Carter calls Reaganomics and Middle East major U.S. problems

By Kevin Twidwell

Kaimin Senior Editor

The permanent consequences of Reaganomics is the United States' most serious domestic problem, while the turmoil in the Middle East poses the greatest threat to international security, former president Jimmy Carter said Monday.

Carter said at a press conference at the University of Montana that the largest budget and trade deficits suffered by the United States as a result of President Reagan's economic policies will have a lasting effect on the country.

The effects can clearly be seen in the agriculture sector by declining farm prices, he said.

Reagan's policies have favored agribusiness while the family farm has been hurt by high interest rates, the strong U.S. dollar and the high federal deficit.

Carter was on campus to speak at the 19th Mansfield Lecture in International Relations.

On foreign issues, Carter said the Middle East is a threat to international security because of the battle lines drawn in the region by the United States and the Soviet Union.

The United States sides with Israel while the Soviets are committed to protecting Syria, he said, adding that world peace is endangered if the situation is allowed to "fester."

Moral obligation lies with people, Carter says

By Dave Fenner

Kaimin Contributing Reporter

The citizens of the United States must determine the morality of their government's foreign policy, former President Jimmy Carter told nearly 5,100 people in Harry Adams Field House Monday night.

"What we demand is what our nation will be," Carter said as he delivered the Nineteenth Mansfield Lecture in International Relations.

"If we feel that our own government has not espoused in a courageous, tenacious, active, persistent way, a commitment to peace

"If we believe that our nation is not the champion of human rights on earth, if we believe that our nation is not constantly struggling for the control of nuclear weapons, if we believe that our nation is not doing everything that it can to strengthen international law, to work in harmony with others of a like philosophical commitment, then we are not fulfilling our duties as a human being, as a citizen of the greatest nation on earth."

Carter's speech, "Morality and American Foreign Policy: Are They Incompatible?" was the keynote address of a two-day conference titled Ethics and Public Affairs: The Search for a Moral Vision in Foreign Policy.

Carter said militarily, economically and politically, the United States is the most powerful country in the world.

"In that sense of strength or security we can afford to be generous," he said. "We can afford to search out ways when we don't suffer, but where both we and others can benefit or prosper."

And that is in the quest for worldwide peace, he said. "I think our nation should use its persistent, courageous, constant effort to nurture every seed of peace, and to bring warring nations together."

A large portion of Carter's speech was dedicated to human rights. He said a measure of the United States' morality and ethics is "how fervent we are as champions of basic human rights."

"Human rights is not something like apple pie or motherhood or the Fourth of July," Carter said. "Human rights can cut like a razor blade, because it touches a sensitivity of tortured human beings, people who are being persecuted, who don't have the right to vote or to move or to assemble or to own property or to walk freely or to live in their homes without interruption; people that are arrested without cause, people that are imprisoned without trial, who are tortured in prison, who

Habbe's budget plan said to threaten academic programs

By Kevin McRae

Kaimin Reporter

Acting University of Montana President Donald Habbe's plans for budget cuts could threaten the school's academic programs, UM faculty members said Monday.

Habbe gave the Board of Regents on Friday a plan that would eliminate $830,000 from next year's UM budget by laying off faculty members, leaving some of next year's vacant faculty positions unfilled and reducing the salaries of those faculty members who fill vacant positions.

The reductions are called "vacancy savings."

Tom Roy, social work professor and chairman of the Faculty Senate, said Monday that not filling positions of departing faculty members would "eat away at academic programs."

Reducing the number of instructors "erodes" the quality of an academic institution, he said, and the students are negatively affected by the resulting decrease in course offerings.

UM has used vacancy savings in budgeting for years, he said, adding that he wonders how much longer the school can survive cutting faculty members.

Habbe's vacancy savings proposal is part of $18 million budget-cutting plan he created to show where UM could survive a 5 percent cut in state funding next year.

The Legislature will determine in a June special session if cuts are necessary.

Habbe told the regents that his proposed cuts do not call for program elimination but are instead balanced throughout the university.

The acting president said his recommendations are based partly on the fact that a new UM president "ought to have maximum opportunity for setting the course for the university for the upcoming period."

But foreign language associate professor Maureen Curnow said she is disappointed Habbe did not take a more "vigorous plan" instead of leaving decisions to the next UM president.

