UM Foundation using assets to fund stadium

By Tamara Mohawk

Kaimin Staff Reporter

University of Montana Foundation "unrestricted assets," but not actual funds, are being used as collateral on bonds used to fund construction on the new football stadium, the public relations director for the Foundation said Tuesday.

The Kaimin reported last Thursday that Athletic Director Harley Lewis told Central Board that the Foundation is using unrestricted reserve funds as collateral against a short-term loan for the stadium project.

David Little, UM Foundation public relations director, said bond revenue, not a short-term loan, will be used to fund the beginning of construction on the stadium, until money pledged by private donors for the stadium is received.

Lewis told CB last week that See 'Stadium,' page 16.

Silvertip skydiver falls 9,000 feet to her death

By Jackie Amsden

Kaimin Reporter

The University of Montana Silvertip Skydivers experienced the first jumping fatality in its 30-year history Sunday afternoon.

A nurse at St. Patrick Hospital, Mary G. Deutsch, 23, fell to her death on a jump from 9,000 feet above ground level. She was traveling at an estimated 120 miles per hour before she hit ground at the Stevensville airport.

Three Silvertip Skydivers were killed on a Sunday afternoon in 1970 when a plane carrying the skydivers collided in midair with another plane. However, that was considered an aviation accident rather than a jumping accident.

Dave Stewart, UM Silvertip Skydivers safety officer who aided in the investigation of the incident, said that Deutsch was an experienced jumper, having made 51 dives before the fatal one.

A licensed jumpmaster and instructor, Stewart was one of three who accompanied Deutsch in the dive. The team of four were doing free-fall relative work, in which the divers clasp hands and maneuver into formations such as a circle or a wedge.

Stewart said the divers released each other at 3,500 feet to deploy their parachutes at 2,500 feet.

Her three companions opened their parachutes, but Deutsch apparently could not find the handle to hers, he said.

while the Foundation had pledged collateral, the collateral was not money which could be used for student loans.

The Missoulian Friday reported that William Zader disputed statements in the Kaimin that "unrestricted funds" are being used as collateral on a loan for the stadium.

Little said yesterday however, "The Foundation has pledged its unrestricted assets as collateral to the bonding company."

Little answered Kaimin questions from a written response approved by Zader.

Lewis said yesterday that he was speaking to Central Board about "assets," not "funds."

"Those two words I may have used interchangeably," he said.

Lewis and Little both said

Relocation underway

Powerlines moved after long-term planning

By Ann M. Jaworski

Kaimin Staff Reporter

A powerline relocation project, which has been in the planning stages for three and a half years, got underway this fall, Geoff Badenoch, head of the Missoula Redevelopment Agency, said Tuesday.

Powerlines that run through the Hellgate practice field, located on the riverfront between the Madison Street and Higgins Avenue bridges, will be moved 250-300 feet to the southern edge of the field along the irrigation ditch, Badenoch said.

According to Badenoch the relocation process has been "long, tedious and complex to understand."

"Since the city wasn't granted easement near 4th Street, it had basically two choices," Badenoch said. "One was to put all powerlines right on the riverfront and the other was relocating them near the ditch for less visual impact."

"It costs more to do it this way," Badenoch said. "But it was the only viable way."

According to Badenoch the cost of relocating the powerlines in parcel C (the riverfront area between Higgins and Madison) is shared equally by the city of Missoula and Hellgate High School.

The open area surrounding the playing field will be developed as a public park with walking trails and landscaping, Badenoch said.

West of this area, near the Missoulian building, there are 16 power poles which will be reduced to four poles by replacing them with bigger poles which can accommodate more lines, Badenoch said.

Badenoch said that the relocation project also includes moving the powerlines which temporarily zig zag around the Sheraton Hotel.

and hook up on the riverfront powerline between 4th and 5th Streets," Badenoch

Prepare now

As of last week, AIDS had been diagnosed in about 13,000 Americans since January 1979, according to the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta. In the same period, AIDS had killed around 6,600.

Federal health officials are predicting the disease could afflict hundreds of thousands of people in the United States by 1990.

Editorial

AIDS is a killer on the move, and scaring the hell out of people across the land.

And while a fear of contracting AIDS occupies the minds of the masses, the masses are failing to prepare for the societal side effects that accompany the disease.

Officially, Montana is free of AIDS. However, over the weekend the Missoulian reported at least two people in the state might have the disease.

AIDS, or Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, is a condition in which a person's immune system becomes unable to fight off diseases, leaving the victim susceptible to disease related death. Victims are primarily homosexuals and intravenous drug users. There is no known cure for AIDS.

AIDS researchers say the disease can only be transmitted through sexual contact, transfusions of contaminated blood products, sharing of hypodermic needles and between infected mothers and infants at birth.

Considering that the disease could now be a problem of Montana, that about 20 percent of UM students are from out-of-state and that the disease has reached epidemic proportions, AIDS will appear at the University of Montana sooner or later. Maybe the disease is already here and nobody knows.

