UM may lose programs, but not students, President Koch says

Presidents, regents examine commissioner's report

By KEVIN TWIDWELL

NICK EHLE

Kaimin Managing Editor

YELLOW BAY — Although the University of Montana could lose six academic programs if the state Board of Regents follows the recommendations of the commissioner of higher education, UM may not lose many students, President James V. Koch said here Thursday.

Students leaving UM because of program eliminations will probably be replaced by incoming students who leave other campuses experiencing similar cuts, he said.

Koch stressed that the study of the report is in its preliminary stages and added that it may be a few months before the future of Montana's higher education system becomes clear.

Koch and other campus presidents met with the regents here Thursday to discuss the report that recommends the regents consider making drastic changes in the university system. The report was compiled by Carrol Krause, the commissioner of higher education, at the request of the regents.

The regents discussed the 200-page report Thursday and are expected to make some recommendations on the report today. However, final decisions won't be made until the regents meet in December.

To eliminate duplication of programs in the system, Krause suggests the regents consider dropping UM's business education and home economics programs, its master's degree in computer science and doctoral degrees in chemistry, mathematics and microbiology.

Koch said he is not pleased by the some of the proposed eliminations. But, he added, the programs slated for elimination "were fingered" because they don't attract many students, "or the commissioner doesn't consider them necessary to UM's mission."

Koch was cautious when speaking of Krause's proposed admission standards for various units of the system.

"We need to know which programs are going to be eliminated before UM sets admission standards," Koch said.

He added that exceptions to the admissions standards, if implemented, would be needed to accommodate non-traditional students who may have been away from academic life for awhile.

Krause's report proposes that students at UM, Montana State University and Montana Tech would be required to complete a college preparatory curriculum with a minimum grade point average of 2.5 or a minimum American College Test (ACT) score of 19.

Koch also disagreed with Krause's proposal that students bear the full cost of taking remedial courses at the universities.

He said that if the student fulfills all admission requirements to enter a university but needs extra help in a certain subject area, "he should not have to pay for it or go elsewhere."

Faculty members question numbers in Krause report

Department heads say statistics are off

By JEFF SHIPPEE and TAMARA MOHAWK

Kaimin Reporters

University of Montana faculty members said Thursday they question the accuracy of a report by the commissioner of higher education that recommends cutting academic programs to save money.

Commissioner Carrol Krause submitted the report to the Board of Regents at its meeting Thursday at Yellow Bay, UM's biological research center near Flathead Lake.

The report suggests dropping the master's degree in computer science and doctoral degrees in chemistry, mathematics and microbiology at UM. Krause also recommended eliminating UM's business education and home economics programs.

The 200-page report contains a series of proposals designed to cut costs within the state's higher education system, which he gave to the regents to examine further.

But UM faculty members said it would be difficult to prove significant cost-savings by cutting the programs.

"Maybe we need to take up some slack, but I'm not sure getting rid of doctoral programs is the way to do it," Tom Roy, chairman of the Faculty Senate said.

The report says that "doctoral programs are generally considered to be high-cost, and where productivity is low, inefficiency exists."

Roy said doctoral programs bring some of UM's best faculty to the school, and if the programs were eliminated, faculty would leave.

Faculty members in departments threatened by Krause's recommendations agreed that the report may not be accurate.

"I think their statistics are flawed," said William Patton, professor of business education.

The Krause report says that four students received bachelor's degrees from the business education department in the 1984-85 school year. But Patton said 17 students graduated that year.

"They're off by 425 percent — that's a disaster," he said.

George Card, chairman of the microbiology department, said the doctoral program in the department brings in more money from outside sources than it receives from the state.

Card questioned the methods Krause and his staff used to obtain statistics on degrees awarded for the microbiology department.

The report says that six doctoral degrees were awarded between the 1982-83 and 1985-86 school years.

But Card said six students are in the program this year and he said the statistics were taken from years when the department's budget was lowered.

Keith Osterheld, chairman of the chemistry department, said he believes cutting the graduate program in chemistry would show no savings.

"We have an active research program that brings in outside money and equipment," he said.

Jerry Esmay, chairman of the computer science department, said "research and excellence go hand-in-hand."

If the graduate program is cut, he said, the computer science department will not be able to attract the people it needs to continue research.

Keith Yale, chairman of the mathematics department, said he was upset that faculty were not informed of Krause's decisions and declined further comment.