Habbe has more knowledge of UM's financial situation than could any incoming president, she said, adding

Carter's vision sadly remains unfulfilled

Jimmy Carter is a visionary, one whose worldview is unfortunately not shared by the majority of his countrymen.

Editorial

His vision, outlined during his Mansfield lecture, details a moral foreign policy that would call for worldwide equity — economic and political, elimination of human rights violations and the minimization of the use of military force. However, the more he talked about the morally upright and decent role the United States should play in foreign policy the more apparent it became that his vision is unattainable because Carter is an atypical American.

Intelligent, patient, compassionate. Carter is concerned about the long-term good. Sadly, these characteristics are not common to the majority of Americans. The majority of Americans are concerned only with short-term gratification for both themselves and the United States and fail to possess a world vision for peace.

During the lecture, Carter said "what we demand is what our nation will be." During his presidency, Carter demanded patience from America when he forced them to wait 444 days for the Iranian hostage crisis to be resolved. Americans responded with outrage and disrespect because he refused to use force to obtain the hostages' release in fear that it would endanger the 54 Americans. As a result, Ronald Reagan was elected by an unprecedented landslide in 1980 because America has a cowboy, gung-ho mentality not a pious, patient one.

However, Americans are nationalistic, action-oriented, and an impatient lot. One example of America's desire for guts and glory is Libya. When Carter was president, he too was faced to deal with Moammar Khadafy. Khadafy was allowing hijacked planes to land in Libya and was hailing the hijackers as heroes. Carter and several other Western leaders wrote Khadafy a letter stating that if he continued to allow hijacked planes to land in Libya and did not turn the terrorists over to the proper authorities, the U.S. and the other Western nations would not allow Libyan planes to land in their countries nor would they land planes in Libya. Khadafy stopped. Americans were happy but not ecstatic. The action was not dramatic or television-like enough. But when Reagan decides to bomb Libya back to the stone age, Americans go crazy with patriotism and Reagan's popularity escalates.

Until the majority of Americans are able to comprehend Carter's vision — one in which morality and justice are the basis for decision-making — that vision will never be seen.

Coping with grad students

Pretty soon, a bunch of graduate students will leave UM, degrees in hand, in search of life after higher education. What a relief. Graduate students are a constant source of frustration for an undergrad like me.

It seems like whenever you need to see a professor during office hours, there's some graduate student in there. While you wait, mulling over really important questions, like whether to drop a class or switch majors, the grad student is in there BSing.

I've heard grad students in professors' offices talking about such trivial things as politics, philosophy and other grad students.

Unfortunately, Interdisciplinary BS is a required class for graduate students in all programs. They are forced to practice the art of BSing on their professors, and on each other, before they're allowed to leave with a degree.

Another class they're required to take is Brutality 501. In this course, students learn how to evaluate (read bludgeon) each other's work.

Undergraduate writing workshops, for example, are more like group therapy sessions. Participants frame their criticism with phrases like, "What I hear you saying is..." or "Something's really coming through here."

But graduate workshops are more like Teamster contract negotiations. People frame their criticism with remarks like, "The reason this is the worst story I've ever read in my life is..." or "Gee, I thought we weren't supposed to bring in first drafts."

Grad students are also required to take a Parties Seminar. In this seminar, they apply the skills they've learned in BSing and Brutality.

I haven't seen my husband, who is a grad student, in two weeks. He leaves me notes between parties. Just for fun, I critique his notes and leave them in his cereal bowl in the morning.

It's obvious that a lot of graduate students don't know how to behave themselves. What's really annoying, though, is the preferential treatment they get.

While I'm home studying for finals or midterms, the graduate student is down at the Mo Club. Do you realize these people rarely have to take tests?

I have a grad student friend who is more intimate with the bartender at the Eastgate than with his own roommate. He's current on all the lives in Dallas, Dynasty and Hotel. Why? Because he's not an undergraduate, a person with real schoolwork.

If you're like me, and you find that your partner and most of your friends are grad students, there is help.

Undergrads Anonymous offers support to people who have to listen to the following rationalizations from grads:

"But this is a GRADUATE seminar. It's 10 times harder than YOUR class." (Often used by grads to get the other person to make dinner while s/he studies).

"But I HAVE to go to this party." (This is an addiction, and should be handled as such. Tell the grad student: you don't have to go anywhere. It's your ego that's telling you where to go.)

Training in reality therapy is also offered, to help the grad's friends and families cope with life after degree. ("But I'm a grad student." "No one cares anymore, honey.")