UM should not wait for AIDS to afflict a student before it decides on a policy regarding AIDS victims. UM should prepare now for the arrival of AIDS. A failure to prepare could lead to calamity on campus.

Would allowing AIDS students on campus result in a decline in enrollment? If so, is UM willing to accept enrollment declines in the name of fairness to students who are afflicted with AIDS? Would the university face lawsuits if it refused to allow AIDS victims to attend?

These are questions that should be addressed now. They should be given a lot of thought, debated thoroughly and answered intelligently while there is time to avoid haste.

Making available the forum to discuss the issue now would add up to preventive medicine.

Students should be informed about AIDS by experts and then allowed to have some input in the policy decisions concerning AIDS victims.

Informing university students about AIDS and taking action ahead of time would help prevent overreactions to AIDS when the disease appears on campus. Overreactions could take place in many forms including haphazard and unfair responses to AIDS victims which, in turn, could cost the university a bundle in litigation and discrimination battles with students.

Common Cold, Uncommon Cure

It all starts with a little tickle in the nose. No, not true love, but a cold.

In Missoula, the cold is known—depending on the neighborhood—as the crud, the boogie-woogie flu, or Grizzly Fever. Whatever you call the cold, it descended with a vengeance on our town in the past two weeks. Everyone's got it or, for you gloating with the unchaffed nose, will soon have it.

What causes the common cold? Well, everyone has a pet theory.

The Student Health Service is likely to say your cold is due to a bacterial or viral invasion of your respiratory tract. This is popularly known as the Chuck Norris theory. The erudite on campus may also refer to this phenomena as the Miltonian postulate. (Just wait until the folks back in Belgrade find out that you not only matriculated with thespians, but that some of them were erudite and had postulates!)

Imagine the hordes of menacing microbes dropping from the sky into your freedom loving pulmonary system. Luckily we also have antibodies, known to physicians as Rambo cells, to fight back for us. You can see them under a microscope with their khaki headbands and bandoliers of bullets slung across their nuclei. And you thought microbiology class was boring.

If your not into germ warfare, you can always blame your cold on market forces. (Did you catch your cold while shopping?) But, there's disagreement even among the true believers. Monetarists will blame it on bad money. You've heard how germs are spread by dollar bills. Supply-siders, may God have mercy on their wretched souls, are apt to display a chart of the back of the throat and mumble something about trickle down.

But, colds shouldn't be partisan. A cold is something we all share. As the rain falls on the just and unjust alike, the common cold is caught by the just and the far right alike. (Hey, how about a constitutional amendment . . .) We begin sneezing in five minutes.

Okay, so there's disagreement about the cause, but what are the symptoms? Some may confuse the crud with the Missoula cough which appears every winter.

The crud is marked by a runny nose, watery eyes, sore throat, and a cough. Look for the kleenex up the sleeve, it's a dead giveaway. The Missoula cough has the same symptoms, but it is also accompanied by the distinctive Missoula campfire breath.

The Missoula cough can only be cured by incantation or Spring. Repeated recitations of the U.S. Constitution seem to do the trick for some folks. For the rest of us, a "damn you Nietzsche!" or two may also be required.

The crud is harder to cure. A few years back, a soup company reported that chicken soup has proven curative properties. A little skepticism is warranted, however, because this is the same outfit that claimed its cream of tomato soup is an aphrodisiac, cures arthritis, and cleans white-walled tires.

Then there are homemade remedies. When my brother and I had colds, Grandma would make a concoction of whiskey, lemon, honey, and licorice root. It probably saved our lives. There's no telling what mom would have done to us, with all our whining and crying, if she hadn't calmed her nerves with Grandma's potion.

The only good thing about store-bought cold remedies are the names. Your five bucks buys you not only aspirin and antihistamine, but Science. They should hand out white lab coats for you to wear while you measure your cough syrup in the little beaker.

The only real cure, of course, is sympathy and tender loving care. If you live in the dorm, you may have to be creative. Make popcorn (make sure you stuff wet towels under the door to keep the crowds down) and listen to Marcia Dunn. But all you really need is a little TLC and orange juice.

'Kristy Crystal Creek' not yet identified

By John Saggau

Kaimin Contributing Reporter

The Missoula County Sheriff's Department has gathered information about the woman whose skeletal remains were found near Crystal Creek September 9, but have not yet identified her.

Analysis of the bones and teeth and a facial reconstruction are some of the methods that the department has used in its attempt to piece together the woman's identity, said Captain Larry Weatherman in an interview last week.

Chances of finding the killer are "probably real slim," he said.

A man bear hunting near Crystal Creek discovered the bones of the woman, whom the sheriff's department has dubbed "Kristy Crystal Creek" until they can identify her. The woman had been shot in the head. No clothing or jewelry was found with the remains, Weatherman said.

One method used to identify the body is a skeletal analysis done by professor Charline Smith of the University of Montana anthropology department. Smith has refused to comment on the matter.

Weatherman said that Smith's analysis indicates that the woman was about 25, a white female, possibly with some Asian blood. She had brown hair, was probably about five feet one inch tall with a slight build, and weighed about 105 pounds.