Marlene Bachmann, acting chairwoman of the home economics department, said she feels her program may have been singled out for possible elimination because it is considered "basically a women's field."

Bachmann was also upset that Krause's recommendations were not given to the faculty earlier.

"I am very angry that our faculty has to find things out from the paper," she said.

Easton finalist for U of Oregon job

By JAMES CONWELL

Kaimin News Editor

Mike Easton, University of Montana vice president for university relations, acknowledged Thursday that he has been selected as a finalist for a similar position at the University of Oregon in Eugene.

Dan Williams, UO vice president for administration and chairman of the search committee, said in a telephone interview that Easton was selected to be interviewed for a job as UO's vice president of university relations.

Karen Frymoyer, the only student on the search committee, said Easton is one of four finalists. She added that the search committee hopes to find someone for the job by the first of the year.

Easton said Thursday that

he applied for the position in June and will visit the UO campus Nov. 2, 3 and 4.

"I applied because I have two degrees from the University of Oregon," Easton said, "and I feel it's a good professional opportunity for me to look into."

The UO position is different from his position here, he said, because the UO university relations office is not responsible for student affairs, as it is here.

Easton, who has a master's degree in education and a doctorate in higher education administration from UO, said he was selected for an interview from about 150 applicants for the position.

Easton has been UM vice president for university relations since the fall of 1982.

Pee Wee Herman: the wimp we need to be

The University of Montana needs more Pee Wee Hermans. Sure, there are a few out there. But a few more might even the odds a bit.

Pee Wee may be a sheepish, poorly-attired little wimp, but he's nobody's nerd. He's a geek with a mission and anybody who gets in his way is likely to see Pee Wee's tongue sticking out at them.

His message is simple — be a kid and respect your bike.

Pee Wee is not a Renaissance Man. He is in full possession of a mentality that provoked the "anti-Rambo" label The Village Voice gave him.

He is every ounce of the typical 90-pound weakling, complete with bow tie and flood pants.

But, according to The Village Voice, he is gaining a following that threatens to grow beyond the limits of the wimp population, much as his hands and wrists have gone beyond the limits of his jacket cuffs.

Pee Wee is a symbol of solace for anyone afraid to grow up. He lives a life many college students would love to live. His cares are few and his needs are simple.

His aversion to adult responsibility is something anyone about to graduate from college can relate to.

But since everyone here hopes to graduate, immersion into the real world is inevitable.

The happy days of skipping along merrily come to a real quick stop the first time you interview for a job and your questioner says you are "unqualified" to fill the position.

Wouldn't it be great to respond with Pee Wee's patented comeback, "I know you are but what am I?"

It sometimes seems the adult world isn't ready to accept an influx of college graduates. And the university seems to be more and more unwilling to let any go.

For example, anyone wishing to graduate must now pay a $10 "graduation fee" to cover administrative expenses.

Pee Wee wouldn't pay it. He would argue that the opportunity to face the outside world isn't worth $10.

And what about the endless pile of paper work one is required to complete prior to graduating and entering the job market?

Not only must everything be completed in duplicate or triplicate, it must be turned in two to three quarters before you expect to graduate.

Pee Wee wouldn't fill it out correctly or on time. He'd say a bottleneck in the institution's paperwork system could help him stay in school forever.

And what about the new writing exam students will soon be required to pass before being allowed to graduate?

Pee Wee would write backwards. Not only would he be allowed to stay in school longer, he would baffle the minds teachers who passed him in classes where he was required to write.

"The little guy fooled me," they'll be saying.

Even though it's unlikely many will be as uncooperative as Pee Wee might be in preparing to graduate, the potential is there. Sometimes the underdog just can't take anymore.

Hope in a world of wounds

By Mollie Matteson

Aldo Leopold, heralded father of a modern-day, scientifically informed environmental ethics, wrote nearly half a century ago that those with an "ecological education live...in a world of wounds." And if such people want to make the most of a beautiful Indian summer day, perhaps they should avoid reading the morning newspaper or listening to the radio. These are daily listings of "wounds" — insults and injuries to the environment — that cast a melancholic shadow on the rest of a golden October day. Another grizzly killed in Yellowstone. Another community made unfit for habitation by the toxic chemicals that have leaked into soil and water. Congress lowers gas mileage standards for cars, and considers waiving all environmental laws on certain timber sales on the national forests. Continual exposure to such stuff can be numbing and depressing. It may convince even the most optimistic person that it's all hopeless anyway and not worth wasting one's life worrying about. Leopold recognized that being an environmentalist is analogous to the experience of Cassandra in Homer's Troy: all one's got to offer is doom and gloom and no else wants to hear it. There seem to be two choices for modern Cassandras: harden oneself and ignore the truth of a deteriorating environment, or rail on. Just don't expect to win a lot of friends if you go the second route.

