for this position are listed below.

UM may be chosen permanent home of First Amendment Congress

By Brian Justice
Kaimin Reporter

The University of Montana is one of nine universities being considered as the permanent home of the First Amendment Congress, a national organization devoted to promoting better understanding of the importance of free speech and a free, "responsible" press, the dean of the UM Journalism school said Wednesday.

Charles E. Hood said the Congress was started in an effort to support the First Amendment and make reporting more responsible.

He added that the Congress is also concerned with maintaining privacy standards that coincide with responsible reporting.

The Congress, temporarily housed at American Newspaper Publishers Association headquarters in Washington, was organized in 1979 by 12 news organizations, including the American Newspaper Publishers Association, the American Society of Newspaper Editors, the National Association of Broadcasters, the Associated Press, United Press International and the Society of Professional Journalists.

A three-member team, consisting of John R. Finnegan, editor and vice president of the St. Paul Pioneer Press and Dispatch; Eugene D. Johnson, publisher of the White Bear (Minn.) Press; and D.J. Cline, professor of journalism, South Dakota State University, will visit UM March 25-26 to meet with campus officials, including UM President Neil Bucklew and Hood, to inspect the proposed office location on the third floor of the Journalism Building.

The Congress' board of trustees reduced 22 university applications to nine at its meeting in Denver late last year. Other finalists besides UM are the University of Missouri, Columbia University, Drake University, Northwestern University, the College of William and Mary, the University of Tennessee, Arizona State University and the University of Colorado.

The proposals were judged on location; quality and support for programs in journalism, law, business and public affairs; financial support; interdisciplinary campus activity; the possibility of joint projects with the Congress; and the availability of hotels and conference centers.

The list includes "some very impressive universities," Hood said, adding that UM is in competition with three of the "most prestigious" journalism schools in the United States—

Missouri, Columbia and Northwestern.

"We're not surprised to be in their company," Hood said. "Even though we're very small, we're one of the best journalism schools in the country."

Asked if he thought UM has a good chance of becoming the home of the Congress,

Hood replied, "I would guess that our chances are probably slim, but we're going to give it a good shot."

"We're against the big shots," Hood added. "It's going to be tough," but "we have much of what they're (the congress) looking for."

He said UM has excellent law, business and political science schools in addition to the Mansfield Center that offers a program dealing with public ethics.

If UM is chosen for the Congress's new home, its director will be given adjunct-faculty status and probably be responsible for some teaching duties, Hood said.

MontPIRG survey offers phone advice

By Robert Marshall
Kaimin Reporter

Since the divestiture of the AT&T, consumers have been able to choose whether to continue renting their telephone equipment or to purchase it outright.

But many shoppers do not realize they must consider more than just price, color and style when making their selection, said Jackie Amsden, coordinator of a survey of telephones by MontPIRG.

The survey, conducted in November 1984, looked at three characteristics of telephones from nearly 30 manufacturers at several Missoula stores.

These characteristics were: warranty information, Federal Communications Commission registration and the method of signaling used, Amsden said.

The compiled report gives the consumer the idea of what is available in the Missoula community, said Marlee Miller, MontPIRG publications specialist.

Miller said that MontPIRG selected stores that had the widest selection of telephones available and that had telephones that were produced by the major brands, such as IT&T or AT&T.

According to Amsden, the survey found that about 27 percent of the telephones did not have warranty information available to the consumer.

Copies of the complete survey are available, free of charge, to the public at the MontPIRG Office, 729 Keith Ave., Missoula. The office is open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. For more information call MontPIRG at 721-6040.

UM's Quick and Swisher learn by lobbying legislature

By Jeff McDowell
Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA—While most of the 25 University of Montana students working as legislative interns help prepare legislation, others have a different role.

Geoff Quick and Ann Swisher are student lobbyists, working to influence the passage or defeat of legislation.

Quick, 19, a sophomore in political science and history, is a lobbyist intern for the Missoula area Chamber of Commerce.

He said his duties mostly involve talking with members of the Missoula area legislative delegation to learn their positions on certain bills and to convey to them the Chamber's position.

He said he testifies occasionally on behalf of the Chamber at the committee hearings and also tracks bills.

He said he works quite a bit with Forrest "Buck" Boles, executive director of the state Chamber of Commerce, and Dave Goss, a lobbyist for the Billings Chamber of Commerce.

"We work on solidifying our positions on bills of mutual interest," Quick said.

Because of his university class status, Quick said, he was not eligible for most of the Legislative Council intern positions.

The lobbying intern post was one of only five he was eligible for, but he seems enthusiastic about the job.

"I really enjoy listening to strategy," he said. "The powerful lobbyists have quite a bit of influence. I was surprised. They are more powerful than I thought, because I NEVER read about lobbyists in the newspaper."

"I've learned a lot about the process and how legislators make decisions," Quick said. "Lobbyists help provide a lot of technical advice."

One problem Quick has encountered is that because of his age "it is hard to be taken on the same level as the experienced lobbyist."

"I didn't know that much about lobbying before I took the job. It was trial and error and I had to learn from experience," he said.

