Lobbyist urges students to vote for levy

By Dug Ellman

Kaimin Reporter

Students should register to vote and vote for the six-mill levy if they want to help the measure pass, the director of a lobbying group supporting the levy told the ASUM Senate last night.

Hal Stearns, executive director of the Committee for Higher Education, told the senators one of his committee's highest priorities is to get students registered and to the polls to vote.

The committee is organizing statewide support for referendum 106, the six-mill property tax levy that helps support the university system.

Stearns said if the levy fails, students' tuition will increase $500 a year.

He said some of the activities scheduled at the other five schools in the university system are voter-registration drives, fund-raising events and presentations by students in their hometowns.

Stearns suggested ASUM sponsor letter-writing campaigns to state newspapers, campus fund raisers and voter-registration drives to help pass the levy.

The senate didn't take any action on Stearns' proposal.

In other senate business, Sharon Spray-Warden, a junior in political science, was named ASUM programming director. Her appointment was the subject of considerable debate when her qualifications were questioned.

Spray-Warden managed a Pay N Save drug store for several years but she has no experience in concert programming.

ASUM President Jennifer Isern said she picked Spray-Warden over several other candidates because she felt she is a competent manager and was the best qualified candidate for the job.

Tracey Morin, ASUM programming director for the last two years, opposed Spray-Warden's nomination.

Selecting Spray-Warden was a political decision and wasn't based on experience, she said, adding one of her staff members who has programming experience should have received the position.

3 UC rooms closed for possible asbestos pollution

UC. The office was found to have an unacceptable amount of asbestos in the air.

By Dug Ellman

Three rooms in the University Center were closed Wednesday afternoon because an excessive amount of dust in the air may have contained asbestos particles, UC director Ray Chapman says.

The ASUM administrative and programming offices, and University Graphics, all located in the southwest corner of the UC's ground floor, have been monitored for dust levels since asbestos removal work began in a nearby room, Chapman said Wednesday.

Tim Read, UM's environmental health officer, said a monitoring device detected a .04 reading of particulates per cubic centimeter in each of the three rooms.

UM allows a maximum reading of .01 particulates per cubic centimeter, Read said. The federal government allows .10 particulates per cubic centimeter before it considers the air unsafe.

The excessive dust level in the rooms was detected yesterday morning, Read said. He consulted with Chapman and the two agreed to close the rooms shortly after 2 p.m.

Read said the problem can be corrected as early as Thursday afternoon.

The monitoring device blows air through special filters which are taken to the UM chemistry department laboratory and inspected for asbestos particles, he said.

But Read said it hasn't yet been determined if the particles contained asbestos or were just plaster dust from UC Room 112.

UM has a three-week contract with Nico Hazardous Waste Management Inc. of Billings to remove asbestos in the part of the UC undergoing renovations for a new mini-mall, Read said.

Chapman said that while similar work is being done on both floors of the UC's west side, the air will continue to be carefully monitored to avoid any possible health risk.

Administrator at Fargo named UM pharmacy dean

A new dean for the University of Montana's School of Pharmacy and Allied Health Sciences was chosen Wednesday from a group of four finalists.

David Forbes, chairman of the Department of Pharmacy Practice at North Dakota State University, Fargo, will replace Frank Pettinato who has served as the acting dean since the summer of 1986.

Former Dean Philip Catalfomo resigned in 1986 to take a position at the University of Wyoming. Administrators did not seek a new dean at that time because the department was being considered for elimination.

Pettinato, a retired pharmacy professor, served as acting dean during the interim, and a search for a new dean began last February.

Forbes will replace Pettinato July 1.

Forbes was chosen from 13 original applicants because of his balance between academic experience and practical experience, Pettinato said.

He completed his graduate work in pharmacy at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, in 1973 and since then has been a faculty member and administrator at NDSU's College of Pharmacy.

Forbes coordinated continuing education programs in pharmacy and advised pre-physical therapy students at NDSU.

He has also edited North Dakota's pharmacy publication, served on a medical advisory council and recruited students for NDSU's pharmacy program.

His salary will be $63,000, and his appointment is subject to approval by the Board of Regents.

Press overplaying Reagan, astrology tie

Newspapers around the country yesterday carried stories about Ronald and Nancy Reagan's dealings in astrology. It turns out Nancy Reagan occasionally advises the president about when to schedule speeches and the like by consulting the moon and stars.

The nation's press jumped on the story, which came to light in a soon to be published book by former White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan, and blew it out of proportion.