This week a conference on wildland and wildlife conservation at the University of Montana campus has brought together — one might say — a whole host of "Cassandras" from the Northern Rockies region. They have been talking about loss of wildlife habitat, deficit timber sales, overgrazing of public rangelands, water pollution and violations of environmental laws by our own government. In their voices, in the tone of their discussions, is an urgency, a sense that we are losing something. They foresee a future that is troubling and fraught with misfortune. Like the morning news, the conference schedule calls the roll of current and potential disasters: our national parks in "peril," "threats to the wildlife legacy of the Rocky Mountain Front," "water quality problems...in Idaho." These are knowledgeable, professional people, but to those not familiar with the issues, they may indeed sound like so many wild-eyed doomsayers. To those with other concerns, other priorities, it is easier, and more comfortable to turn them deaf ear. That's what the citizens of Troy did.

And oh what happened to them.

Perhaps we will be no different. But there IS a difference between the Cassandra of mythology and the way in which concerned modern environmentalists and ecologically-informed people can conduct themselves. The example has been set by the participants in the Northern Rockies Rendezvous, I think. It is rather like the way one should live with an ailing friend or relative — the "wounded" world that Leopold speaks of. One watches and remains alert, but not only that — each hint of recovery, every possible sign of returning health is grasped and pursued. One nurtures and administers restoratives and medicines. Thus, environmentalists can and should speak of reclaiming wild areas, and re-introducing locally extinct animals. Thus the convenors of this week's conference have been discussing not only past and possible misfortunes, but have also mapped strategy and plans for taking action. And though we "live in a world of wounds," we also live in a world that is still generously endowed with health and beauty. To see that, it only takes a day of golden Indian summer.

NEW MILITARY SCIENCE professor Rodney Smith arrives at the University of Montana with a zest for teaching.

Military science professor says nothing tops teaching

By MARLENE MEHLHAFF
Kaimin Reporter

Nothing is better than teaching, according to Lieutenant Colonel Rodney Smith, the new professor of military science at the University of Montana.

"I was happy to get teaching duties because they are the most challenging," Smith said in an interview Thursday.

Smith started teaching this fall in the military science department. He replaced Lt. Col. Tony McDermott, who was transferred to Fort Lewis, Wash.

Because he is the highest ranking officer in the department, he holds the title of professor of military science.

Smith will teach courses in professional ethics of army officers and military justice.

"I will be making guest lectures this fall," he said, "but I won't formally start teaching until Winter Quarter."

Originally from Spokane, Wash., Smith graduated from the University of Texas at El Paso with a major in business.

He said he did not choose the military as a career, but the military decided for him.

Smith was drafted in 1966 after working for several years in a civilian company.

According to Smith, the military offered him more opportunities for advancement than the company did.

"It is difficult to get that kind of experience elsewhere," he said. "The military gives you a broader perspective on life."

The military gave Smith the option to go to officer candidate school.

He was later sent to graduate school at Babson College in Wellesley, Mass. He received a master's degree in business administration at the college.

Smith is classified as a logistics officer. He is responsible for obtaining, keeping track of and distributing Army equipment and supplies.

This is not the first time Smith has taught college students. He also taught economics at Park College in El Paso.

Smith was nominated for the teaching position by the Department of the Army. The nomination was based on his background, education and military record.

Smith was allowed to choose from several schools across the United States. He said he picked UM because he "loves the West" and thought it would be "a lot nicer than being on the East Coast."

He said he especially likes the size of the campus. It gives students the opportunity to try different things and choose what they want, he said.

Two hundred students are enrolled in Reserve Officer Training Corps classes at UM, Smith said.

Students in ROTC do not major in military science, but are required to take one military science class each quarter.

The freshman and sophomore level classes are open to anyone, he said.

"These courses allow students to leave their options open.

"The ROTC program offers a lot of experiences that will help any student do better," he added.

Smith said one of the goals of ROTC is for students to "get an appreciation for the history and current posture of the U.S. military."

