Greeks seek zoning change

By Verina E. Palmer
Kaimin Reporter

University of Montana fraternities are trying to get a designated district near UM for fraternity and sorority housing, Grant Davidson, Interfraternity Council coordinator, said Tuesday.

There are eight existing fraternities in Missoula, Davidson said. Only one fraternity, Phi Gamma Delta, does not have a house, he said, but other fraternities, Delta Sigma Phi and Pi Kappa Alpha, are interested in starting local chapters and would need houses also.

Davidson said the best place for the designated district is near the existing fraternities and sororities on University Avenue.

But the fraternities can't purchase houses because of a city zoning ordinance prohibiting multi-family dwellings in the university area, Davidson said. Sororities are not expanding at UM and have not run into the housing problem, he added.

Brian Wood, assistant planner for the Office of Community Development, said zoning laws were changed in 1975 to allow only single-family housing in the university area.

Existing fraternities, sororities and multi-unit dwellings were protected by variances that exempted them from the single-family restrictions, he said, but new multi-family houses are not be allowed in the area.

Phi Gamma Delta fraternity has already fought the zoning ordinance and lost, Davidson said.

Last fall the fraternity rented a house while waiting to purchase a permanent residence, Davidson said. But the temporary variance they received was contested by the University Homeowners Association and the city council reversed its decision, he said.

Phi Gamma Delta also tried to buy a house at 341 University Ave., but was denied a variance again, Davidson said.

Mike Easton, vice president of university relations, arranged for the fraternity members to be housed in a wing of Duniway Hall.

Davidson said dormitory housing for fraternities has been considered as an option.

Easton said Wednesday that although dormitory housing could be arranged, it would be better if the fraternities could have their traditional houses.

UM has drafted a proposal for a designated fraternity district, Easton said, and has sent it to the University Homeowners Association.

Davidson said UM fraternities will conduct a door-to-door survey within a few weeks to see what areas will consider fraternities as neighbors. The survey will be in neighborhoods north of University Avenue, where the existing fraternities and sororities are located, he said.

The students will compile the information from the survey, define the boundaries of the proposed district and present a proposal to the Missoula City Council by late summer, he said. Jack Alley, president of the University Homeowners Association, said he is aware of the proposal and planned survey by the fraternities. But the homeowners have been mainly concerned with the parking problem in the university area, he said, and have not yet discussed the the proposal.

CB rejects CRB appointment

By Kevin McRae
Kaimin Reporter

Central Board last night rejected the appointment of an adviser to serve on the ASUM Constitutional Review Board.

The review board examines any questions regarding the ASUM Constitution and bylaws.

ASUM Vice President Mary McLeod had recommended John Neuman, a former member of CB and the review board, to serve as a non-voting board member.

McLeod said Neuman could offer procedural advice to other members.

Some CB members said the open position on the review board should be filled by a present CB member.

Neuman's appointment failed to gain the required two-thirds approval by CB.

In other action, the board:

- Postponed voting on the appointment of Carol Van Valkenburg, assistant professor of journalism, as the faculty adviser to ASUM Publications Board. Several CB members said they want Van Valkenburg to address the board before they approve the appointment.

- Approved appointment of Erik Cushman as ASUM programming concerts coordinator.

- Placed an ASUM group-funding proposal on the agenda for the first CB meeting next fall. The proposal calls for using leftover money from the fiscal year ending June 30 to fund ASUM groups that received budget cuts in the ASUM budgeting session last winter.

Math Department adapts for faculty cuts

By Eric Troyer
Kaimin Reporter

The University of Montana math department is changing its curriculum next fall to adjust to fewer faculty members, according to Keith Yale, chairman of the math department.

The changes were included in the Academic Standard Curriculum Review Committee recommendations that were approved by the Faculty Senate at its meeting last Thursday.

