City adopts university-area permit-parking plan

By Melody Perkins
Kaimin Reporter

The City Council adopted a permit-parking ordinance Monday that prevents non-residents from parking in a 28-block area surrounding the University of Montana.

About 45 people attended the meeting, including four ASUM representatives.

The council approved the ordinance 8 to 3 with Councilman Fred Rice abstaining because of a possible conflict of interest.

Rice is a partial owner of Freddy's Feed & Read, 1221 Helen Ave., located within the parking district's boundaries.

The ordinance becomes effective Sept. 1. Only residents of the district are allowed to buy a $10 permit to park within the district, an L-shaped area bounded on the north by the Fifth Street alley, on the west by Hilda Avenue, on the south by the Evans Avenue alley and on the east by UM.

Anyone parking in the district without a permit on weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. will be fined $10. Residents can each buy two $5-guest permits.

Thirteen people spoke to the council about the ordinance during the "Comments from Citizens" segment of the meeting. A public hearing was held earlier in the quarter.

Paul Tuss, ASUM president, submitted a petition signed by 520 students who oppose the ordinance.

He said the petition accurately represents the UM student body's sentiment and urged council members to vote against the ordinance.

Vicki Cocchiarella, UM Staff Senate president who represents about 700 employees, also submitted a petition signed by about 120 employees who oppose the plan.

"We feel that because we've paid for the streets and live in the city, we should be allowed to park on the streets," she said.

After the meeting, Tuss said the ordinance is "a bad proposal," but added that ASUM has done its best to oppose the ordinance.

J.A. Parker, director of the UM Physical Plant, attended the meeting at Tuss' request.

He said UM has tried to increase its on-campus parking space, but university-area homeowners blocked two attempts to establish parking lots at 1514 Arthur Ave. and 700 Beckwith Ave.

Council members voting in favor of the ordinance said the university administration's refusal to handle the parking problem left them no choice but to approve the ordinance.

They also said the ordinance would make the area safer for pedestrians and children and would decrease the number of parking violations there.

Councilman Larry McLaughlin said,

"Obviously the university isn't going to handle the parking problem." The university laid the problem at the city's feet, he said, and the ordinance "is the only solution to this problem at this time."

Council members Al Sampson, Donna Shaffer and Bill Potts voted against the ordinance because it was not amended to expire after one year.

Sampson proposed a "sunset clause" that would have required the council to hold a public hearing on the ordinance June 1, 1987, and to do an in-depth study of its effectiveness. He said the June hearing would allow students and university personnel to testify about the ordinance.

The amendment was defeated by a 7 to 5 vote.

The council and the Parking Commission will review the ordinance Aug. 1, 1987, to consider its financial status and general effectiveness. It may be revised at that time.

KGB no longer using 'James Bond' tactics, defector says

By Kevin McRae
Kaimin Reporter

The Soviets' goal is to control the United States by instilling ideas destructive to capitalism into American society, former KGB agent Tomas Schuman said Monday night.

Speaking to about 200 people in the Underground Lecture Hall, Schuman said only 10 percent to 15 percent of KGB activity includes "James Bond" spies and "supersonic jets."

The rest of Soviet intelligence activities, he said, "has to do with your mind."

Destruction of the American citizen's "basic set of morals" is the job of the KGB, he said, and such destruction is caused partly by viewing Soviet activity as harmless.

Schuman, born in Moscow in 1939, defected from the Soviet Union in 1970 partly because he was "fed up" with the business of the KGB, he said.

He writes for Panorama, an American-Russian weekly newspaper published in Los Angeles.

He worked as a KGB agent for a Soviet press agency, which "had nothing to do with news," he said. It was designed to promote anti-capitalism propaganda in non-Communist nations, he added.

One way the Soviets influence American minds, he said, is by showing foreign visitors a false view of the Soviet Union.

Schuman said Soviet officials plan the tours of visiting American dignitaries to include staged festivals, visits with certain Soviet families, scenic tours of Russia and evenings with a lot of drinking.

"We bring people like Edward Kennedy to weddings that are pre-planned," he said, but they are not real weddings, "they are circuses."