Weatherman said the weight is estimated from height/weight charts. He said the woman's build was estimated according to the texture of the bones at the points where the muscles had attached to the bone.

Bones of muscular people are built up and roughened at those points while the bones of a slight person would be smoother and thinner, he said.

Examination of the woman's teeth showed that she had several bad cavities and a lot of dental work, including two root canal jobs in upper teeth, Weatherman said. Dental charts are as good as fingerprints in identifying a person. "It's that positive," he said.

Weatherman is awaiting a reconstruction of the woman's face that is being done by Dr. Michael Charney, an adviser to the forensic unit of the anthropology department at Colorado State University. Charney is using the woman's skull to shape a clay model of what he thinks the woman looked like.

Weatherman said the ears and lips are generic and the shape of the eyelids are a guess, "but the overall structure should be pretty close."

Weatherman said he began sending initial skeletal and dental information about the woman to agencies across the nation at the end of September, adding to that information as more came in.

He entered "Kristy's" data into the computer linked to the National Crime Information Center, which contains information about all people reported missing in the U.S. The computer will automatically kick out possible match-ups as long as the "Kristy" information is in the system, he said.

He also sent that information, as well as the date she was found and circumstances under which the body was discovered, on the teletype to law enforcement agencies across the country. "Every six months I (will) re-send a nationwide teletype," he said.

The same day that the data went out sheriff and police departments began sending back dental information, descriptions and pictures of missing people who might turn out to be "Kristy," Weatherman said. He won't be able to make use of the pictures and descriptions until he gets the facial reconstruction to come from Charney, he said.

Weatherman also entered the dental information into dental journals and sent flyers to the Canadian Mounties and throughout Canada.

A similar process of sending out information about the skeletal analysis, dental charts and facial reconstruction resulted in identification of the woman stabbed to death whose body was found at Beavertail Hill along Interstate 90 in February 1980.

Smith's analysis indicated that the woman, dubbed "Betty Beavertail," was a 15-year-old white female with some Indian blood, about five feet two inches tall (plus or minus an inch), who weighed 115 pounds (plus or minus 5 pounds), Weatherman said.

One of the agencies that picked up the information was the Green River Task Force, which was investigating the murders of young women in the Seattle area. They had no one on file that matched the anthropological description, but because they had dental charts of all females reported missing in the Northwest, they were able to provide a match with that.

In February 1985 "Betty" was identified as Devona Nelson of Seattle. Nelson was actually a 15-year-old white female with some Indian blood, five feet three inches tall, who weighed 130 pounds.

Weatherman said only three bodies have been discovered in the Missoula area that they have not been able to identify quickly: Devona Nelson, "Kristy," and another woman whose remains were found in December 1984 along Deer Creek, which is close to Crystal Creek.

As with "Kristy," this woman had been shot in the head and no clothing or jewelry was found with the remains, Weatherman said. He said someone obviously had used the area to dump murdered women, but he has no idea if it is one or more persons or if bodies will continue to be found.

The sheriff's department has sent out the information about "Debbie Deer Creek," but has not yet been able to identify her, Weatherman said.

Weatherman seemed to think there is little chance of catching whoever killed these women. "That's a hope," he said, but added that 2,000 unidentified bodies are found throughout the U.S. each year. Many of them are transients and runaways, "picked up along the interstate by God-knows-who," making the killers difficult to find, he said.

UM Days set for November rather than April

By Adina Lindgren

Kaimin Staff Reporter

The UM Days format has been completely revamped this year and instead of holding the recruiting activities in the spring, they will be held this quarter.

UM Days Coordinator Frank Matule said UM Days, a recruiting program that allows Montana high school students to visit and learn about the campus, was changed because students who attended it in April had usually already chosen the college they wanted to attend. The event was becoming more of an orientation, he said.

High school administrators had also requested the change so potential UM students wouldn't have to miss class to attend.

UM Days will be held this year on two Saturdays — Nov. 2 and 16.

The program will introduce prospective students to the faculty, programs and the atmosphere of the University. It will give students the opportunity to visit the school and begin shopping for a college choice, he said.

Students participating in UM Days will no longer take placement tests, attend academic departmental meetings or plan class schedules because they have a "net effect of transforming UM Days into an actual orientation," according to an administration publication.

The program will begin with a welcome media presentation entitled, "The Idea of a University." Following will be a presentation on the decisions involved in choosing a college.

Six workshops will be available to supply information on academic programs, different fields of study, life in the dormitories, career options, financial aid, scholarships and ways to prepare for college in high school. Students and parents can later attend small group meetings with current UM student representatives.

Parents will be invited to attend UM Days this year for the first time under the new program. Matule said, "We have discovered that parents are very influential in college choice decisions."

He said he hopes the new program will be able to furnish more information to parents to help in the student's college choice.

The new program is also designed to help high school juniors who attend UM Days. Matule said past programs were predominantly intended for high school seniors because of all the placement tests given. "Most students start looking for college choices in their junior year" and this will give them the option for long-range planning, he said.