The department lost a faculty position last year and one this year, Yale said. The department also has six visiting lecturers and assistant professors, equaling about five full-time positions, that may be cut if the university faces large budget cuts next year, he said.

To deal with the cuts, the department is reorganizing some of its 100-level courses. Two series of courses, Mathematics for Social Sciences, 104-105-106, and Mathematics for Biological Sciences, 107-108-109, and one course, Elementary Functions, 121, are being deleted.

The material in most of those courses will be offered Fall Quarter in the courses Linear Mathematics, 117, Probability, 118, College Algebra, 110, and Trigonometry and Transcendental Functions, 111.

Gloria Hewitt, math professor, said that while something is lost because applications in the courses will no longer emphasize social science or biological science, students will benefit from the change by being exposed to a variety of applications.

Hewitt said that separating math classes between social and biological sciences is "easy to do" with "plentiful staff," but said that when there aren't enough staff members, the department has to find a "more economical way" to teach the courses.

UM students must be heard in parking decision

Two days ago, Missoula's Public Safety Committee decided enough university area homeowners favored the proposed permit-parking plan and recommended the City Council adopt it.

Editorial

If adopted, the plan would require residents of a 28-block area bordering the University of Montana campus to buy $10 permits to park on the streets weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Non-residents would not be allowed to buy permits and violators would be fined $10.

At the City Council's public hearing April 28, a majority attending opposed the proposal. To most officials, that would have been enough to render a decision on the issue.

But the committee decided it wouldn't make a recommendation to the City Council until it heard from the University Homeowners Association.

The committee decided, for some unknown reason, that the association's vote would be a better indicator of what people living in the two-block area want.

Twenty-four homeowner association members living in the proposed district favored the proposed ordinance at the association's April 30 meeting. Missoula City Council Alderwoman Donna Shaffer said the vote shows the council that the area homeowners support the program.

But there are 182 homes in the district occupied by the individual owners. The vote only represented the opinions of 24 people.

The association's president said the association took a "standing vote," which means the votes of any number of members from a single family were counted. Not all those favoring the ordinance came from different homes, but even if they did, the vote still only represented 13 percent of the homeowners living in the area.

Since many more people rent homes in the area, the vote represented just a fraction of the area residents.

Some majority.

Besides the people renting homes in the area, more than 300 fraternity and sorority members living in the district were not represented. The committee said it based its decision on the opinions of area homeowners.

But fraternities and sororities own their houses. Representatives of the fraternities and sororities unanimously opposed the proposal at the committee's public hearing. So why were their opinions ignored?

The association took another vote at its meeting. This time it allowed any homeowner association member living in or out of the proposed district to vote.

Forty-six people favored the ordinance and 25 opposed it. If fraternity and sorority members were allowed representation, a majority would have defeated the proposal.

The math is simple. Let's say each household gets two votes, since most homes are owned by couples. Since there are 13 fraternities and sororities in the university area, that makes a total of 26 additional voters. Say those 26 voters were homeowner association members and voted at the last meeting. Twenty-six plus 25 equals 51. Only 46 favored it.

So why aren't the fraternities and sororities represented in the association? The association's president says any homeowner can join.

But Interfraternity Council Coordinator Grant Davidson said he tried. His membership and his fraternity's membership were denied.

No one wants to know what fraternity and sorority homeowners think about the proposal.

So what about the opinions of absentee homeowners, the ones that rent all the houses to UM students?

No one wants to know what they think either.

Certain homeowners have been screaming there are no places for them or their friends to park. But according to a survey done by UM's Safety and Security office in January, 1984, an average of only 804 cars parked in the 1,447 available spaces in the two-block perimeter around campus. That's about half the available spaces.

These figures were consistent throughout the year and since UM's enrollment has been steadily declining, it is likely the number of available spaces has not decreased.

So what's the problem?

The permit-parking plan calls for restricted parking from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. That's the time when most people are working or going to school. The homeowners drive to work, the students drive to school. It seems like a well-timed changing of the guard.