The American officials "described as soberly thinking politicians" return to the United States with the idea that the Soviet Union is "not so bad," he said.

Schuman said the Soviets also introduce ideas destructive to capitalism by training foreign professors to teach students to hate the United States.

Once again, he said, such activity is not undercover espionage but open infiltration of ideas.

"We (Soviets) don't want the professor's secrets," Schuman said. "We want the minds of his students."

Then people wonder why foreign "students" blow up U.S. embassies and hijack airliners, Schuman added.

The Soviets do not want war with the United States, he said, because the United States is a supplier of Soviet technology.

"Why would they destroy the chicken that gives them the golden eggs?" he asked. "They want to control it and make it give them more golden eggs."

Schuman criticized the United States for supplying the Soviets with technology.

"The United States is the only country in history to help its enemy," he said. "Every screw and bolt and every computer chip that runs our tanks is subsidized by you."

Schuman praised the CIA, which helped him escape from Russia.

"The CIA has the moral right to do dirty tricks," he said. "The KGB must not shoot people but the CIA may TOMAS SCHUMAN, a former KGB agent, uses the Palestine Liberation Organization as an example of how he says the KGB turns reality upside down by using misinformation. He said Monday that 60 percent of PLO members are not Palestinian, they are not liberators but killers and the group cannot be considered organized because members are spread throughout the world.

Registration forms due

The last day to submit a course request form for advanced registration for Fall Quarter is Wednesday, June 4.

Course request forms will be accepted after that date, but will be considered late. A late form may hinder a student's chance of getting preferred courses.

The things some people say

The following is a collection of notable quotes from Spring Quarter.

"Tossing this in the river will be a primal scream therapy for me." — Lisa McCafferty, University of Montana art student, referring to a giant clay egg she built and dumped in the Clark Fork River for an art class. Lisa reasoned that the shell of this egg represented a repressive bond between her and her mama. Her classmates helped her crack this repression by chucking rocks at it while she swung a baseball bat at it. We still think you should see a doctor, Lisa.

I'd like to add "frosting on the sundae of satellite parking." — Ken Willett, UM safety and security manager, advocating the addition of Campus Drive to the Mountain Line bus routes to improve university parking. Sounds tasty. Now we know why he never comments.

"I came to the conclusion that other places might offer me a better opportunity to exercise my skills." — John Piquette, former UM food service director, referring to his resignation "for obvious reasons" after numerous disagreements with Auxiliary Services Director George Mitchell about the operation of the food service. That's an understatement.

"The mouth of a strange woman is a pit." — Sister Cindy Smock, evangelical college preacher, exhorting the sins of kissing a woman on the first date. I spit on your shoes.

"I don't believe in real organized long-term planning." — Robert Berdahl, UM presidential candidate, explaining that such planning can hinder immediate opportunities for financial gain. Real logical.

"First you find the terrorists and if you have blood on your mind, you hire the CIA's Health Adjustment Group." — Lester Foltos, UM history professor, explaining an alternative plan to the bombing of Libya which includes the use of the U.S. intelligence network to infiltrate and attack terrorist organizations. Good one.

"Floating dead things remind people of destruction." — Jeanne Francis, another art student, describing her clay sea creature thrown in the Clark Fork in order to "haunt a potential river polluter." Her logic escapes me.

"I saw physical conditions I was surprised at seeing in 1986 in a public institution of higher education." — Patricia Murphy, former UM education dean candidate, explaining why she refused the dean position. Murphy said that she was surprised at the conditions under which people are expected to work. Man have we got problems.

Student sin is "rebellion of authority, drunkenness, debauchery, decadence ... fornication, diabolical rock and roll music." — Brother Jed Smock, evangelical college preacher, ranting about the sorry state of college students. School is hell.

"It's ironic that a faculty member has to give an explanation for the administration." — Tom Roy, Faculty Senate chairman, pulling a punch at former UM President Neil Bucklew's contingency plan, when Acting UM President Donald Habbe was unable to explain why cutting the physical therapy program was included in Bucklew's plan. Indeed.