Aside from learning these valuable coping devices, graduates of Undergrads Anonymous are then eligible to join a graduate group for friends and partners of graduates. They can also legitimately refer to themselves as grad students—if they want to.

Deborah O'Harra is a junior in English.

EDITOR: Ms. Anspach displays exceptional writing ability in her letter regarding the performance of the BYU Theatre Ballet Company. This skill will serve her well in her chosen profession as a lawyer. One would hope, however, that by the time she passes the bar she will also have gained equal proficiency in gathering accurate information — especially before she launches any more attacks on the beliefs of those who differ from her. It's understandable that she portrays an almost total ignorance of Mormon philosophy concerning the role of women since she apparently learned all she knows on the subject from one hearing of one so-called "sappy song."

Even if her understanding of Mormon beliefs was correct (which it is not), one must be astonished at the "suffocating narrowness" evidenced in her letter. Ms. Anspach's implication that every group or speaker that comes to campus must represent what "most people" think suggests that she needs to reacquire herself with the definition and spirit of the word "university." Would she be "shocked, dismayed and fully angered" if the visiting choir from Notre Dame performed "Ave Maria" simply because "most people" on campus don't share the Catholic view of Mary? Would she label such a performance an "ugly little deception sneaked dishonestly into an otherwise fine program?"

Religious intolerance and blatant prejudice are always distressing, but in a budding lawyer...

Carter: Center will ensure Mansfield's legacy

By Tim Huneck

The Maureen and Mike Mansfield Center will enable Mike Mansfield's influence on foreign policy to continue far into the future, former President Jimmy Carter said at the center's dedication yesterday.

Relationships between nations bordering the Pacific will become increasingly important, Carter said, and by providing for the study of both ethics and foreign policy the center will help build those relations.

Ethics and foreign policy are compatible, Carter said, and Mike Mansfield has spent his public life trying to bring the two together. The center is a fitting tribute to Mansfield, he said.

Carter, who appointed Mansfield ambassador to Japan, said he appointed him "not just to represent our country in Japan but to represent our country throughout the Pacific Basin."

Carter said he asked Mansfield to counsel other U.S. ambassadors in the region. The ambassadors were all competent, but they didn't have the scholarly background or quiet, effective temperament of Mansfield, he said.

Dedicated to upholding two of Mansfield's ideals — ethics in public affairs and improved Asian relations — the UM Mansfield Center is primarily a graduate program for students planning a career in public service. But the center also offers undergraduate courses in Asian studies and public ethics and sponsors an annual conference dedicated to either Asian studies or public ethics.

Yesterday's dedication was part of this year's conference.

Mike Mansfield and his wife, Maureen, are both

UM graduates. Before being named ambassador, Mansfield served 10 years in the U.S. House of Representatives and 24 years in the Senate. For an unprecedented 16 years he was Senate Majority Leader.

Rather than honoring Mansfield for past accomplishments, Mansfield Center Director Paul Lauren said dedicating the center in Mansfield's honor represents a beginning of the application of his principles.

It provides an inspiration to continue working toward Mansfield's goals of achieving ethics in foreign policy, he said. Open since last July, the center only recently moved into its home on the fourth floor of the Maureen and Mike Mansfield Library.

Joining Carter in dedicating the center yesterday were Governor Ted Schwinden, UM acting President Donald Habbe and Lauren.

that she is disappointed the cuts were "spread through vacancy savings."

Curnow is a member of the University Planning Council, which recommended to Habbe large cuts in non-academic programs and few cuts through vacancy savings.

Habbe solicited the advice of the council before attending the regents meeting.

But, his plan excluded several council recommendations, such as significant reductions in funding of intercollegiate athletics.

Planning Council member and journalism assistant professor Sharon Barrett said she is "disturbed" by Habbe's use of vacancy savings.

The plan could "cut into academic programs," she said, and is contrary to the planning council's suggestion that "peripheral" activities be eliminated before cutting academics.

Geography associate professor John Donahue, also a planning council member, said he was surprised to see the use of vacancy savings in Habbe's plan.

Besides the $830,000 in vacancy savings, additional proposals in the $18-million budget-cut plan are:

- Saving $326,000 by eliminating funds for a Master of Business Administration program in Billings and cutting related research activities.

- Cutting $224,000 from institutional support such as the UM Foundation, the controller's office, the personnel office and the purchasing office.