His job, he said, is to help students plan activities for developing the leadership skills needed to be an officer.

Even the students who plan to be in the military for only a few years benefit from the program, he added.

The officers who come out of the program have an easier time finding jobs because of their military experience, according to Smith.

He said he finds working with students enjoyable.

"It would be very boring to teach in front of a television camera," Smith said. "You wouldn't be able to see the reactions of the students."

Smith will be at UM for the next three years, which he said is the usual length of military assignments.

Ticketing resumes today

By MELODY PERKINS
Kaimin Reporter

The Missoula Parking Commission will resume ticketing in the University of Montana-area residential permit-parking district today, Parking Commissioner Tom Kosena said Thursday.

Meter maids will begin sweeping the district again this morning, placing $10-tickets on any cars parked in the district without a permit, he said.

The Parking Commission suspended ticketing in the district on Monday when it received a letter from ASUM attorney Bruce Barrett requesting ticketing to stop.

Barrett said the district's boundary signs did not clearly identify the blocks directly north and south of UM as being in the district. He requested that the ticketing be stopped until the commission put up more signs in these areas.

Barrett's letter also requested the Parking Commission to install signs stating the district's time regulations.

The signs designating the district's boundaries do not specify that permits are needed to park on the streets from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Permits are not required after 5 p.m. or on weekends.

Kosena said 35 to 40 extra signs have been installed to clarify the district's boundaries and show that the east side of Hilda Avenue is included in the parking district.

He said he has placed an order with the Missoula City sign shop requesting that it design and produce signs showing the district's time regulations. These signs will be mounted underneath the large signs standing at all entrance points to the district, he said.

The time-regulation signs may be installed next week, Kosena said earlier this week.

The parking district is a bracket-shaped area, bounded roughly on the north by the Fifth Street alley, on the west by Hilda Avenue, on the south by the Evans Avenue alley and on the east by Arthur Avenue.

Only residents of the district can buy the $10 permits to park on the streets within the district.

Candidates recommended by CB

The executive committee of Central Board Thursday made a final list of candidates for five vacant seats on the board, ASUM Business Manager Dan Henderson said.

CB will vote on the recommended candidates at its regular meeting Wednesday. A two-thirds vote is required to ratify the recommendations.

The executive committee, consisting of ASUM President Paul Tuss, vice president Mary McLeod and Henderson chose the following five persons from 22 applicants:

- Cindy Smith, a senior in political science.

- Kyle Feckler, a junior in accounting.

- Michelle Fulgham, a philosophy major.

- Howard Crawford, a senior in communications, education and pre-law.

- Rebecca Manna, a junior in journalism.

The committee also recommended an alternate, Lisa Surber, a freshman in political science, in case another member resigns.

Five CB delegates have resigned this quarter.

Jonkel says local groups must handle Grizzlies

By Dave Kirkpatrick
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Grizzly bear problems occur below the state and federal level and local government does not have the money or the expertise to handle these problems, Dr. Charles Jonkel said Thursday night.

Jonkel, a grizzly bear researcher at UM, was a member of a panel that focused on grizzly bear management problems. About 60 people attended the panel discussion, which was part of the First Annual Northern Rockies Rendezvous taking place this week on campus.

The problems are occurring on privately owned land, Jonkel said, and state and federal governments do not have jurisdiction over this land.

Local groups concerned about bears can help by initiating programs that educate and inform the public about bears, he said, adding that talking to people one on one is the best way to inform them.

Jonkel said bears and landowners both want to occupy the same land because it is valuable agriculturally and an important food source for the bears. This creates a "natural conflict situation," he said.

The other four members of the panel were Larry Blasing of Stoltze-Lumber Company; Gary Gregory, a Resource Management Specialist from Glacier National Park; Herschel Mays, a biologist from the Flathead Indian Reservation and Wayne Gollehon, a rancher from Choteau, Mont.

Glacier Park's Gregory said that bears are conditioned to eat whatever happens to be left around. He said that people who live near bears should not have gardens, apple orchards or open garbage because they will attract bears.

"A bear makes a good friend and neighbor," he said, "but we don't have to invite him to dinner."

MontPIRG manages to function despite loss of student funding

By DOUG ELLMAN
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

The Montana Public Interest Research Group continues to operate at the University of Montana despite losing its income from student fees.