While it's interesting to learn that Nancy Reagan tries to persuade the president on scheduling matters and possibly policy decisions through astrology, it should be kept in perspective.

Apparently, however, reporters and newspaper editors felt the story was terribly important. Six area newspapers carried the story on the front page. (The Kaimin played it on Page 3.)

Not only did newspapers overplay the significance of the story, reporters were equally at fault. Stories made references to Reagan's superstitious nature and seemed to imply, while unsubstantiated, that astrology influenced policy decisions.

When reporters asked Reagan this question he, of course, said no.

Reagan's administration has pulled some goofy stunts in the last eight years — just consider the Iran-Contra debacle and the Meese mess. But, trying to tie his wife's astrology addiction to his policy decisions is a little far-fetched.

The press, however, tried. The Philadelphia Inquirer reported that Mrs. Reagan, after consulting with an astrologer, insisted the U.S.-Soviet Union arms reduction treaty signing ceremony take place at 1:30 p.m. Dec. 8. Hardly an important policy decision.

These stories, generated by Regan's book, were merely hearsay. When Larry Speakes' book hit the market alleging that he made up quotes for Reagan, it generated an understandable amount of commotion.

But Regan, who frequently feuded with Mrs. Reagan, is only stating a personal interest of the Reagans. It should be taken for what it is.

If, in fact, Reagan is receiving advice from his astrology-reading wife, what does it matter? Granted it's a little strange, but it's not against the law and, who knows, maybe it works.

Reporters covering the White House should think about what they choose to report. Newspapers, in turn, should exercise better judgment on how they play the stories coming out of Washington.

Book molesters are missing the point

Many UM students are probably already making plans to attend Smokey Robinson's May 21 library benefit concert at Washington-Grizzly stadium, content in the knowledge that their ticket money will help the Mansfield Library help pay for periodical subscriptions.

Perhaps we should also be thinking about what we can do to help the library protect and preserve the periodicals and books it already has.

We have probably all at one time or another checked out library books that were hard to read because some previous borrower underlined what he thought were the most important passages.

Even more annoying are the people who tear pages out of journals because they can't even spring for a dime for a photocopy.

Bonnie Schuster, acquisitions librarian at the Mansfield Library, says the university spent $1,209 to replace torn and missing journal issues in fiscal year 1986-87.

That is enough money to buy anywhere from 12 to 48 new journal subscriptions at a time when state support for new acquisitions seems to be constantly declining.

Most library books and journals, of course, are far from brand new. They get handled more than private books and the increased usage takes its physical toll on them.

That is why so many older library books have to be rebound in homely, low-cost fabrics. But at least the text of a rebound book — its heart and soul — stays the same.

A person who writes in or tears the pages out of a library book is changing it forever. Even if he takes the time to erase (most people don't seem to bother) there will always be traces of the personal mark left on the book.

Pen and pencil marks, however, only mark the text of a book. People who tear pages out are crippling it. Lost pages can be replaced with photocopies, but the damage is already done and the book will never really be complete again.

Mutilated books are not only unpleasant to look at — they also present practical problems to potential readers. Other people's pen or pencil marks are distracting.

If they have underlined correctly, they have taken the intellectual challenge out of the process of reading for those who must follow after them. If they have misunderstood the author and underlined unimportant passages, their marks will probably confuse and delay subsequent readers.

Column by

The utility of this practice is also doubtful when we consider that library books here at UM can be checked out for three weeks. That is hardly enough time in the schedules of most students to read class textbooks, let alone dig into required reading lists.

Most students just don't have enough time to flip through the same library books often enough to make underlining pay off.

But writing in borrowed books isn't wrong because it doesn't pay off; it's wrong because it's inconsiderate. Every book in the library collection belongs to every student who currently attends school here, as well as those who may come here in the future.

No one has the right to change library books irrevocably for his own studying convenience. People who absolutely have to make marks in books in order to comprehend the material should cough up the money to purchase them for their own private libraries.

Maybe the people who write in borrowed books think there is no need to worry about a bunch of moldy tomes that no one would read if they had a choice. Perhaps tearing pages out of library books is their juvenile way of rebelling against the authoritarianism of required reading lists.

In either case, we have to wonder about people who irresponsibly seek to take their anger out on inanimate objects like books. Anyone who comes to a liberal arts university for an education and still thinks books can be taken for granted is missing the point.

John Kutzman is a graduate non-degree student.

46 percent of U. students get financial aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly half the students enrolled in college last year received financial aid amounting to $3,813 for the average full-time undergraduate, according to a government survey released Wednesday.