So how many university area homeowners are actually home during the day, searching in vain for a place to park? How many university area homeowners have driveways or the space to construct one?

There seem to be a few relevant questions that need to be answered and more reasonable alternatives discussed before the City Council decides the issue.

There are literally hundreds of students living in the university area who will be affected by the council's decision. But time is running out.

If UM students want the right to park on public streets near the university, they need to tell the council at Monday night's meeting. This won't be a meeting restricted to only certain area homeowners. UM students will have the chance to be heard.

Things bad for the blood pressure

Last week I was informed that my blood pressure was a bit high. Well, not high actually "borderline" was the term that was used. Naturally, I was disappointed. Imagine, a nice, mellow guy like myself with "borderline" blood pressure. What really hurt was being labeled "borderline." That term has such a middle-of-the-roader, pasta spine waffling moderate stench to it. I resolved to get myself down to normal and the first thing I had to do was to recognize what gets my dander up.

•Made-For-Television Movies With No Balls.

I think you all know what I'm talking about. Television trash like "Right of the People" that use conservative themes as a lure to attract viewers then clubs them over the head with the typical holier-than-thou liberal refrains in the final 10 minutes of the program. "Right of the People" involved a fictitious city where everybody (sans criminal record/mental illness) was allowed to carry a gat. Not a bad idea and of course, it appeals to your average Silent Majoritarian fed up with our wacko liberal criminal justice system. But after watching 110 minutes of criminal scum getting blown away with .44 magnums, the "film" does an about face and accuses the average citizen of getting down in the gutter with the criminal whenever he takes measures to guard against them.

Someday I hope to be wealthy enough to afford the luxury Elvis Presley had of shooting television sets when rot like this appears on the screen. Best to read Solzhenitsyn instead.

•Stupid Bumperstickers.

These tend to appear in bunches, usually on the back of a beat up VW van being driven by a seedy-looking old acid freak or a seedy-looking young granola freak. The stupidest bumpersticker reads, "No Vietnam War in Central America." There's about as much chance of that happening as having another Korean War in Africa. Get your geography straight before advertising your pinko sympathies.

My favorite, however, is "You can't hug a child with nuclear arms." Sorry to disappoint gang, but nuclear arms were designed to blow the socialism out of commies, not hug children. Try building some upper body strength and hugging a child with human arms--it's much more rewarding. And if your arms are nuclear, well, what the heck. After all what's a few rads among friends?

•Guilty White Liberals

The white wine and brie crowd. The ultimate social faux pas for these types would be to refer to Bishop Desmond Tutu as a "negro." They're more concerned with outward appearances than anything. The guilty white liberal is the type who supports busing as long as it doesn't affect Chip or Muffy.

One of the most irritating quirks these liberals have is to use chic new designations when referring to minorities as a means of showing their "solidarity" with oppressed peoples.

Take the term "Native American" for example. I've spoken with Indians before and never once have I heard them use the term "Native American" in reference to themselves or their people. As a matter of fact, they tend to identify with their particular tribe more than some great amorphous mass of "Native Americans."

Sure, Indians were here first, but let's do something to help them solve some of their real problems rather than just pay lip-service to the fact they beat us here.

Well, as you might have guessed, the list isn't nearly complete, but it's a start. Now that I've positively identified some things that tick me off maybe the ol' BP will go down. Now, if I can just keep from watching Dan Rather. Or Alan Alda. Or Phil Donohue. Or Jane....

Wow Powwow

EDITOR: I would like to express my thanks to the Kyi-yo Club and the Indian community of Montana for allowing me to attend the Powwow Saturday night. Never having experienced an Indian celebration or gathering before, I was very excited to be seeing such beauty in the dancing, outfits and the proud people themselves. My four-year-old daughter also enjoyed herself, and I am appreciative the public was invited to experience such a beautiful event.

Perform Janie!