- Cutting $173,500 from student services with $65,000 coming from elimination of women's gymnastics, men's tennis and the golf team.

Motivator established in gridder's 22-21 loss to alumni

A motivator for the upcoming season has been established in the University of Montana football program, assistant coach Robin Pflugrad said yesterday.

After Saturday's 22-21 loss by the Griz to a team of UM alumni, Pflugrad said he thinks the team realized it has a "long" way to go.

He added, "That's with a capital 'L'."

The alumni game was the last of the 21-day spring workouts.

"It should be a motivator through the summer months," Pflugrad said of the loss, adding that the team's opening game at Nevada-Reno is another big motivator.

"We were intimidated by the alumni," he said, and added that Reno plays the same type of intimidating game.

As for the team's accomplishments during spring practice, he said, "We're right on the edge of the hill. We, the staff, have to push them over."

He said players will work on "a lot of little things" during the summer and return in late August or early September for two-a-day workouts.

The UNR game is Sept. 20 in Reno.

In Brief

RONAN WRESTLER SIGNS AT UM. A two-time high school state wrestling champion from Ronan has accepted an athletic scholarship to compete at the University of Montana, the UM sports information office announced yesterday.

Mickey Cheff, who will graduate from high school this spring, will join the Grizzlies next fall and is expected to compete in the 177-pound class.

Cheff won the state class A championship his sophomore and juniors years and placed second this season.

He compiled a record of 84-1-1 during the past three seasons.

Cheff has a 3.10 grade point average in high school and will major in business at UM.

TWO STUDENTS PLACE IN KARATE. Two members of the University of Montana Collegiate Karate Club placed in the top four Saturday in Billings at the Parks Invitational Karate and Tae-Kwon-Do meet.

Jim Green won the green belt division and Vance Sherman placed fourth in the black belt class.

Americans said to treasure conflicting values

By Melody Perkins
Kaimin Reporter

Americans treasure values that are in direct conflict with each other, Garry Wills, political journalist, said Monday in the first lecture of the 1986 Maureen and Mike Mansfield Center conference.

Wills said American values revolve around four basic conflicts: religion versus secularism, individualism versus conformity, conservatism versus change and government by ideals versus government by compromise.

Wills spoke to about 500 people in the Montana Theater of the University of Montana Performing Arts/Radio-TV Building.

He has written several books and is a professor of American culture and public policy at Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill.

When the framers of the Constitution separated church from state, they created the first secular government in history, Wills said. Yet, America is one of the most believing, pious nations in the world, he said.

Hence, conflicts arise between separation of church and state, he said. For example, the advocates of prayer in public schools point to the U.S. congressional chaplain who leads the congressmen in prayer, as justification for their cause, Wills said.

The solution to this church and state conflict is to remove the chaplain from Congress, not to put prayer into public schools, he said.

Separation of church and state benefits American religion by keeping it free of any politics and by allowing its leaders to work effectively outside the political arena, he said.

While Americans perceive themselves as a nation of individualists, most are very conformist, Will said.

Alluding to the settling of the western United States, Wills said the early communities were governed by strict vigilance committees, not by individual sheriffs. People were conditioned to group response rather than individual actions, he said.

Capitalism, which relies on division of labor and a fragmented work force, has trained people to prefer job security to adventure, he added.

Wills also said that American capitalists are often in conflict with "radicals" who want to change society. For example, he said, conservative businessmen blamed the racial riots of the 1960s on radical organizers.

But the businessmen actually caused the unrest by advertising to ghetto blacks consumer luxuries they couldn't afford. The blacks rioted to change their socio-economic position, he said.

Lastly, Wills said Americans face conflict between the ideals of the Constitution and the reality of political practices. The American political parties have avoided fragmentation by expanding their platforms to accommodate many political beliefs, he said, even at the cost of becoming "shapeless."

Politicians solve problems by compromising between factions, he said. When no compromise can be reached, war may ensue, he said.

Missoulians to join hands in fight against hunger

By Eric Troyer
Kaimin Reporter

Missoulians will have a chance to join hands against hunger Friday.

"Hands Across Missoula," organized by the Missoula Hunger Coalition, is an event to increase awareness about hunger in Montana and to raise money to fight the problem.

Event organizers hope to create a human chain by having volunteers hold hands from the University of Montana's Main Hall to the Missoula County Courthouse at 200 W. Broadway.