"I know the TA decision burns. If people feel it would be better to cut faculty positions instead of TAs, that's still an option." — Acting UM President Donald Habbe defending his contingency plan which includes cutting $100,000 from the teaching assistant program. Hmmm.

"You can give people money, but try to take it away and it's a whole different story." — Dan Henderson, ASUM business manager, making excuses for not rebudgeting. Economics 101, huh?

"Stress is what gives you the tension to hold yourself together, what gives you the energy to do something." — Kim Williams, Missoula author, speaking in a stress lecture series. Keep that in mind finals week, dudes.

Messes mark finals week

It's easy to tell that the dreaded Finals Week is approaching again. Evidence can be found in thousands of households across Missoula. From the outside, the first clue is an unmowed lawn.

Step inside and find empty pizza boxes, books and papers, piles of dirty laundry in the living room, books and papers, unopened mail and books and papers.

What used to be the kitchen table is now a giant desk. That's one reason you start eating pizza every night — you can eat on the floor; you don't have to worry about getting your notes out of order.

The TV is mute. You know when it's Thursday of Finals Week, because you can't watch Hill Street Blues.

Your parents start calling, because you haven't answered letters for weeks. You tell them you just couldn't bear the thought of writing anything else, after penning three papers that are due — you guessed it — Monday of Finals Week.

Sparkle Laundry starts calling, too. "Gee, we haven't seen you around here for awhile. You must have run out of clean clothes by now. Have you heard about our drop-off service?"

It is not uncommon for students to lose their sense of humor during Finals Week. The thought of wiping out your grade point average in one stroke tends to cast a pall on things that are potentially funny — like breaking your typewriter ribbon at 3 a.m. while typing the paper that's due at 10 a.m.

Or finding out that you'll have out-of-state visitors, who are to arrive just before you take your first final.

Forgetfulness often strikes students around Finals Week. Your mind is buried in rock formations, Elizabethan literature, the use and abuse of drugs, or whatever, and you forget things.

Forgetting what you went to the store for is one thing, but the other day, I actually forgot my youngest son's name. I called him by his brother's name, my brother's name, my husband's name and my other son's playmate's name before I actually got it right. My husband is just as bad. The other night, after rushing around, feeding the children and getting dressed to go out, he realized he had forgotten the time and place of the play we were going to see.

As things pile up around Finals Week, some people become neurotic. I'm one of them. The back porch, which has been unorganized for a couple of months now, suddenly drives me crazy.

My husband drinks the last of the coffee, while I'm the one who has to stay up until 1 a.m. to write a paper. I lunge at him, threaten divorce unless he goes to Grizzly Grocery RIGHT NOW and gets some.

Watching the normal people in my neighborhood out having fun in the sunshine, while I'm studying, evokes ungracious emotional responses in me.

What every student household needs as its inhabitants approach Finals Week is a little computerized voice that says, every twenty minutes or so, "It's almost over ... it's almost over ...."

The same computer could operate an outside P.A. system that would broadcast: "These people will mow the lawn, after Final Week...."

A grad's life

EDITOR: Dear Deborah O'Harra:

Typical grad student that I am, I woke up in a drunken stupor this morning (you remember grad students—they party ALL the time). When my head finally cleared, I read your recent article. My, what a healthy imagination you have! Small wonder you're in journalism. Let's set the record straight, shall we?

U of M has some 7,700 undergrads and 1,600 grad students. That's a high percentage of grads to undergrads. Because grad students often work with professors on major projects, professional papers, and research, we tend to spend a lot of time with them. They sometimes become our friends, as well as our advisors. As you pointed out we sometimes talk to our friends about "unimportant" things, such as politics. If you have a really IMPORTANT question (like, whether to drop a class or not), why don't you develop the common courtesy to do what grad students do—make an appointment with the professor or see him during his office hours. This works better than whining. "He's aaaaal-ways busy."

As for your editing course, Brutality 501, why not rename it Reality 501. You see, Deborah, most of what we write really stinks. We need others to cut our work to the bone, if we want it taken seriously. Edit and re-edit, that's reality.