The cost of attending college, including tuition, room, board, books and other expenses, averaged $6,000 in the fall of 1986, the Department of Education's Center for Statistics said.

The center questioned nearly 35,000 students last spring on how they were paying for college and how much it cost.

It found that those attending proprietary institutions — trade schools run for profit — were far more likely to receive financial aid than those at public colleges or non-profit private campuses.

It also found that minority students, especially blacks, were more often getting help to attend college.

The survey also showed that some of those receiving aid never finished high school and also lacked an equivalency degree.

Some 9.4 percent of those receiving aid in proprietary schools, 2.2 percent of those in public institutions and 1.2 percent of those in private non-profit colleges did not complete high school.

Under current law, dropouts can get federal aid for college if the institution judges they have the "ability to benefit" from the training. The Reagan administration plans to ask Congress later this week to change the law and deny aid to those without diplomas.

The National Postsecondary Student Aid Survey, which will be repeated in 1990, found:

•Eighty-four percent of those enrolled in proprietary schools received some type of aid; 81 percent of proprietary students got federal help.

•Sixty-five percent of private college students received aid; 48 percent got help from Washington.

Overall, 46 percent of the 11.2 million undergraduates received financial aid; 35 percent got federal help.

Group seeks tools and supplies for Nicaraguan city

By John Firehammer

Kaimin Reporter

A local peace group will seek donations of tools and supplies on the University of Montana campus Friday which they hope to deliver to Missoula's Nicaraguan sister city later this month.

Mike Kreisberg, a spokesman for the "Missoula Friends of Rivas, Nicaragua," said Wednesday that his group is asking for donations of hand tools and sewing and gardening supplies. The supplies will be loaded onto a school bus that the group plans to drive to Rivas.

Donations will be taken in the bus at the parking lot behind the University Center from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Friday.

Kreisberg, a UM visiting humanities instructor, said the materials are very important to the people of Rivas. The people have had to survive without basic goods because the Nicaraguan government uses most of its money for defense against the U.S.-backed Contras, he said.

He said the group has already received a lot of clothes and will be buying medical supplies to bring to Rivas.

The group plans to leave Missoula on May 21 and arrive in Managua, Nicaragua, June 18, he said.

The group also will be taking donations outside the University Congregational Church at 401 University Ave. on Saturday during a presentation called "Exposing the Secret War in Central America," Kreisberg said.

The presentation will be given by a "caravan" that includes several people who are touring the Northwest and speaking against U.S. support of the Contras.

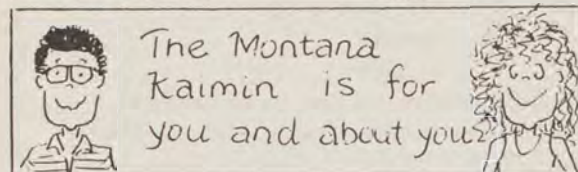

The traveling caravan is trying to raise $8,000 for Central American relief work and also is collecting supplies to send to Central America.

The caravan is sponsored by the Freedom Fund, the National Lawyer's Guild and the Seattle branch of Educators for Social Responsibility.

Missoula Friends of Rivas bought the bus with money the group earned at benefit concerts by the Montana Ballet and Logging Company. The concerts were held February in Missoula and Helena.

The benefits raised $7,000, Kreisberg said, and about $2,000 has been spent to buy and upgrade the bus.

Polish strike may get breakthrough

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — In a possible breakthrough in a wave of labor upheaval, church mediators won a promise of the first direct talks in a week between strikers and management at a steelworks in southern Poland, strikers said early Thursday.

But at a shipyard in Gdansk, a Roman Catholic mediator said the director there ruled out negotiations with strikers.

The developments came after the communist government on Wednesday accused strikers of terrorist actions and warned continued trouble could bring "serious consequences."

Steelworkers were off the job for the 10th day in Nowa Huta near Krakow. The shipyard workers in Gdansk, joined by Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, were striking Thursday for a fourth day.

Two other strikes since April 25 have been settled.

The strikers are demanding higher wages, an independent union, reinstatement of fired union activists and release of political prisoners.

Walesa, who founded the independent Solidarity trade union federation in 1980 and led widespread strikes in 1981, told striking shipyard workers on Wednesday, "We have to win."

Five independent Catholic intellectuals acting at the church's request arrived at the striking shipyard and steelworks to serve as mediators. The government would not say if it had authorized the move.

The labor unrest is the most severe in Poland since 1981, and Roman Catholic bishops urged authorities to find a common ground with Poles by meeting with representative groups.