Hunger meal

Editor:

Many thanks to Tim Huneck for his Friday editorial on World Hunger. The Hunger Meal he writes of is a great opportunity for us to leave the physical and intellectual confinement of our homes and university and expand our "education" with community involvement.

Invitations have been sent to our university president, our city mayor and council members and also to Kaimin and Missoulian staff members. Please take the opportunity to share a meal tonight, Wednesday October 16, that will help those in our community who aren't able to depend on regular meals to fill and satisfy them.

The Hunger Meal will be held at Christ the King Church, only a few blocks from campus on Gerald Ave.

Admission is $2 and a canned food item, all of which will go to local hunger relief.

Mark Fitzsimons
Senior, biology.

Yuppie prep

Editor:

Being in the age of the Young-and-Upwardly Moronic, it is crucial that if UM is to stay competitive with other Yuppie-preparatory institutions across the U.S., then it must teach its students how to recognize and function within an environment of impeccable taste. This is why I fully support the "educational experience" as described by Food Service Director John Piquette in referring to the new formal dining area at the Lodge. Students living in the dorm will now have a jump on graduating seniors like myself who have never been trained to eat with a knife and fork or discern the bouquet of a light chablis from a rose.

But why should these opportunities be afforded only to on campus folks? There are things that I could benefit from. For instance, I have never been chauffeured in a real limousine either. But this could be quickly remedied by the purchase of a small fleet of upper class autos replete with a complementary force of minority chauffeurs who could drive upperclassmen back and forth to wine tasting seminars at The Mansion where we could gaze in awe and wonder of the poor folks' hopes in the lower valley.

Better yet, how about buying some rickshaws or litters with slaves like Nero used to ride in. That way we could experience first-hand what it is to be carried on the sweat of those less fortunate. This is important for us to see, as the weight of this country has been carried on the backs of the Third World for decades. We just haven't had the opportunity to witness it directly. We can carry this further by having our bearers drop us at the food service where we can be seated on a dirt floor to eat rice and cold fish. Then it might feel like there was some educating taking place here.

Steve Murray
Senior, English Literature.

Real problem

Editor:

Kevin, 'ol buddy, I'm glad you took the initiative to shed some light on the campus parking problems. Like the residents you mentioned, I too am pissed off.

You see, Kevin, the points you raised concerning the shuttle system were fine and dandy. I even considered giving it a try, but I just can't. While I am sitting back "ever-grumbling" and missing the shuttle, too many people like you, Kevin, are missing the boat.

The true problem at hand deals with an overabundance of decals. In fact, the core of the problem is the mere existence of parking decals.

As if students were not paying enough for the grand illusion of a college education, those opting to live off campus are expected to gladly sign on the dotted line for a decal. Sorry, not this rebel.

I can just see someone sitting in a UM mucky-muck office (we'll call our villain George Mitchell) adding one and one together and getting profit. "George" thinks it would be a keen idea to sell "x" number of decals, while knowing all along he can only satisfy "x minus y" customers at any one time, where "y" is a much, much smaller number than "x." Get the picture?

So then "George" goes out and adds gas to the fire by hiring a dozen or so rent-a-cops, we'll call them "Lenny-clones." These protectors of justice proceed, on orders from "George," to stake out each and every parking lot designated for decal use only. It's almost like a game to them, and they love it... because they always win.

There must be some obscure law against an organization monopolizing in this manner—perhaps a false advertising claim, since even those who have purchased a decal aren't assured of making their purchase usable.

Well, being the hardcore Taurus that I am, I must defy this organization to the hilt and I will, being an American, stand up for what I believe in (cut the ideological murmuring).

I refuse to buy a decal, nor will I contribute to the "rent-a-cop foundation for boredom" by paying my existing infraction... but thanks just the same for the invitation.

As for my referral to George Mitchell, I hope he's happy with himself for denying the needy of Missoula a hot, quality meal. I also hope his new office space in North Corbin fits his needs. If not, well go ahead and take Elrod too. No problem, really.

I wonder how long it will be before bicycles and pedestrians must be decalated?

Sincerely,
Ken Pekoc
Sophomore, Journalism and political science.

PIRG funding

Editor:

I need to clarify a comment credited to me in last Wednesday's Kaimin. The University of Washington does have a PIRG on a donation, or positive checkoff, system. I apologize to UW students if I implied that they could "support" themselves on a donation system. If you compare total money generated at UM (with our optional fee) to UW (with their donation system), it could appear that they could support themselves. What I neglected to compare is the number of students at UW (about 34,000) to the number of students at UM (about 9,000). They cannot, just as MontPIRG could not, support themselves on a donation system.

The central question surrounding PIRGs, and the question I would like to leave you with, is: "Do students have the right to form and fund (with optional fee) their own organizations?"

Sincerely,
Julie Fosbender
Senior, political science.

Writing exam

Editor:

In response to your Kaimin editorial of October 9, I wish to point out that although your claim that "approving the writing examination was wrong," is an interesting one, your arguments on behalf of that claim are muddled, self-contradicting and false.