David Owen, executive vice president of the Missoula Chamber of Commerce, said Quick has been doing "a good job for us."

"We try to downplay his role as a lobbyist and emphasize his role of providing us with information," Owen said.

"We do encourage him to testify if he feels comfortable, but most of the testimony is of the 'me-too' type—just showing that the Chamber also supports a bill," Owen said. "Geoff's main function is to help us keep in touch with the local delegation."

Geoff Quick

Owen noted that Quick, who is active with the College Republicans, "has a partisan background." He said Quick had to be reminded early in the session "to maintain his perspective."

"It has been good experience for Geoff. He has grown with the experience," Owen said. "It has been a successful program for us. Geoff represents us real well."

Quick said he previously had considered running for the legislature but now apparently has changed his mind.

"I really enjoy lobbying," he said. "This has been one of the best experiences of my life."

He also said it was "a learning experience" to discover that "a legislator might say he will vote one way and then actually vote the other way. It's kind of an awakening when you count on a vote that's not there. I guess the moral is don't count your chickens before they hatch."

Swisher, a graduate student in environmental studies, is lobbying for the Montana Environmental Information Center.

Swisher, 26, who has a B.A. in English from UM, helps with the Center's bill-tracking service by reading all bills daily and pulling bills of interest to various groups served by the Center.

She also helps keep track of hearings schedules for the bills and helps with the writing and editing of a bi-weekly newsletter published by the Center.

Issues of interest to the Center include "anything to do with land use," the coal-severance tax, water marketing and stream access, mining, the state legacy fund and employee right-to-know legislation dealing with hazardous and toxic materials in the workplace.

Swisher said she also works on the "phone tree" that covers the entire state to rally support on key issues.

Early in the session she only sat in on hearings for other lobbyists at the Center but has since registered as a lobbyist to testify on legislation dealing with the state Major Facility Siting Act.

Don Reed, the lobbyist

coordinator and acting director of the Center, described Swisher as "a self-starter" who is able to work with "a minimal amount" of assistance and supervision.

"The Legislature is always hectic and our staff is very busy," Reed said. "We don't always have enough time to explain exactly what we want done, but Ann has been very good about picking up the ball and getting the job done."

"There were a few problems when we assumed she knew what we wanted done but there was really no way she could have known. That was fairly easy to correct," Reed added.

"We have tried to get the interns more involved this session with testifying and lobbying and Ann has done a good job," Reed said. "It provides a broader experience to see how the legislature works, because you really don't understand it until you have to do some of the work yourself."

Swisher said she is considering pursuing studies in environmental law, adding that her intern experience has provided "a really good insight into how public-interest and special-interest groups work, how important they are and the effect they have."

Lobbyists have a place in the legislative process, she said, because they "represent various public segments," adding that "at most hearings I have attended, public-interest groups have outnumbered corporate and business interests."

Lobbyists occasionally will lobby each other to reach a compromise in support or opposition to certain legislation, she said, describing it as similar to legislative oat trading.

She also said that occasionally lobbyists will formally testify in favor of a bill but will later indicate to legislators that they do not really support the bill.

"Legislators call our office all the time for information," she said. "Lobbyists are reliable sources of information and may be the sole sources on some issues."

"I was apprehensive at first about talking to legislators about the issues but people are really open and willing to listen around here. There are so many different views around here that sometimes you just have to sit and listen to an opposing view."

MWC tourney opens in Moscow

The third annual Mountain West Conference basketball tournament begins Friday in Moscow, Idaho when the host Lady Vandals take on fourth-place Weber State, and Montana's Lady Griz go against Eastern Washington.

The winner of the tournament wins the league's automatic berth in the NCAA Women's Tournament. Idaho, at 26-1 overall, is the only team with even a slim chance of being awarded an at-large birth in the tourney.

The following analysis of the four teams was written by Doug Whittaker, Mike Olinger, Brian Melstead and Eric Williams.

Idaho

There is no doubt about it. Idaho is the class of the Mountain West Conference this year.

The Lady Vandals cruised through the 14 conference games with but a single loss, swept all 13 non-league matchups and appear ready to dethrone the only champion the two year-old league has ever known—Montana.

Yet it might not be so easy a task. Coach Pat Dobratz is certainly wary of this weekend's tournament despite the fact that it will be played in Moscow, where no one has even given her team a game. And despite second and third place teams Eastern Washington and Montana will have to battle each other while Idaho takes on lowly Weber State in the first round.

"We are still taking things one step at a time," she said. See 'Idaho' page 8.

E. Washington

The Mountain West Conference is certainly proving itself as one of the nation's best women's basketball forums and part of the credit for this has to be give to the Eastern Washington University Eagles.

For the past two years the Eagles have finished runnerup to the UM Lady Griz and this year the Eagles finished second behind the University of Idaho Lady Vandals. Consistency exemplifies the Eagles' program and it is quite obvious that they can not be overlooked when the MWC Championship Tournament opens tomorrow in Moscow.

The Eagles, who will play the Lady Griz in the opening round, finished the regular season with an 11-3 conference record and were 20-6 overall.