Twins cut Niekro

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The Minnesota Twins on Wednesday asked waivers on veteran pitcher Joe Niekro, one of the most successful knuckleballers ever, for the purpose of giving him his unconditional release.

Niekro, 43, becomes the third Twins pitcher older than 35-year-old general manager Andy MacPhail to be released since opening day. He follows 43-year-old Steve Carlton and 37-year-old Tippy Martinez.

Niekro was 1-1 with a 10.03 earned run average this season in five appearances, all in relief.

"Joe took it real well. He's a man of a lot of class," Twins manager Tom Kelly said in Baltimore, where the Twins were to play the Orioles Wednesday night.

"He said a lot of nice things about the ball club, myself and (pitching coach) Dick Such ... Who knows, it may not be over yet. He may hook up with someone else."

Kelly said MacPhail tried to make a deal to keep Niekro in the league.

"He had no other recourse than to let Joe go," Kelly said. "Our older guys — Carlton, Niekro, Tippy Martinez — didn't work out for us."

Along with Hoyt Wilhelm and Niekro's brother Phil, Joe Niekro is one of the most successful knuckleballers pitchers in baseball history. He has a record of 221-204 in 22 major-league seasons.

The Niekros are the winningest brother combination in history with 539 victories. Phil, 49, has been out of baseball since the end of last season.

Orioles open doors to rookies after losing streak

BALTIMORE (AP) — For rookies Keith Hughes, Pete Stanicek and Craig Worthington, a record losing streak has turned the Baltimore Orioles into an island of opportunity.

Having suffered through a 21-game losing streak, the second longest in baseball history, to open the season, the Orioles have taken aboard the three rookies.

"It's a good situation," said Hughes, a 24-year-old outfielder who was acquired from Philadelphia during spring training. "They apparently want to start to look at some of the younger guys they have and look to the future."

Having finished fifth, fourth, sixth and seventh with a veteran roster the last four years in the seven-team American League East Division is reason enough for a change.

"Why not? For four years the other way (with veterans), it didn't work," Orioles manager Frank Robinson said. "We're into the fifth year, and it isn't working. We're looking for another avenue. I'm not opposed to it."

So, over a period of three days last week, Hughes, Stanicek and Worthington were called up from the Orioles' AAA affiliate in Rochester, N.Y.

In his first four games, Hughes hit safely in all four, going seven-for-12. "He swings a nice bat," Robinson said of Hughes. "He's a sound hitter and he's good defensively."

Stanicek, 25, went six for 19 in his first four games, playing left field and second base.

"Stanicek came in and helped us win a ballgame," Robinson said. "He can get on base, makes things happen, score some runs."

Worthington, a 23-year-old third baseman, hit a 433-foot home run off Bert Blyleven in his second game, but has struggled at the plate, getting three hits in his first 24 at-bats.

"He's done a good job defensively," Robinson said of Worthington. "He swings the bat well. His future looks very bright."

Of his slow start, Worthington said, "I'm still trying to get adjusted, trying to get a feel. Up here it's a little different. I'm trying to get more relaxed at the plate. Once I get that down, I should be all right."

Robinson says all three will be in the Orioles' lineup.

"If they're here, they're going to play," Robinson said. "I'm not afraid to use them. All they're going to do is get better."

UM broadcast students reap 7 regional contest awards

By Gabrielle Tolliver

Kaimin Reporter

University of Montana broadcast journalism students won seven awards at a recent regional competition — the most awards won by the students in the three years the broadcast journalism department has entered the competition.

Radio/TV department chairman Joe Durso said Wednesday that the students did exceptionally well in the Society of Professional Journalists' regional journalism competition.

The seven broadcast journalism seniors received the regional "Mark of Excellence" awards from the Society of Professional Journalists/ Sigma Delta Chi.

The award winners, who were announced on April 30, competed against students from Alaska, Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

- Thom Jensen won first place in the television news feature competition for a KECI "Sportsweek" story on the Silvertip Skydivers.

- Barb Reichert placed third in the same category for a "Sportsweek" feature on UM sports information specialist Chris Walterskirchen.

- Anette With won first place in the radio spot news category for a story on forest fires for KUFM Radio last summer.

- Scott Fralick won second place for a KUFM story reported from Great Falls on a Montana agriculture meeting about the U.S.-Canada free trade agreement.

- Janelle Ruffcorn took first place in the radio feature category for a KUFM report on the behavior of Montana Grizzly basketball fans.