You're right about one thing. We sure do party! In fact, we even party in our offices. Typically, we get here at 8 or 9 a.m. and party until 11 or 12 at night. Of course, we don't do any "real school-work" in our offices. Instead, we have chunks of fun writing papers, doing lab work, or preparing oral presentations for one of those easy grad seminars. Boy howdy, we have a good time!

There's also something called a "thesis," that most of us write. Take the amount of time you spent researching and writing your last term paper, multiply by 100, add stress and anxiety for spice, and you're half way there.

When we finally take a break, usually at the end of the quarter after our hard days of "partying" are done (and while you study for finals), we go to the Mo Club, a place where few undergrads dare to venture. "That's where all the old folks hang out."

Finally, there are the parties. Yes, we have to go to parties, because we have to take a break. Everyone needs a break—grads, undergrads, and professors. It's not an addiction, it's a chance to laugh and blow off a little steam. You really should try it.

So, before your next set of sweeping generalizations, why not walk around in your husband's shoes and discover the real pleasure of grad school, working your ass off 14 hours a day. I'm really sorry you have so much schoolwork to do, Deborah. Maybe you should take a lighter load next quarter or, better yet, a graduate seminar.

Clarification

EDITOR: In response to Kurt Llewellyn's May 28th comments concerning Campus Crusade for Christ's survey:

Campus Crusade for Christ's set as a goal for Spring Quarter to take the "National Collegiate Opinion Survey" with students in the dorms. The survey was compiled with help from George Gallup of Gallup Polls, thinking these would be pertinent questions to ask today's college students. The purpose of the survey was threefold:

1. To stimulate thinking in the areas of personal meaning, social relationships and religious significance.

2. To gain better understanding of the students' perspective in these areas to equip us in addressing these issues with programs and speakers.

3. To present compiled results to the Kaimin for possible publication as has been done on other campuses across the country.

We want to extend our apologies to those who felt threatened, coerced or tricked. That was not our purpose. We did not intend for any student to be unaware that this was sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ. Nor did we want to communicate in any way that we were representing the Kaimin. That Kurt's interviewer did not make this clear was unintentional and unfortunate.

Campus Crusade's purpose on the university campus is to be a resource to students for spiritual growth. We believe a personal relationship with Jesus Christ offers solutions to questions of meaning and purpose in life and we seek to provide opportunities for students to examine Christianity. Like any group on campus, we know that we have something to offer students, so we are assertive in our approach. Overzealousness, however, does not excuse lack of sensitivity or coercion into something one doesn't bargain for. We find most students have never heard a simple, clear presentation of what the New Testament says about knowing God personally. We try to provide this opportunity.

We hope this clarifies any misunderstandings. We want to thank those who participated.

Strike four

EDITOR: Miss Conroy:

I think that what we have here is a failure to communicate.

To begin with, I would like to express my shock and dismay concerning the initial article written about the "sculpture" class and its floating project. The 'contributing reporter' was misinformed, and misquoted several students in the class, in and out of context. Therefore, your editorial on which the article is based is null.

Error No. 1: The most obvious bit of misinformation was that it is a "sculpture" class. It is in fact a ceramics class, and several of the students are potters, not sculptors. Strike one.

Error No. 2: You seem to believe that the assignment was for "student sculptors (to do) their part to protest pollution of the Clark Fork River."

Doonesbury

BY GARRY TRUDEAU

BLOOM COUNTY

by Berke Breathed

Wrong. Our assignment (from Professor Dennis Voss, who was also quoted out of context) was to make a piece that floats. Each student, individually, decided whether to launch them in the river or not. A third of the class chose to float and to then retrieve them. Strike two.

Error No. 3: Professor Voss' quote, "If you have an urge to make a political message and you create an art object, that is taking a stand," did not apply to a protest of river pollution. In context, he was discussing several student's decisions to include peace messages in or on their pieces. Strike three.

Error No. 4: I quote, "(Lisa) joined in the fun with a baseball bat, bashing 'mom' to smithereens and throwing the bat in after." Quaint. First, the sculpture represented a wall between my mother and I that I was symbolically tearing down. Second, the baseball bat never touched the sculpture, let alone "bash" it. And ...you're out, Miss Conroy.