First of all, to assume that "if all Composition instructors give students failing grades when they deserve failing grades, the plan is flawless," is to argue against your own (well taken) point that students should be taught, not tested. English Composition 110 is a survival course in expository writing. It is not a cheesecloth for filtering people with poor writing skills out of the UM student body, and it is not an exit examination. The writing competency test on the other hand, is a type of exit examination. That is why it is not administered to students before they have had ample opportunity to take English Composition 110, as well as other courses involving a significant amount of expository writing.

Secondly, your assertion that "Establishing a writing test is simply a way of saying, 'our system of teaching students to write is inadequate,'" is patently absurd. Is it an admission of inadequacy when a professor administers a final examination? Is it an admission of failure in instruction when the State of Montana requires citizens to pass a driving test before issuing them a driver's license?

Finally, your statement that the graduate students who grade the examinations are "students who graduated from the system that prompted approval of a writing test in the first place," manages to be both syntactically unclear and clearly incorrect. How is graduation from a system that "prompted" approval of a writing test a blanket indictment of that system's graduates? And how, pray tell, did you come to the conclusion that all our graduate students are a product of the "system" of the University of Montana?

For shame, Mr. Fenner. When writing on the uselessness of a writing competency examination, one should at least demonstrate one's ability to pass it. I'm afraid that if you were to hand in your editorial to my Composition class, you would fare no higher than a B-. And that is not too impressive a mark for a person who cries out in a public forum for the blood of those who "deserve failing grades."

Cordially,
M.E. Jeffreys
Instructor of English Composition

Lady Griz streak reaches 9

By Nick Ehli

Kaimin Sports Reporter

The University of Montana volleyball team stretched its winning streak to nine with a win over Boise State on Saturday and an upset win over Portland State, the number one Division II team in the nation, on Friday.

The wins move Montana into first place in the Mountain West Athletic Conference with a 3-0 record in the conference and a 15-8 record overall.

On Friday night, the Lady Grizzlies played what head coach Dick Scott called, "about as good a game as we could have," in defeating Portland State, which has now lost only two conference games since the MWAC started four years ago.

Montana, which was the ninth ranked NCAA Division I team in the nation last week, pulled out the five-game match by the scores of 15-10, 6-16, 15-10, 12-15 and 17-15.

Leading two games to one, Montana took a commanding 12-8 lead in the fourth game, but Portland State rallied for seven unanswered points and the win, sending the match into a fifth and deciding game.

"We had them on the ropes," Scott said. "And we let them slip away from us."

In the fifth game, the Lady Grizzlies again took an early lead, but Portland State came back tying the score at 14.

"We had things under control until they caught up with us at 14," Scott said. "Then things got a little shaky."

Portland State scored the next point for a 15-14 lead, but Montana, after several exchanges, fought back, scoring three straight points for the win. The winning point came when Portland State's middle hitter couldn't handle a set off a Nan Kuenzel serve.

"We should have won it in four," Scott said. "We were lucky to win it in five."

Allison Yarnell, who was named the Mountain West Conference Player of the Week, played what Scott called the "best match of her career," to lead the Lady Grizzlies.

Yarnell, the team's leading spiker in conference games with 50, topped Montana with a team-high 26 kills and 25 digs.

Cindy Pitzinger added 14 kills, 11 blocks and 15 digs for Montana, and Laura Sianec chipped in 14 kills and 15 digs.

"Everybody had exceptional plays sometime during the match," Scott said. "Both teams played tremendously, but we got the job done when we had to. It was one of the most exciting matches I've ever been involved in."

Against Boise State, Montana got off to a slow start, losing the first game 6-15, but then rallied for three straight wins, 15-12, 15-8, 15-9 and the win.

"We didn't play well at all in the first game," Scott said. "But then we came back and took control, and played quite well."

Yarnell had 16 kills to again lead the Lady Grizzlies, while Kuenzel added 11 blocks and 25 digs.

Scott said that the wins were both very important to Montana's chances of winning the conference title, but added that games are going get tougher as the season goes on.

"I told the girls after the match on Saturday that we've created a monster," Scott said. "Everybody's going to be shooting for us now that we beat Portland."

Handball Club opens practice

The University of Montana Handball Club, which hasn't existed since 1981 when it folded because of a lack of interest, began practice for the 1985-86 season last week.

The club, which won the national title in 1975, will open its season this weekend in the Larry McDonald Open at the Courthouse Racquetball Club in Missoula.

The team, which is coached by Dick Schields, UM associate professor of social work, needs more players, especially women. Anyone at any level of play who is interested in playing should call 251-3995.

Montana holds off Idaho St. for a 35-29 victory

By Fritz Neighbor

Kaimin Sports Reporter

The University of Montana Grizzlies held off a Big Sky Conference record-setting performance by Idaho State quarterback Vern Harris in beating the Bengals 35-29 for a homecoming victory last Saturday.

The Grizzlies had lost 12 straight conference games before defeating Idaho State in front of 7,111 fans at Dornblaser Field.