Montana

Montana has won the Mountain West regular season and tournament championships the past two seasons which makes experience a big factor on the Lady Griz side.

At the beginning of the conference season, Coach Robin Selvig said his squad would need offensive balance and a more mature team defense to make the NCAA tournament. And that has happened. In winning their last six games, Selvig has seen seven players capable of scoring in double figures and in last weekend's 80-49 route of Montana State, the UM defense was "mature" enough to hold MSU scoreless for over the first six minutes of the game.

Junior center Sharla Muralt has led the Lady Griz in scoring and rebounding throughout most of the season. Going into the tournament, she is pouring in 14 points and grabbing 8.3 boards a game.

She is joined in scoring double figures by senior guard Barb Kavanagh with 12.6, senior forward Anita Novak at 12.5 and freshman forward Dawn Silliker at 10.

Sophomore Natalie Streeter and freshman Cheryl Brandell, who share time at the guard slot opposite Kavanagh, are chipping in with 7.2 and 5.8 points respectively. Both are grabbing over six rebounds a contest, while Novak is pulling down eight. Freshmen Marti Leibenguth and Kris Moede have also come off the bench to score more than four points a game.

While Selvig has been getting the balanced scoring the team needs recently, the defense has shone as well.

Earlier in the year, he stressed that the younger players weren't playing the strong defense that the Lady Griz had been known for in the past two seasons. However, he has been happy with the way their team defense and individual effort has improved.

Montana led the Mountain West by allowing the fewest number of points a game, 59.9, and holding their opposition to a 38.5 field goal percentage. For Montana to win a third consecutive NCAA tournament appearance, that offensive balance and defensive maturity will have to peak this weekend.

The Lady Griz don't have the developed talent that they did last season, and will have to work extra hard to edge Eastern Washington Thursday.

If UM can top the Eagles, it will take a heroic effort, though not an impossible one, to topple Idaho.

Weber State

"Records mean nothing now. We are all starting out at 0-0."

Coach Jane Miner of Weber State makes the statement with confidence as her team prepares to go up against league power Idaho in the Mountain West Tournament, but one might wonder.

Weber just barely backed into the tourney with a 5-9 conference mark, 8-19 overall, after losing its last two games of the season, while Idaho easily picked up its last two and chalked up a 13-1 league record, 26-1 overall. And in their two meetings this year, Idaho has romped by 25 and 23 points.

"We have put everything together for a half, even for 38 minutes, but we always have that one letdown. At Montana we were leading at the half, and when Idaho came to Ogden we stayed with them until the last seven minutes,"

"We just need to go the full 40 minutes."

Miner admits there could be other problems. Idaho is a bigger team than Weber, and yet quicker too. "They get the ball down the court, and we have had trouble staying with them," said Miner. "We'll have to get back on defense."

But even getting back may not be enough against the hot-shooting Idaho team Miner said, because every player on it is hitting about 50 percent.

On the offensive end of the floor, Miner looks to forward Tammy Thomason, who has a team leading 15.7 average, to score underneath while guard Shelly Roberts dishes out assists and tosses in the perimeter shots. Roberts is averaging 4.3 assists and 10.2 points per game.

Miner stresses however, that everyone is going to have a good night to beat Idaho.

E. Washington

The Eagles are led by 5-foot-6 senior guard Lisa Comstock who is an All-American candidate and was first-team All-Conference last year.

EWU also boasts four players in double figures with Comstock leading the way averaging 17.5 points followed by Brenda Souther, 15.2, Alice Davis, 15.1, and Cristy Cochran, 10.1.

Souther, EWU's 6-foot-2 sophomore center, also averages 10 rebounds per game and has excelled in MWC action. While she averages 15.2 points per game overall, Souther has averaged 20.6 in conference action. She missed four games earlier in the season because of a foot injury, including the loss against WSC.

She led the Eagles in scoring in both their games with the Lady Griz, scoring 34 in the first contest and 18 in the second. She has proven to be strong competition for UM center Sharla Muralt and the Lady Griz defense will have to key on stopping her if they expect to advance in the tourney.

Look for EWU to beat UM and don't be surprised if the Eagles also beat the Lady Vandals.

Idaho

"Although we have not seen much from Weber, they have had excellent halves against other schools and anyone in this tournament could put it all together. As for the final game (if we make it there), no matter who we play, it is going to be tough."

But maybe tougher for the opponents. Idaho is second in the nation in field goal accuracy, hitting 53.8 percent, and those buckets are not all coming off fastbreak layups.

According to Dobratz, even the guards are hitting over half their shots. "We get maybe 12 layups a game, and some high percentage shots from our two 6-foot-4 girls up front," she said, "but when teams collapse to play them, our guards have consistently put in the shots."

The two six-footers she refers to are center Mary Raese and forward Mary Westerelle, who along with the other forward, Kris Edmonds, have combined for an average of 49.8 points and 23 rebounds per game. To beat Idaho, all three must be stopped, for none among them carries the burden alone.

Expect to see that kind of performance and Idaho sporting the Mountain West crown at tourney's end.