EDITOR: Like a dog tired of having its chain jerked, I too must respond to an annoying pest. Janie Sullivan's recent column attempting to link budget cuts to an anti-female conspiracy within the campus administration is nonsense. She seems to interpret every issue, irrespective of its true nature, as being a conflict between oppressed women and their brutish, male masters. I have grown weary of her drivel.

Just like any other special-interest group (e.g. MontPIRG, College Republicans, etc.), feminists distort the issues by advancing a highly biased interpretation of any given set of facts. The real weakness of the feminists' movement, however, lies in their misperception that all humans are equal. Differences among individuals are manifold; intellectual, emotional, physical, and biological evidence simply overwhelms the feminist's contention that we are all equipped the same; and to build a platform based on this specious idea cannot possibly succeed. The founder ERA movement seems to bear this out.

It is rather the intrinsic (as opposed to the contrived) inequalities, properly emphasized, that will bear fruit for the "feminist" cause which in fact should not be considered "feminist" as both men and women, if one considers the two to be part of the same species, are equally affected by the state of the human condition. Maternity issues are valid, as are many economic issues related to the distaff-side, but Sullivan's charge that the university's proposed cuts are discriminatory against women is bullshit.

The affected programs, possibly excepting Music, lie on the periphery of the university's purview. This is supposed to be a Liberal Arts college with certain attached professional schools. The vital programs essential to that identity will survive; those less important, regardless of the gender of their students, may not.

If Sullivan's theory had even a modicum of merit, then Missoula's extension of MSU's School of Nursing, which trains mostly females for a service-oriented occupation, would also be on the chopping block. Ditto for the Elementary Ed Department. Both are not. Furthermore, many Liberal Arts programs (such as English) wherein women comprise a majority of the students would also be threatened to a similar degree as are the programs in question. They are not.

Doonesbury

I suggest that Sullivan take the chip off her shoulder and realize that the real problem is a self-induced persecution complex, a condition shared by not only feminists, but by sundry other special-interest groups who perceive themselves to be under siege by conspiratorial ogres bent on oppressing everything and everyone who is not white, male, and rich. Taking responsibility for one's own shortcomings and accepting a less-than-Utopian world with equanimity (but not necessarily with perfect Stoicism) builds character and motivates people to ever-higher levels of personal achievement. Constantly searching for a scapegoat is in itself self-limiting, self-defeating, and the very stuff of losers. For one who waxes philosophical from the soapbox of the "non-traditional" and therefore more experienced student, Sullivan espouses a particularly naive and sophomoric ideology. Younger students deserve better from their more seasoned counterparts. Do not complain Ms. Sullivan, perform!

World's contrast intrigues UM professor

By Tricia Peterson
Kalmin Contributing Reporter

When Katherine Weist was growing up on a farm in Springfield, Ohio, she used to imagine what it would be like to live in distant countries.

And when she was 13 years old she went to the National Cathedral School for Girls in Washington, D.C., but she didn't fit in well and remembers feeling most comfortable with the foreign students.

"I tend to seek out and enjoy contrast," she says today.

At age 49, Weist is a University of Montana professor, anthropologist and mother who has enjoyed the contrasts of living in Korea, Nigeria and on an Indian reservation.

She thinks it is important that she is able to relate to others what different lifestyles and countries are like.

"I most enjoy talking about and remembering Nigeria and Korea," she says.

John Domitrovich, a UM anthropology graduate student who has known Weist for more than 10 years says, "I gravitated to her classes because of her knowledge and the wide range of experiences she brings to a subject."

Weist is the first to say that she isn't one to shy away from experiences and challenges.

"I like difficulties. I like going to countries where I can't speak the language, and where I have to get by.

"I knew I'd never be happy as a housewife and thought I'd have to do something."

After attending the University of California at Berkeley, Stanford University, Ohio State University and Miami University, Weist taught at several California universities before coming to teach at UM in 1969.