If you insist on utilizing misinformation in your tawdry pandering over the Clark Fork Coalition (which is a respectable and influential group, unlike it would seem the Kaimin these days,) then do it well. Beyond the outright lies that you wove into your narrow minded editorial, your comment for me to "See a doctor, Lisa," is close to libelous. I am seeking legal counsel.

This editorial is simply another (and another, ad infinitum...) example of the shabby journalism that has been spewing forth from the dank halls of the Kaimin offices. Why Brad Burt has as much copy space as he does I don't know, besides the possibility that you are attempting to become a sensationalist publication. There was a time when the Kaimin was interesting, informational, and witty. That was nearly four years ago. How it has sunk so low, so quickly, I cannot say.

UM students help kids cope

By Verina E. Palmer
Kaimin Reporter

For many University of Montana students, leaving home for college means leaving behind special relationships with younger brothers or sisters.

But some students at UM are filling that gap in their lives by volunteering as Big Brothers and Sisters for children from single-parent families.

About 42 percent of all volunteers at Missoula's Big Brothers and Sisters organization are UM students, Suzanne Winegart, a case worker and counselor there said.

Full-time Big Brothers and Sisters are matched with children and are required to commit to the program for one year, Winegart said. Part-time volunteers assist with children who have not yet found a match.

One young boy, Travis Standing Rock, wanted a UM football player to be his Big Brother. Ed Apostol, a junior in education and physical education, fit that description and was matched with Travis, 14, about 18 months ago.

Apostol said he became a Big Brother because he missed his two younger brothers who live in Olympia, Wash. The relationship benefits both, he said.

"I could help him out and he could help me out," Apostol said.

Travis was undisciplined and had difficulty in school when they met, Apostol said. But by talking with him and helping him study, Apostol said he's helped Travis gain morals and respect and get better grades in school.

"We've developed a lasting friendship," he said.

But other students have different reasons for wanting to be a Big Brother or Sister.

UM student Doug Baker, a junior in secondary education, said he became involved in the program because he came from a broken family and knows how it feels not to have a father-figure while growing up. He said he believes it's important to help other children in the same situation.

Baker's 7-year-old little brother, David, was very quiet when the two were matched last November. "Now he's really open — a bundle of energy," Baker said.

Winegart said the time commitment to the program is often difficult for students, but Baker said it hasn't been a problem for him.

Baker and Apostol said they spend one or two days a week with their little brothers, playing football, basketball or golf and going fishing or biking.

Others are still waiting to be matched with a little brother or sister — a process that involves interviews to determine interest, personality, responsibility and background.

Cheri Hill, a UM freshman in social work, has been waiting since October for a little brother or sister, but in the meanwhile she volunteers once a month to take unmatched children to pizza parties, barbeques or the park.

Hill said she once took a small boy to a pizza party, and as she talked with him he began to open up about his feelings.

"It was like a cut," she said. "It hurt so bad he wanted to cry, and he did cry."

Big Brothers and Sisters of Missoula is located at 2100 South Higgins Ave. Volunteers must be at least 18 years old.

Lobbyists join forces

By Adina Lindgren
Kaimin Reporter

University of Montana students should recruit parents, Missoula business people and UM Foundation members to lobby for university funding at the Legislature's special session June 16, six UM group leaders said last week.

Student Action Center Director Dane McCrossin organized a meeting Thursday with leaders from ASUM, the Student Legislative Action, the University Teachers Union, Faculty Senate and Staff Senate to get UM groups to work together in lobbying efforts.

McCrossin said students and off-campus people need to write legislators and lobby at the session because, although acting UM President Donald Habbe presented the contingency plan, legislators will make the final decision about budget cuts and future funding.

ASUM President Paul Tuss said ASUM will ask all "Montana students and parents" to write to legislators.

Group leaders agreed to discuss a cooperative lobbying effort with their group members.

the audience—you, me and the kids at the mall—usually gets the shaft. Either you believe that blurbs are the heart of criticism or you spend many frustrating hours avoiding being pummeled into submission.