MontPIRG was funded last year by a "negative check-off" system. With the system, students not wanting to give to the group had to initial a box on their class registration forms each quarter. Each box left blank was a $2 donation to MontPIRG.

Last spring the Board of Regents decided to change to a "positive check-off" funding system.

With the new system, MontPIRG's funding would come from students who marked a donation box on the form.

After researching the new system, positive check-off was rejected by a vote of the MontPIRG Board of Directors, Brad Martin, the group's director, said recently.

MontPIRG plans to ask the regents during the school year to reinstate the former funding system, Martin said.

He said the organization was under the positive check-off system in 1975 but dissolved because of a lack of funding.

MontPIRG was revived in 1982.

The group's members say they support the negative check-off system because students who inadvertently fund the group can obtain a refund. The fee can also be waived at registration.

"The waive system works," MontPIRG board member Julie Fosbender said.

"We want MontPIRG and we want to fund it with an optional fee," she added.

In last spring's ASUM elections, the negative check-off system was supported by 66 percent of the voters.

"Without funds, our campus work is severely limited," Martin said.

MontPIRG has worked on issues such as utilities reform, energy conservation and consumer awareness.

The group has also examined legislative decisions and supported environmental issues.

Clinic survives closure; reaccredited for five years

By ANGELA ASTLE

Kalmin Reporter

Last year former University of Montana President Neil Bucklew recommended that UM eliminate its speech, language and hearing clinic as a money-saving move.

Last month the clinic, the only one in Montana that specializes in speech, hearing and languages disorders, was reaccredited for a five-year period.

The clinic is located below the Health Service and is operated by the UM Communication Sciences and Disorders Department.

Clinic coordinator Beverly Reynolds said the Professional Services Board of the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association and the National Educational Training Board have both praised the clinic for its quality.

A staff of eight faculty members and about 30 graduate students assesses speech and hearing disorders and provide therapy to correct them.

"We exist because we are a student training program," Reynolds said.

Undergraduates in communication disorders, training to become speech pathologists and audiologists, must engage in 300 hours of clinical work to be certified to practice, she explained.

Reynolds said the audiology division in the clinic tests infants for hearing loss and tests the elderly to determine whether they need hearing aids.

It also provides therapy for hearing-impaired children who are having trouble learning to speak.

The speech division, she said, works with young children who stutter, singers who have developed nodules on their vocal cords from singing improperly and people who have suffered speech disabilities caused by brain injuries.

"These are brain injuries from car accidents and strokes," Reynolds said.

The clinic also works with children who were born with a cleft palate, a hole in the roof of the mouth that causes the child to speak nasally, she said.

Children 18 months to two years of age who haven't begun to talk come to the clinic with their families, who are trained to work with them.

Reynolds said the problem can be caused by learning disorders or retardation.

In some cases, she said, the cause is not known.

Reynolds said although the clinic received high ratings for its services, it needs money.

"We need certain types of equipment," Reynolds said, "but the funds provided by the university and clinic fees" often cannot cover the costs.

The lack of the most modern equipment, usually found only at universities with medical schools, means that research possibilities are limited, Reynolds said.

Because of this the UM department, which offers bachelor's and master's degree programs, cannot offer a doctoral program, Reynolds said.

Boston's latest lacks punch

By JOHN BATES

Kaimin Senior Editor

Boston, Third Stage (MCA)

Well, it has finally arrived.

Boston fans were forced to wait eight years for a third release from Tom Scholz and company, and after the anticipation, what they've received is a marathon of zzz's.

Third Stage has nowhere near the punch of Boston's other two albums—Boston (1976) and Don't Look Back (1978).

With a master's degree in mechanical engineering from MIT, lead guitarist Scholz can assemble and reassemble the finest in studio equipment (which he must have been doing for the past eight years, along with saving whales and seals). Scholz truly is a wizard in the studio, as he proved on the first two albums.

But the firepower he provided on the first two albums is absent.

Original member Barry Goudreau is not on the album, which may explain the lack of energy. Goudreau did team up with original Boston members Sib Hashian and Brad Delp to release a relatively unknown album in 1980. They must have got tired of waiting for Scholz.

The album wasn't a glaring commercial success, but it's actually as good as, if not better than, Third Stage.

So Scholz and Delp are all that are left of the original five. The excitement of being a young, new band has disappeared and nothing has taken its place.

This album seems to be a total Scholz effort rather than a team effort, as in the past.