The route of the human chain will go across campus to University Avenue, west on University Avenue, north on Higgins Avenue and west on Broadway to the courthouse.

The event will last 10 minutes during lunch hour, from 12:15 p.m. to 12:25 p.m.

At 12:35 p.m., a forum to discuss hunger in Missoula and Montana will be held outside the courthouse.

Dan Kemmis, former speaker of the house for the Montana legislature, Ann Mary Dussault, county commissioner, and Stella Jean Hansen, state representative from Missoula, will be the featured speakers.

"Hands Across Missoula" gives Missoulians a chance to participate in "a statement about domestic hunger," said Pat Ortmeyer, UM student and one of the organizers.

"Hands Across Missoula" is patterned after "Hands Across America," a national event in which organizers hope to create a human chain stretching from the east coast to the west coast this Sunday.

The purpose of the national event is to raise money to fight hunger in America. Montana will not be included in the national event.

The Missoula event will be held on Friday because many people will probably leave for the three-day weekend that follows, Ortmeyer said.

By Monday about 1,200 people had volunteered to participate in the event and about 400 more are needed to complete the chain, she said.

The organization has already collected about $400, Ortmeyer said. However, organizers haven't set a financial goal because the main goal of the event is to make people aware of the hunger situation in Missoula and Montana, she said.

Funds collected from the event will be distributed evenly to the Food Bank, the Poverello Center and the Senior Nutrition Program.

People can donate at the UM Oval Friday or can send donations to "Hands Across Missoula" in care of the Ark, a campus ministry center. People interested in volunteering should call the Food Bank at 549-0543 or the Ark at 728-2537 or 549-8816.

are murdered by their own government.

"This happens quite frequently ... and for the most powerful nation on earth to stand mute in the face of known human rights violations is a violation itself of basic moral and ethical standards.

"Our country should be recognized by all people on earth as the foremost champion of human rights. That's a measurement of morality and ethics."

Concerning terrorism, Carter said, "I'm a little reluctant to talk about it but I will."

He said that in dealing with terrorism the president has to conduct an analysis of the terrorism. Carter said a president has to ask himself: "What is it that a terrorist wants? How can we apply moral standards, ethical standards, to dealing with known criminals?"

Carter then offered his answer. "First of all you don't want to reward criminals by making the criminal equal to its victim," he said. For example, he said, "In a public debate, you don't want to have an equal debate between a terrorist and the President of the United States, or in our country, a criminal and the chief of police or the governor, or the mayor."

Secondly, he said, "When someone commits a crime and you desire to punish them, you want to make sure that that person is guilty before they're punished. And also, in delivering the punishment, you want to make sure the punishment only afflicts those who are guilty, not innocent people.

"You don't want to respond to a crime by violating international law yourself."

Press conference

He said the only way to solve the problems in the area is to "address the Palestinian problem." He said later that the Palestinians must have a homeland and be able to choose their own leaders.

"My hope is that our country will play a more vigorous role in the Middle East in the future," he said.

Carter also spoke at a question-and-answer session to about 500 students in the Montana Theater and an additional 300 watching him on a large screen television in an adjoining room.

At the session Carter criticized Reagan's decision to bomb Libya last month. He said the bombing made a hero of Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy to many Arabs. Before the bombing, he said, Khadafy was considered an outcast in the Arab world.

He said the best way to counter terrorism is to deal with it privately. Carter said that terrorists should not be given the publicity they seek.

"Terrorists want publicity and status," he said. They want to be viewed as equals to world leaders and should not be allowed to do so, he added.

Carter also disagreed with Reagan's Central American policies.

He said the resemblance between what Reagan says is going on in Nicaragua and what is actually happening is "very slight."

The U.S.-supported Contras, he said, have no popular support in Nicaragua and will not win the war against the Sandinistas.

Carter said he was convinced of this after touring northern Nicaragua in a stationwagon driven by Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega and after visiting "a wide variety of opposition forces."

He added that the Sandinistas have been blaming Nicaragua's economic problems on the Contras and have been using the war as an excuse to violate Nicaraguans' human rights.

When asked to assess his tenure as president, Carter said he "is quite at ease" with his place in history.

He said his administration had many successes and a few failures. "When I made a mistake, I never blamed anyone else," he added.

"My major mistake was not getting elected," he said. "I never claimed to be a good politician."