- Laurel Lindell won third place in the same category for a feature on a UM arts and crafts fair. She also received an honorable mention in the television feature category.

A UM journalism school student documentary titled: "Sex Education: How Much Is too Much?" placed third in the competition's in-depth reporting category.

The documentary, which aired last June on two local television stations, investigated the controversy concerning sex education in Missoula's public schools.

It was produced by Erika Colness and anchored by Anna Pazderic and Stuart Wakefield — all 1987 graduates. The main writer for the documentary was Blue Tanttari. Other staff members included: graduate student Jean Jones and seniors Marit Norborg, Jim Hall and Chris Pulis.

Koop to mail U.S. households pamphlet on AIDS prevention

WASHINGTON (AP) — Surgeon General C. Everett Koop is mailing every American household a historic pamphlet with explicit advice on how to avoid the deadly AIDS virus, including the use of condoms.

In unveiling the booklet at a news conference Wednesday, Health and Human Services Secretary Otis R. Bowen said the $17 million AIDS project represented "the first time the federal government has attempted to contact virtually every resident, directly by mail, regarding a public health crisis."

Bowen said he asked Koop to play the leading role in the project because "Americans know and have faith in the health advisories of the surgeon general, and that trust will help ensure the success of this effort."

The AIDS virus most often is spread through close contact with blood, blood products or semen from infected persons.

The second page of the brochure bears the blue heading "How Do You Get AIDS From Sex?" and goes on to state that the deadly AIDS virus "can enter the body through the vagina, penis, rectum or mouth."

"Anal intercourse, with or without a condom, is risky," it continues. "The rectum is easily injured during anal intercourse."

The fourth page is half filled by a section boldly headlined: "What Is All The Talk About Condoms?"

"For those who are sexually active and not limiting their sexual activity to one partner, condoms have been shown to help prevent the spread of sexually transmitted diseases. That is why the use of condoms is recommended to help reduce the spread of AIDS," the copy read.

Federal health officials have projected there will be 270,000 cases of AIDS in the United States by 1991 and that as many as 1.5 million Americans are infected with the virus now.

The content of the pamphlet was a closely held secret in an obvious — although not officially acknowledged — effort to keep the message from being diluted by political pressure from outside the health department.

He said mailing the brochure "is the closest we can come to making something required reading in every American home. I hope that parents, grandparents, children and teenagers will set a time when they can sit down together and review the information in these eight pages."

The chief victims of acquired immune deficiency syndrome have been homosexual men and intravenous drug users, although a small percentage of cases are attributed to transfusions of contaminated blood, heterosexual contact and spread from infected pregnant women to their offspring.

As of April 21, AIDS had been diagnosed in about 59,500 Americans, of whom more than half, or about 33,000, have died since June 1981, according to the CDC. No one is known to have recovered from AIDS.

Three French hostages freed in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Three French hostages held by Shiite Moslem extremists since 1985 were freed Wednesday in Beirut. Security sources said the three later left for Paris in a chartered jet.

The sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said diplomats Marcel Fontaine and Marcel Carton and journalist Jean-Paul Kauffmann were aboard a chartered executive jet that left Beirut International Airport at 9:30 p.m.

(3:30 p.m. EDT).

Renee Veyret, the French Embassy's second secretary, told The Associated Press that Carton, 62, Fontaine, 45, and Kauffmann, 44, were set free near the Summerland Hotel in the seaside Jnah neighborhood.

The release had been expected for several days since France was reported to have agreed to pay Iran $670 million. That was the amount owed to Iran on a billion-dollar loan made by the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi. Payments were frozen by the French government after the 1979 Islamic revolution in Iran.

In Strasbourg, France, Premier Jacques Chirac announced the men's release.

In Washington, the State Department said it still was awaiting details of the terms under which the men were released.

"We would be concerned by any sign that concessions were made," the State Department said. "We believe concessions encourage future kidnappings and could prolong the captivity of other hostages."

Wednesday's release leaves 18 foreigners, including nine Americans, missing and believed held captive in Lebanon. The longest held is Terry A. Anderson, 40, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

More people choose AT&T over any other long distance service. Because, with AT&T, it costs less than you think to get the service you expect, like clearer connections, 24-hour AT&T operator assistance, instant credit on wrong numbers. And the assurance that we can put virtually every one of your calls through the first time. That's the genius of the AT&T Worldwide Intelligent Network.

So when it's time to make a choice, remember, it pays to choose AT&T.

If you'd like to know more about our products or services, like the AT&T Card, call us at 1 800 222-0300.