Idaho State's Vern Harris passed for 589 yards against the Grizzlies, breaking the Big Sky record of 527 set by Idaho's Ken Hobart against Southern Colorado in 1983. Harris' 587 total yards in offense also broke Hobart's record of 543, also set against Southern Colorado.

In other Big Sky games, Idaho tightened its hold on the conference lead by defeating Weber State College, 31-28. Northern Arizona beat the visiting Montana State Bobcats 27-24, and the Nevada-Reno Wolfpack beat Eastern Washington University 31-25 in non-conference action. Boise State was idle last week.

Idaho's record stands at 5-1, and 3-0 in conference play. They play host to the Grizzlies, sixth in the Big Sky at 1-1, next week in the 16,000-seat Kibbie Dome in Moscow, Idaho. The Grizzlies are 2-3 overall.

Nevada-Reno, 5-1 overall and 2-1 in Big Sky games, plays host to Weber State, 3-2 and 1-1 in the Big Sky next Saturday in a key game.

Two UM football players honored

By Fritz Neighbor

Kaimin Sports Reporter

University of Montana football players Mike Rice and Terry Shillam were both awarded Big Sky Player of the Week honors in offense and defense, respectively for their efforts in the Grizzlies' 35-29 homecoming victory over Idaho State University.

Rice, a junior wide receiver-punter who transferred from Spokane Falls Community College, rushed three times for 82 yards, including a 67-yard touchdown run on a reverse for Montana's first score. Rice returned six kick-offs for 88 yards, had one reception for nine yards and punted seven times for a 48.3-yard average.

Rice shared the honor on offense with co-Offensive Player of the Week Brent Bengen of Idaho, who had 238 all-purpose yards in the Vandals' 31-28 victory over Weber State College. Rice is from Twin Falls, Idaho.

Shillam, a senior strong safety from Spokane, who intercepted three Vern Harris passes returning them for 37 yards, was in on 10 tackles and had three pass deflections to earn the defensive honor.

Three UM faculty members receive awards

By Judi Blaze
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Three $2,500 faculty awards were presented to three University of Montana faculty members Friday night at UM's new Performing Arts/Radio-TV Center.

University of Montana President Neil Bucklew presented the Burlington Northern Foundation Faculty Achievement Awards to Albert Borgmann, professor of Philosophy; Beverly Chin, associate professor of English; and Linda Frey, professor of history and chair of the history department.

The focus of Borgmann's work recognized by the Burlington Northern Foundation, is his book, "Technology and the Character of Contemporary Life." Besides his teaching responsibilities, Borgmann has been a member of the Mansfield Director Search Committee, the Faculty Senate, the Ethics Task Force for the General Education Program and the Linguistics Committee.

Chin's award recognizes her classroom ability and her other contributions to teaching. She is chairman of the Academic Standards and Curriculum Review Committee, a supervisor of a Montana writing project and research project supervisor in the School of Education. Chin teaches both graduate and undergraduate courses.

Frey was recognized for her extensive research published this past year. She wrote a biography titled "Frederick I; The Man and His Times." Frey also completed a second volume of her study, "Women in Western European History: A Select Chronological, Geographical, and Topical Bibliography: The Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries."

A Burlington Northern Foundation grant provides for three faculty awards to be presented each year for the next three years. The awards focus on achievement in teaching, special contributions to the General Education Program, success in undergraduate or graduate teaching, student research supervision or a combination of these.

Grads forced to work out of state

By Faith Conroy
Kaimin Staff Reporter

Although job prospects look good for students graduating this year from the University of Montana, many graduates will have to seek jobs outside of this state, said Don Hjelmseth, director of the Career Services Office.

In the special issue of Business Week's Guide to Careers, John D. Shingleton, Michigan State University's placement director, said the Northwest is currently the worst area of the country to find a job.

Hjelmseth agreed with Shingleton's assessment of the Northwest. "Right now, the Southwest and Southeast are the best areas," he said. This is because of recent population increase in the Sunbelt and the corresponding economic growth.

Accordingly, Dr. John Stodden, an economics columnist and industrial consultant, wrote in Business Week's Guide to Careers that the economies of Washington, Oregon and Wyoming will grow this year, but the economies of Alaska, Idaho and Montana will weaken.

The reason for this weakening, Stodden said, is the slump in the timber, agriculture and oil exploration industries.

Choosing a long distance company is a lot like choosing a roommate.

It's better to know what they're like before you move in.

Living together with someone for the first time can be an "educational" experience.

And living with a long distance company isn't any different. Because some companies may not give you all the services you're used to getting from AT&T.

For instance, with some companies you have to spend a certain amount before you qualify for their special volume discounts. With some others, voice quality may vary.

But when you choose AT&T, there won't be any surprises when you move in. You'll get the same high-quality, trouble-free service you're used to.

With calls that sound as close as next door. Guaranteed 60% and 40% discounts off our Day Rate—so you can talk during the times you can relax. Immediate credit for wrong numbers. Operator assistance and collect calling.