Third Stage is produced by Tom Scholz, engineered by Tom Scholz, arranged by Tom Scholz, recorded at Tom Scholz Hideaway Studio—come on Tom, let someone else do some of the work.

I have a strong feeling that Boston fanatics who rushed out and bought Third Stage the minute it was released are going to realize in a week, maybe two, that the album is feeble and that they should have bought some good German beer.

The beer, at least, would give them a longer lasting pleasure.

Are you ready for the country?

By TOM KIPP

Kaimin Reviewer

Southern Pacific, Killbilly Hill (Warner Bros.)

Until recently country music, never all that organically conceived bandwise in the first place, had retained its belief in a "star system" not unlike that of Hollywood in the 1930s and 1940s.

This has changed somewhat with the formation and success of Southern Pacific, a band of rock-bred vets (of Creedence and the Doobies, for example) who've sent the critics into adjectival delirium trying to describe the band's wonderfulness.

On Killbilly Hill (their second album) they attempt to revive the honky tonk spirit of role models such as Gram Parsons and Gary Stewart, all the while making a beeline for Maximum Merchandisability. In theory this isn't a bad idea—it would be nice to hear something ornery and LOUD at the top of the country charts, wouldn't it?

But their execution vitiates much of the concept's potential, leaving the band stranded on a dateless night, with an uneven batch of songs and a press kit that Kill can't justify.

The first side alternates somewhat stiff readings of road honk with simply affecting pop songs. Their Bruce-by-the-numbers version of "Pink Cadillac" is stripped of any sly carnality, with the vocalist unable to project either Springsteen's effortless authority or a sense of the conceit's ultimate absurdity.

"A Girl Like Emmylou" and "I Still Look for You" are more successful, communicating a sense of loss and even self-knowledge that belies their glossy instrumentation.

A certain overwrought sentimentality (The Road as ultimate metaphor) undercut by two fluffy ballads overdisc bring down the proceedings considerably and add nothing to the mythic landscape that Bob Seger's "Turn the Page" and Barry Manilow's "Mandy" laid out a decade ago.

Which isn't to say that Southern Pacific won't produce something gripping and spirited one day. But the country crown's out of their grasp until John Anderson stops putting out albums like Tokyo, Oklahoma. Ya gotta have the tunes, bucco.

Grizzly gridders take to road to battle Boise

By FRITZ NEIGHBOR

Kaimin Sports Editor

The University of Montana Grizzlies have another tough game this weekend as they take on the Big Sky Conference's best defensive football team, the Boise State Broncos, Saturday at 7 p.m. in Boise.

The Broncos boast the best defense both against the rush and the pass in the Big Sky. The Broncos are ranked 20th among the NCAA Division I-AA schools against the pass, giving up only 141 yards per game, a strong showing in the pass-happy Big Sky.

UM Head Football Coach Don Read said the Broncos "are a real good defensive team with good quickness and they are physical."

Boise State is led on defense by linebacker Jim Ellis, a six-foot, three-inch, 245-pound senior who leads the team in tackles with 34. Ellis helped the Broncos sack Montana State quarterback Kelly Bradley 11 times in Boise's 31-14 win over the Bobcats.

Read said he was pleased with the Grizzlies' offensive line, which didn't allow a sack last game against Eastern Washington. It will be important for the line to hold up again this week to give UM quarterback Brent Pease time to operate.

Pease, coming off a game in which he set three school records against Eastern Washington, is now fourth in the conference in passing efficiency, 16th in the nation. He has completed 75 of 138 passes for 958 yards, with nine touchdowns and five interceptions after three games.

"I have to praise the play of Pease," Read said, "He is coming along and I was very pleased with his performance (against EWU)."

Boise State counters with freshman Keith Jarrett at quarterback, who has stepped into a starting role and performed well. Jarrett, who took over for injured junior Vice Alcalde for his second start against the Bobcats, threw for 255 yards and three touchdowns. He ran for Boise's other touchdown in that game.

Read said the Broncos "have been a good run team of late, but are throwing the ball more," adding that, "they don't have many weaknesses."

The Broncos' win over MSU kept them in the Big Sky Conference title race with a 1-1 conference record, 2-2 overall. The Grizzlies are 1-2 on the season, 0-2 in conference play.

On offense, the Broncos are led in rushing by junior Cliff Sexton, who has piled up 198 yards in four games. Junior Eric Andrade, who missed the entire 1985 season with an injury, leads the receiving corps with 21 catches for 278 yards this season.