Brazil, Terry Gilliam's nightmarish romance epic, has been hailed in some quarters as a "strikingly original" film, and was even voted Best Picture of 1985 by the Los Angeles Film Critics Association. But I'm afraid its admirers are doing it a disservice with their overheated enthusiasms.

What Brazil actually does is fuse the obvious influence of several quite disparate sources, the bleak futureworld imagery of "1984," the startling dreamscape of Ambrose Bierce's "An Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge," the Icarus myth and Dudley Moore's fleshly fixating in Blake Edwards' 10—to name a few—into a sprawling, invigorating, only marginally coherent MESS.

And all the attendant explosions, bizarre camera angles, spastic editing and absurdist plot twists make a viewer feel like the victim of a particularly vicious evening of "rough trade" at the Wilma.

For all its flaws, though, Brazil does something that very little mainstream entertainment bothers to anymore—it challenges an audience, straining its capacity to assimilate information and ideas.

In two hours it manages to address almost every subject under the nuclear sun, from cosmetic surgery to terrorism, from inefficiency in the workplace to bad plumbing, from career advancement to mistaken identity. And blind, obsessive love too.

As Sam Lowry, Jonathan Pryce plays Gilliam's sad-sack bureaucratic protagonist with just the right mixture of meek restraint and frenzied paranoia. Kim Greist is a powerfully androgynous match as his terroristic love interest.

Most perverse of all is (the) Robert DeNiro as Harry Tuttle, a renegade maintenance engineer who's always in the right place at the right time.

Though no masterpiece, Brazil is something you really ought to see. Tidiness isn't always a virtue. Grade: B Plus.

Sports In Brief

SIDNEY WRESTLER SIGNS WITH GRIZ. A former state high school wrestling champion from Sidney, Mont., has signed a national letter-of-intent to compete for the University of Montana next fall, the UM Sports Information Office said in a release yesterday.

Mitch Burgess, who will grapple at 190-pounds for Montana and head coach Scott Bliss, won a state title his junior year, finishing with a record of 25-0.

His sophomore season he placed third at state.

A knee injury kept Burgess out of action during his senior season.

In three seasons at Sidney Senior High, he compiled a record of 72-13.

Burgess is the third Montana high school wrestler to sign with UM this spring.

He joins 177-pounder Mick Cheff of Ronan and 158-pounder Jeff Haskel of Great Falls.

Burgess plans to major in business at UM.

if needed because you have moral superiority. You feed the world."

When asked how he could justify killing on the part of the United States, Schuman challenged the audience to "name one instance" in which American killing resulted in "something bad."

"Vietnam," someone answered.

"You kept your soldiers in Vietnam for 12 years," Schuman responded. "You did not allow them to win."

The remark drew applause from some in the audience and grumbling from others.

Schuman said, "The United States has the right to control the world."

People in countries formerly occupied by the U.S. military, he said, are crying for the "Yankees" to bring back their "Spam and blue jeans."

He said those who don't believe him can "just ask the Filipinos or the Chinese."

He said he still loves the people of Russia but he hates the government.

U.S. relations with the Soviet Union are slowly improving, Schuman said, but the Soviet officials will always threaten communication.

Schuman's lecture was sponsored by CAUSA-UM and the College Republicans.

To Sell or Not To Sell . . .

Who Buys Your Books. . .

University Center Bookstore

National Used Book Company

A representative of a wholesale used book company purchases your books for the bookstore and for his firm. If the books are to be used by the bookstore, 60% of the most recent new retail price will be paid. Other books are purchased for his firm at a much lower wholesale price. Those are shipped to a central warehouse and purchased by other stores.

. . . At What Price . . .

The buyer quotes the 60% price if the book appears on our list and wholesale if it doesn't.

How do books get on the 60% list?

1. Bookstore must receive signed book requisition from instructors.
2. The book must be for next quarter's use.
3. The book must be a current edition.
4. The bookstore can purchase no more than projected enrollment for the next quarter.

. . . And . . .

For the first time, the UC Bookstore will provide students with more detailed information on the prices of their books.

With the aid of computer terminals, students will be given price information about their books which will help them decide whether they want to sell their books or not. A receipt will also be given so students have a record of the prices given.