Coming out of Berkeley in the 60s, she says she misses the active involvement of students.

"I don't sense a real commitment anymore. We're much more involved with our smaller lives.

"I like teaching and being in those countries where people were involved in the political process, but they still feel a commitment to it and to change."

She says this "commitment to change" and the "vocal, high-strung political activity of students" is one of the things she especially enjoyed while teaching in Korea and Nigeria.

In Nigeria she says she admired the students' active class participation and their ability to think about things in terms of how it would affect their own lives.

She says, "You could ask them about Plato and how it relates to them, and boy they would all have something to say about that one. And they would be able to talk about it in terms of their own situation."

"You don't see that in American students.

"Of course, I don't ask them how Plato relates either," she says with a smile.

Before coming to UM, Weist was awarded a grant to do field research on the Northern Cheyenne Reservation in southeastern Montana. So she went to live on the reservation for more than a year with her husband and 5-year-old son.

"We lived in a trailer court in the center of town, by the Post Office and a grocery store. I would watch people go by and observe their activities through the window.

"You know, being an anthropologist is kind of a strange activity.

"You're not really working, like when you're teaching or administrating; you're just this person who gets money for going around talking to people.

"So that's a really weird, weird activity.

"At least I see it as a strange activity, and I try to see it through their eyes."

Weist says she had the opportunity to observe the people of the community almost every day.

"My son attended the Head Start school on the reservation, and after getting him off to school in the mornings, I'd work out in the community with a translator, visiting families and collecting genealogies.

"On the weekends we attended many powwows.

"You see, on the reservation in the 60s the Vietnam War was going on, so a whole series of these honorary dances and feasts were held in honor of the military."

Ten years later, after living on the reservation, teaching at UM and receiving a postdoctorate at the Smithsonian Institution, Weist went to Seoul, Korea, on a Fulbright Lectureship to teach at Seoul National University in 1979.

"I really only taught there for three weeks because, boy, they shut those schools down fast with the president's assassination and all the rioting."

Her sons, now 22 and 16, went with her to Korea and she says, "It's part of the life — you always take your children with you."

Weist feels that it is important to have a child along when doing field work because "they perceive women as mothers, and so it put me in the same situation with the women there."

After returning to UM, she became involved with what one colleague calls "her thousands of committees."

She also has served as a University general adviser, vice chairwoman of the Executive Committee of the Faculty Senate and chairwoman of the anthropology department.

Dr. Frank Bessac, professor of anthropology and a long-time associate, says, "She played an important role getting the Teachers' Union off the ground. She was more than a department representative."

Bessac says he attributes all her involvement to the fact that "by now people approach her and ask her to be on different committees because she has a reputation for working hard and being fair."

Weist says, "Certain people on campus are more committed to teaching or to research. I, myself, like committees for the personal interaction. I like to work with people.

"Besides, I usually take on things that I really want to do, or believe in, and it's really not that hard.

"I used to be a workaholic, but after my divorce I thought, 'Hey, you've spent so much time racing around and where did it get you?'

"So I take things easier now.

"It's been a real conflict for me being drawn not only to teaching over the last number of years, but also to carrying out my research obligations. Plus with my home and family — and the family broke apart with all that."

Bessac describes Weist as "demanding of herself."

"She really tries her damndest," he says, in handling all her different activities and roles.

This past fall Weist returned again to UM after spending a year in Calabar, Nigeria on a Montana-Calabar faculty exchange program.

Her 16-year-old son went with her to Nigeria and she says, "I know he was as fascinated with it as I was.

"I asked him the other day if he still thought a lot about Nigeria and he said, 'No, not so much anymore, but I'd like to go back."

Weist says she found it difficult to be in Nigeria when all the relations with America and South Africa were being played up in the news, and with the lack of commitment to anti-apartheid.

"I sometimes feel ashamed to be American, or angry at foreign politics, when I'm overseas."