Junior Mike Ehlers leads the Griz in rushing with 80 yards on the season. Senior Mike Rice is leading in receiving with 17 catches for 305 yards and three touchdowns.

Lady Griz open MWAC play

BY DAVID REESE
Kaimin Sports Reporter

The University of Montana volleyball team begins conference play this weekend at home against Idaho State University and Weber State College.

The Lady Griz will face Idaho State Friday and Weber on Saturday. Both matches will start at 7:30 p.m. in Dahlberg Arena.

And UM has a little bit of tradition on the line for Friday's game against Idaho State — UM has never lost to the Bengals here.

But the Lady Griz can expect some tough competition against ISU, according to UM coach Dick Scott.

Scott said Wednesday that Idaho State is a "definite contender for the conference championship" this year, but that UM and the Bengals should match up evenly.

ISU is a very powerful team so the Lady Griz will have to be "very patient and defensive," Scott said.

The Bengals are 10-5 for the season overall and 1-0 in Mountain West Athletic Conference action and leads the MWAC.

Montana is going into Friday's game with a 11-6 record.

The Lady Griz are led by middle blocker Cindy Pitzinger, who is in first place in the MWAC with 223 kills, 19 service aces, 127 digs and 77 blocks, and an overall hitting percentage of .310.

Debbie Shively leads ISU with a .300 hitting average.

Scott said that although the pre-conference play of the Lady Griz has been good, it is now time for them to "shift gears into overdrive" for conference competition.

In order for those gears to shift smoothly, Scott said that UM must improve on its defense and its serving, which is last in the MWAC.

UM's strong hitting, along with its blocking, which is ranked third in the league, are two strong points that he cited.

Although Weber State is sporting a 6-14 overall record and a 0-1 standing in conference play, Scott said the Wildcats' record doesn't reflect their ability.

"Weber has improved a lot and they have strong outside and middle hitters," Scott said. "They won't necessarily be an easier match than Idaho (State)."

ISU coach Jim Cherniss also recognized Weber's newfound strength: "Weber State has improved an awful lot. I'm glad we were able to get out of there with a win," he said.

Weber fell to ISU in four games in the league opener for both teams last weekend, going down 15-11, 14-16, 13-15 and 3-15.

And since both Idaho State and Weber have played one conference match each, they may already be comfortable with the increased pressure of conference play, Scott said.

Although the Lady Griz are underrated at home, any upper hand that UM might have in playing at home, Scott said, remains to be seen, as the Lady Griz have only played "weak opponents" at home this year.

Flying Mules start hockey season

By DAVID REESE
Kaimin Sports Reporter

The University of Montana Hockey Club begins its fall season this Saturday against the Spokane Selects in Spokane, Wash.

The UM Flying Mules will play two matches, one on Saturday at 2 p.m., the other at 10 p.m. Both games will be held at the Spokane Coliseum.

The Mules are coming off of a 8-2-1 winning season last spring, and were undefeated in regular season play. They took their losses in the state championship in Billings last spring, losing to Billings and Great Falls.

Along with a one-year-old rink, the Mules are also boasting a new lighting system for their outdoor rink, which is located at Playfair park in Missoula.

Team spokesman Lee Johnson said the lights will help extend playing time into the night when temperatures are cooler, which he said allows for better ice.

The Mules sold advertising for their rink and received donations to pay for the lights.

Johnson said all new players are welcome to join the team, and should call him at 728-7586, or Chip Collard at 258-5376, if interested.

UM Rugby Club travels to Bozeman tourney

By FRITZ NEIGHBOR
Kaimin Sports Editor

The University of Montana men's rugby club will take to the road this weekend for the 2nd Annual Octoberfest Tournament in Bozeman this weekend.

The tournament is sponsored by the Montana State rugby team, the Deerslayers. Teams from Helena and Butte will also be in the tournament, which will probably be run on a round-robin format, according to club spokesman Garrison Wyse.

Wyse said teams from Billings and Kalispell may also show up — but that what will probably happen is that only a few players from each city will show up, if any, and team together to form a "motley side."

UM took third place out of six teams in last year's tournament.

Wyse said the tournament will serve to give the new players a lot of playing time, which is "the whole idea." Wyse said that the fall rugby season is usually when the younger players get the most experience.

The club will play four matches over the weekend, Wyse said.