So when you're asked to choose a long distance company, choose AT&T. Because whether you're into Mozart or metal, quality is the one thing everyone can agree on.

'I Do! I Do!'

Nothing is easy, this comedy included

By John Kappes

Kaimin Arts Editor

Dying is easy, or so goes the old joke, but comedy, comedy is hard. If the musical comedy "I Do! I Do!" proposes anything, it is the hard truth that marriage is hard. And so it is, runs another joke: nothing is easy, but comedy is just as hard as ever.

Review

The current Drama/Dance production of "I Do!" (Wednesday through Saturday at 8 p.m. in the new Masquer Theater) is an uphill struggle against old jokes and hard truths all the way. That actors James Lortz and Sherry Tuckett somehow manage to get past them—and even begin to strip-mine the emotions they conceal—is far more heart-warming than any of the bromides served up by Tom Jones' book, not to say a lot of hard work.

"I Do!" dates from the mid-1960s (and Jan de Hartog's "The Fourposter"), so some antique feel is to be expected. Social humor ages fast, especially in the backwash of an abandoned sexual revolution. Still, even for 1986, a line like this (from "What is a Woman?") is hard to credit: "...a woman is only alive when in love."

But "I Do!" isn't set in 1966; it opens in the 1890s, with a pair of newlyweds, and then follows them haphazardly through 50 years of marriage. And there are hints, hard to discern, that Jones intends the sentiments of his characters to be the sentiments of the times. Lortz, for instance, starts to mumble darkly about "young people" and "liberal" upbringing as Michael, his character, gets older.

Except that "the times" has to mean both then and now for the joke to work. If Lortz is to be funny scathing the way parents raise their kids, the audience will have to think he's talking common sense. And the point of "I tell nothing. Unless you listen carefully to a line near the beginning about a gas lamp or know what shirt studs are, the transition to the 1920s can be extremely rough. And the transitions are already a there the next, supposedly 20 years later, how can we take his next outburst seriously? And if we can't, how can there be any dramatic development, any change in the characters that we feel we've witnessed?

"Social humor ages fast, especially in the backwash of an abandoned sexual revolution."

Do!" is humor, not dreary historical documentary. So the actors must make the old jokes work on their own merits, without appealing to what an audience "back then" would have liked.

Two further complications: the set and the scene-by-scene design of the book.

Perry Landes has tried to solve the problem of 50 years of furniture design by adorning the stage with white American colonial pieces that problem.

Perhaps a few well-chosen (and easily moved) period items would have lightened the load on Lortz and Tuckett, who must not only age but set the tone of five decades in their speech and manner.

Second complication. In Act One, fights are fought and then resolved so fast that the emotions worked up seem irrelevant in the end. If Michael threatens to leave the marriage one minute, but is still

There can't be, of course, which is why the acting effort here is so heroic. Agnes and Michael aren't supposed to change deep down, since the show is really an allegory about (capital-M) Marriage. But Lortz and Tuckett have to appear to change, to age, in order to be convincing from minute to minute. What to do?

Mostly they fall back on technique. And on Harvey Schmidt's songs. After a deathly slow start, Lortz catches with "Goodnight" and "I Love My Wife," both turn-

Magician Shaw Smith to open Spotlight Series

By John Kappes

Kaimin Arts Editor

Magician/humorist C. Shaw Smith will present a free one-hour show called "Wacky Wizardry" Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the University Theater.

Smith likes to use audience members in his illusions and skits, some of which are decidedly tongue-in-cheek. "It is a one-man show—with others," Smith told an interviewer, "straight out of old vaudeville."

Smith, with a graduate degree in English, has taken his act to campuses across the country. Along the way he's won some superb notices, particularly for keeping kids interested without boring their parents.

"A little humor can do wonders in this time of tension," he has said.

ASUM Programming is sponsoring Smith's Missoula appearance. Throughout the year, Programming's Spotlight Series offers free or inexpensive entertainment on campus. Call 243-4988 for more information.

Theater

The Drama/Dance production of "I Do! I Do!" is playing for a final week Wednesday through Saturday in the Masquer Theatre. All seats are $8. See the review on page 12 for details.

The Missoula Children's Theater has a production going up this week as well. "Beauty Lou and the Country Beast," a "sagebrush" version of "Beauty and the Beast," will run Saturday and Sunday at the Front Street Theater, 221 E. Front. Showtimes are 2, 4 and 7 p.m. Admission is $4 for adults and $1.50 for students and senior citizens.

Written by MCT director James Caron, with music by Michael McGill, "Beauty" features performances by McGill and UM student Deny Staggs, who plays the Beast. Call 728-1911 for reservations.

Art

Tony Smith's illusionist canvases come down on Saturday at the Brunswick (223 Railroad); see them Thursday and Friday from 4-8 p.m. or Saturday from 1-5 p.m. And the Missoula Museum of the Arts' Silent Auction also ends Saturday, with written bids on contemporary Northwest art accepted until then. The Museum is located at 335 N. Pattee.