Still, she loves being in other countries, especially those that are very different.

"I find other countries extremely exciting. I like the way other countries live outside.

"Their lives are more open to view. People work on the streets and children play in the streets.

"We live inside and you don't get a good view.

"I like unsophisticatedness. I grew up on a farm."

She explained her disappointment at not yet receiving a letter to go back to Nigeria and do research this summer.

"I still have other goals in mind," she says.

"I'd like to join the Peace Corps because I feel a real commitment to doing something, and trying to give back what's been given to me.

"The best way to do that is to work with the change process.

"I'd also like to get back to the community level that I like being involved with."

But for the time being, Weist is staying at home with her sons, a student who rents a room, a son's friend who is "like a son," and two dogs and two cats.

"I've found it's real important for me to have lots of people running through my house," she says.

Weist says she feels more comfortable today with teaching than she once did, for she doesn't have to "struggle and struggle" as much with it.

She says anthropology opened up new areas of exploration to her and now she thinks that "what's most important in my teaching or in my lifestyle is that it's an avenue or a way that I can relate to people what I see, and what I think is going on in the larger world out there.

"I'm just kind of a translator to somebody else of that world.

"Now, how I get to be a translator, or why I'm a translator, is a whole other question."

UM budget cuts causing stress, Borgmann says

By Melody Perkins
Kaimin Reporter

Proposed cuts in the University of Montana budget are putting professors under "extraordinary stress," a UM philosophy professor said Wednesday.

Albert Borgmann said the state is showing "witting or unwitting contempt" for the UM professors by denying them "academic freedom," that is—decent wages, a reasonable work place and the security of tenure.

Using the UM professors as an example of how people suffer from stress caused by "dissatisfaction with the common order," Borgmann delivered his lecture, the last in the Stress Lecture Series, in the Botany Building.

Forty UM students, faculty members and Missoula residents attended the lecture, which was sponsored by the UM Wellness Center.

The university administration is part of the common order, Borgmann said. The common order prevents professors of such disciplines as classics and philosophy from enjoying the rewards that medical and law professors receive from the public, he said.

He said extraordinary stress is the only "honorable and legitimate" feeling to express frustration with the common order.

Professors may develop contempt for an unappreciative common order, he said.

An individual can reduce stress resulting from the conflict between himself and society by clarifying his social position and developing a "focal practice," Borgmann said.

A focal practice is an activity that is "mindful, leisurely and bodily," he said. He suggested gardening, music, arts, hiking or sports, as long as the individual doesn't do them for money or competition.

Individuals "can draw the strength to change the common order" from their focal practices, he said. Changing the common order will eliminate extraordinary stress, he said.

Borgmann said questions asking where the blame for stress should rest are questions of morality because they deal with "concern for the common order," his definition of morality.

Logger Olympics this weekend

By Verina E. Palmer
Kaimin Reporter

University of Montana students are oiling up their logging boots and sharpening their crosscut saws in preparation for the annual Logger Olympics at the University of Montana this weekend.

Logger Olympics are collegiate competitions of old-time logging practices such as crosscut sawing, ax chopping, and pole climbing, said Wendy Wedum, coordinator of the event Wednesday.

College teams from Idaho, Washington, Oregon, and Flathead Valley Community College will also participate in the Logger Olympics, Wedum said. This year's event will draw about 35 contestants, she added.

Among the scheduled events are:

•Double-buck crosscut saw event—teams of two cut through 15-to 17-inch pieces of wood with a 6-foot saw.

•Pole climb—men climb 50-foot poles and women climb 30-foot poles using ropes and special climbing spurs.

•Birling—two people run on a log in water while trying to knock each other off the log.

•Ax throwing and chopping—axes are thrown at targets 20 feet away and contestants try to chop blocks of wood in the fastest time or with the fewest hits.

•Suicide logger—a four-event logger marathon for men and three-event marathon for women.