UM had planned on going to a tournament in Boise, which Wyse said "will be a real good tournament." However, the club decided not to attend because "we've got a young team and we really can't afford to go."

The first game for the club is scheduled for 11 a.m. Saturday.

Wyse said that since it is the fall season and teams will be there mainly for the experience and the fun of playing, the tournament probably won't be played on an elimination, championship-basis.

The main point, Wyse said, is to get the new players, some of which have no experience with rugby before this season, some quality playing time.

Mets even Series with Astros

HOUSTON (AP) — The pitching pendulum swung to New York Thursday night as Bob Ojeda matched finesse against the power of Nolan Ryan, pitching the Mets to a 5-1 victory over Houston for a split of the first two games of the National League playoffs.

Held without a run in support of their ace, Dwight Gooden, in the first game of the playoffs Wednesday night, New York's tablesetters, Len Dykstra and Wally Backman, got the Mets' scoring machine going against Ryan. And the big hitters — Keith Hernandez, Gary Carter and Darryl Strawberry — applied the throttle.

Hernandez hit a two-run triple along with a single and scored a run. Carter had an RBI double, and Strawberry drove in a run with a long sacrifice fly. Backman had two hits, scored twice and drove in a run. And Dykstra had two hits and scored once.

Ojeda, 18-5 during the regular season, allowed 10 hits, struck out five and walked two — baffling and beleaguering Houston's hitters with his slow curve, changeup and occasional fastball. He flirted with trouble often, but the Astros managed just one run.

The Astros, wasting one chance after another, did not score until the seventh on Phil Garner's RBI single. By then, it was too late.

After a day off Friday, the best-of-seven series resumes Saturday in New York with Ron Darling, 15-6, going for the Mets against Bob Knepper, 17-12, in Game 3.

Beaten 1-0 in Game 1 by Mike Scott, the Mets scored their first two runs of the playoffs in the fourth inning against Ryan, then nailed baseball's all-time strikeout leader for three more in the fifth.

Ryan was gone after five innings, lifted for a pinch hitter. Coming off a 5-1 finish during the regular season, Ryan had given up five runs on seven hits, striking out five.

Gorbachev, Reagan arrive for two-day summit

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev joins President Reagan in Iceland today on the eve of a summit meeting hailed by both sides as a chance to move toward improved super-power relations.

Gorbachev's flight from Moscow was scheduled to arrive at midday, and like Reagan, the Soviet leader was spending the day in final preparations for their meetings on Saturday and Sunday.

The president flew into Keflavik Airport at dusk Thursday, where he was greeted by Iceland President Vigdis Finnbogadóttir and a windy storm that ruffled and soaked the traditional red carpet.

Reagan spent the night at the U.S. ambassador's modest home, which will be the U.S. headquarters during the president's three-day stay.

Reagan's pre-summit day called for several hours of final strategy sessions with Secretary of State George P. Shultz, White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan, National Security Adviser Vice Adm. John Poindexter and other aides.

The only public meetings on his agenda were courtesy calls on Icelandic leaders.

"I think the president is well prepared," White House spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters on the flight from Washington. "He is confident that he is taking the right approach that can lead to a resolution of the problems that divide the two countries."

Preparations for the summit, Speakes said, "form a basis for face-to-face discussions that hopefully will lead to some progress."

That hope was echoed by Nikolai Shishlin, deputy head of the Kremlin's propaganda department, who said the summit "is a moment of truth" used to support remedial courses because money spent on them "dilutes the quality of education offered by the universities." The colleges, rather than the two universities, would have remedial courses and students could go there to take the classes, Krause said.

The regents need to define the scope of the institutions and then decide whether they "want to be high school or a university."

William Tietz, MSU's president, suggested that a committee of regents, campus presidents and Krause's staff study the admissions standards and make a recommendation to the regents before any standards are implemented.

More information is needed before a this type of decision is made, he said.

Koch said if all admissions standards are established, all campuses should be "on one calendar" so students could easily transfer within the university system.

Montana Tech and Western

Montana College operate on semester systems, while the other four campuses operate under a quarter system.

Although Koch said he favors the semester system for financial and educational reasons, he added, "the time is not right" for such a change.

About 50 percent of UM's faculty prefers quarters, while the other half likes the semester system, he said.

UM would change to semesters only when the majority of the faculty requests such a move or if the regents demand a change, Koch said. "I won't impose this on a campus."