Music

Seattle metal punks Green River will be in Missoula Saturday for a concert with two

"special guests" at the Third Street Studio, 204 S. Third W. The band will issue a six-song EP on Homestead Records soon, and will tour to Chicago, New York and Washington, D.C. later in the fall. Admission is $4 at the door. The show is open to fans of all ages.

Films

The Spy Who Loved Me, a James Bond adventure featuring Richard Kiel as the villainous "Jaws," is this week's entry in the ASUM Fall Film Series. Showtime is Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Underground Lecture Hall. Admission is $1 for students and $2 general.

And Hideo Gosha's samurai epic Goyokin continues its run at the Crystal Wednesday and Thursday at 9:15 p.m.

Comedy

ing on his rock-solid ability to translate earnestness into physical energy. Tuckett takes longer to establish herself, not hitting top form until the duet "My Cup Runneth Over."

Then Lortz falls into the trap of mugging too much, an understandable enough reaction to the material, but also something he never quite gets rid of. Tuckett, meanwhile, wins converts with "Nobody's Perfect" and "Flaming Agnes."

As distracted young parents, both actors are at their best. That section of Act One stands out because they pull out the stops, making the inert lines move by sheer force of will. Tuckett wheels the baby's toys around the stage like a lunatic, while Lortz pompously describes his latest book in a "poetic," elevated tone. It's wickedly funny, but it's over all too soon.

The second act exudes fatigue, although, again, Tuckett comes through—here with a sensitive portrayal of an older, dissatisfied Agnes. The last scene, involving a "God is Love" pillow, recalls some of the pair's earlier fire. It is spoiled by an overdose of sentimentality, which is neither one's fault. Comedy is hard.

"I Do! I Do!" misses director Randy Bolton's usually sharp sense of focus and definition.

It is uneven and poorly paced in spots ("When the Kids Get Married"), though it has moments of unexpected power. It's unlike last year's "Cowboy" in nearly everything—scale, subject, ambition—but like it in this: the visceral pleasures of the moment, the song, have to suffice, since the more advanced pleasures of plot have failed.

But then nothing, comedy included, is easy.

Reading Sunday

Writers John Barnes and Lisa Walser will read selections from their work Sunday at 7 p.m. in Forestry 305, as the Second Wind Poetry Series continues. The reading is free and open to the public. Address questions to Nancy Hunter, at 549-6974.

Skydiver

Although no explanation is known for certain, Stewart said, "We think she became so engrossed in finding the handle of her main pilot chute that she lost altitude awareness."

Deutsch was "aware of the brake-off altitude of 3,500 feet," he said, but probably became too intent in finding the handle to realize that she needed to deploy her reserve parachute.

She, like the others, was wearing an altimeter, which displayed her altitude.

If Deutsch had deployed the reserve parachute as soon as she realized she couldn't find the handle to the main pilot parachute, she probably would have survived, Stewart said, because the reserve parachute would have deployed in time.

At one point, Deutsch looked like she was in the correct position for opening the parachute, as seen from the ground through binoculars, he said, adding that he heard she "was looking down there, perhaps groping for" the handle.

Deutsch had only about 15 to 20 seconds between the time she released the clasp of the other jumpers and the time she hit the ground, Stewart said.

In that time, she did not pull the plastic handle which would have released the pilot parachute, which in turn releases the main chute. Stewart said she pulled the rip cords of her emergency parachute just prior to hitting the ground, but before the canopy had time to extend.

As an instructor of UM Silvertip Skydivers, Stewart said it is "highly" stressed that jumpers should be aware of their altitude, and realize when they need to have their parachutes up. This is stressed in both student and intermediate stages, which he said Deutsch had gone beyond.

Skydiving is a comparatively safe sport, Stewart said, citing statistics from the United States Parachute Association, of which Silvertip is affiliated. Those statistics reveal that of the 2.5 to 3 million jumps made every year, there are around 30 fatalities.

yesterday that Foundation funds and assets differ in that funds are actual cash from private donors, whereas assets include bonds and other Foundation holdings.

Lewis said also that he was referring to collateral against bonds rather than collateral against a loan.

But he said his explanation may have been confusing because he compared the two financial processes. "I used an analogy," he said.

said.

He said this would mean that two of the three distribution lines which run through Kiwanis Park would be removed as well.

He also said the 100 kilovolt line which is now running adjacent to the Madison and Higgins bridges will be gone.

The project will hopefully be completed by December, Badenoch said.

"Until we can relocate the major substation we will still have guy wires (power pole support wires) on the poles, but this project is a start in cleaning things up around the riverfront," Badenoch said.

"It's been a complicated project and the reason is that all of the steps are interrelated," Badenoch said.

"It's been a real juggling act, but we want to plan well now to alleviate future planning changes, which would cost even more money," he said.

CB meeting scheduled

Central Board members will tonight hear ASUM Executive Committee's nomination for the vacant Central Board position.

Board members may approve, reject, or postpone the appointment.

Also at the meeting, Jim Flightner, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, will discuss the new University College.

The meeting will be held at 7 in the University Center Mt. Sentinel Room.