Men and women with the highest scores will receive gift certificates for a pair of logging boots, Wedum said.

The Logger Olympics will be held Friday and Saturday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. between the UM Golf Course and Dornblaser field on South Avenue.

As a former head of the White House Secret Service detail, JERRY PARR was in charge of security for Presidents Reagan and Carter, as well as leading assignments for the safety of over 50 foreign officials including Emperor Hirohito, Queen Elizabeth, King Hussein, King Juan Carlos, Chancellor Willy Brandt, Yasser Arafat and Abba Eban.

PARR, who resigned the Secret Service in 1985 after more than a 20 year affiliation, has earned a reputation as the foremost expert on terrorism in the Western world.

Throughout his Secret Service career, PARR received dozens of commendations including Presidential Rank Award, the Silver Award (the highest award of the Secret Service), and the Exceptional Service Award from the Treasury Department (its highest award).

Terrorism is an ever present threat to our security as a nation. Fortunately we haven't been victims of its violence yet, but many experts agree that it is only a matter of time. The shadow of terrorism and violence is creeping toward America's shores, which is why JERRY PARR is here to help us keep them from invading yours.

In Brief

LADY GRIZ SIGN TRACKSTERS. Two high school standouts have signed national letters-of-intent to compete for the University of Montana women's track team, head coach Dick Koontz announced yesterday.

The pair are Kim Tivey of Missoula's Big Sky high and Terri Rogers from Hanover, Mass.

Tivey is among the state leaders in the 100, 200 and 400-meter dashes as well as the long and triple jumps. She is the defending state AA champion in the triple jump and holds the Western Divisional record of 38-2.

Koontz said Tivey was probably one of the best athletes in the state and will likely be used in the two jumping events next season.

Rogers will compete in the distance events in track and cross country at Montana.

She won the state championship in the two-mile as a junior at Notre Dame Academy and was a member of the state all-scholastic team in cross country.

GREAT FALLS WRESTLER SIGNED. Jeff Haskel, a 158-pound wrestler from Great Falls' C.M. Russell high, has accepted a wrestling scholarship from the University of Montana, head coach Scott Bliss announced yesterday.

Haskel is a two-time state runner-up and compiled a record of 80-14 while at CMR.

GOOD NAMED ATHLETE OF THE MONTH. Junior track standout Paula Good has been named the Domino's Pizza Outstanding Woman Athlete at the University of Montana for the month of April.

Good, a sprinter from Fort Benton, won the 100-meter dash in the Montana Invitational and the 200 dash at the University of Washington Invitational during the month. She also ran the anchor leg of Montana's victorious 400 and 1,600 relay teams in both meets.

Good, school record holder in the 100, is a pre-physical therapy major.

Math

Elementary Functions, 121, is being replaced by two courses because students and faculty have complained that one quarter is not enough time to teach the material in the five-credit course, Yale said. Math Professor Johnny Lott agreed with Yale saying that together, the replacement courses College Algebra and Trigonometry and Transcendental Functions will be worth six credits.

Spreading the same material over two courses will be "much gentler, more humane" on the students, Yale said. Also some students enter UM who already know college algebra, but not trigonometry, Yale said, and the new courses will allow those students to skip the algebra.

The two courses that will not be replaced next year are Math 106 and 109, which are calculus survey courses. The courses have been cut because they were set up as general interest courses of what was not a general interest subject, Lott said, who sat on the math department committee that suggested the changes. Students will get a better education by taking the regular calculus courses, he said.

The department is developing two different series of calculus for the 1987-88 year, Yale said. One will offer applied calculus for departments and schools, such as biology and business, that require only one year of calculus. Traditional calculus will also be offered for students who will take higher math courses.

By offering a fewer variety of courses the department can offer each course more often and students should have less scheduling conflicts with math classes, Yale said. However, the classes will still be limited to 35 students each, he said.
