Course Description and Learning Objectives

This graduate colloquium explores classic and recent scholarship in United States history from the mid-nineteenth century to the present. Through this course, students will learn:

• Major historiographical problems that have shaped the study of modern American history
• A variety of methodological approaches to studying the past
• New scholarly trends
• How to assess historical scholarship and write historiographical essays

This course is designed to provide graduate students a solid historiographical foundation for further study of and research in modern American history.

Readings

The following books are required reading:

Robert Wiebe, The Search for Order, 1877-1920
William Cronan, Nature’s Metropolis: Chicago and the Great West
Steven Hahn, A Nation Without Borders: The United States and Its World in an Age of Civil Wars, 1830-1910
Michael Willrich, City of Courts: Socializing Justice in Progressive Era Chicago
David Kenney, Freedom From Fear: The American People in Depression and War, 1929-1945
Ira Katznelson, Fear Itself: The New Deal and the Origins of Our Time
James Sparrow, Warfare State: World War II Americans and the Age of Big Government
Kim Phillips-Fein, Invisible Hands: The Businessmen’s Crusade Against the New Deal
Lizabeth Cohen, A Consumers’ Republic: The Politics of Mass Consumption in Postwar America
Robert Self, All in the Family: The Realignment of American Democracy Since the 1960s

In addition, you will read several articles that are available as pdf files on the course Moodle page. These readings are identified by an “(x)” in the course schedule below.

Course Requirements and Grading

Students must come to class each week prepared to discuss and critique the assigned reading(s). Active participation in class discussions is essential to the success of this course. Merely getting to the end of the readings is not sufficient preparation for class. You must take time to think critically about the readings and organize your thoughts ahead-of-time. Read for argument/interpretation and the author’s position within the historiography, not just for content. I strongly encourage you to take notes on the readings—both marginal notes and separate notes on a computer or traditional paper. Doing so will help you organize and clarify your thinking about the readings and serve as a useful reference in the future. Formal course requirements:

1. Three 6-7 page, double-spaced historiographical essays. The essays will be due Thursday, October 4; Monday, November 5; and Thursday, December 13. For each essay, I will provide you a broad question that pertains to the scholarship studied for that unit. In answering the question, you must draw on all the scholarship assigned for that unit. Your essay should not be a collection of individual reviews but should synthesize the readings—assess them in combination with one another—to answer to the question.

2. Craft two substantial discussion questions for each class meeting and post them to the course Moodle page by Wednesday 10:00 pm. These questions should raise a variety of debatable issues—analytical, interpretive, historiographical, methodological, etc. They must do more than ask the class to repeat or summarize the content of the readings. Please put considerable thought and time into crafting these questions. As a general rule, multi-sentence questions that include some explanatory framing elicit better discussions than simple, single-sentence questions. Try to craft questions that grapple with the larger stakes of the scholarship, assess the interpretative conclusions, engage with the important historical substance of each work, and/or compare the work under consideration with other scholarship studied in the course. Students must read and consider everyone’s questions in preparation for class.

3. A 5-6 page historiographical review of three books listed as additional scholarship for one of the course meetings. The review should summarize and assess the topic, arguments, significance, and contribution of each book. It should also relate the books to one another and to the assigned reading(s) for that week. Your essay should provide answers to these historiographical questions: What are the primary questions and problems that scholars working in this subfield are addressing? What are the important interpretive conclusions and what are the points of interpretive disagreement? You will email your review to the class at least two hours before the relevant class meeting begins. You will also give a fifteen-minute oral presentation at the beginning of class that encapsulates the key points from your written review. I expect these presentations to be insightful, carefully organized, and clearly articulated. You must select the three books in consultation with me.

Grades will be weighted as follows:

Academic Honesty
You must practice academic honesty. The work you submit in this course must be your own. When you use the words or draw on the ideas of others, acknowledge it in footnotes. Plagiarism will result in a failing grade for the course. If you have any questions about what constitutes plagiarism, ask me before submitting any written work.

DSS Accommodation and Drop Deadlines
If you have a documented learning disability, please contact me so we can arrange suitable accommodation for you. The last day to drop this course using Cyberbear is September 17. The last day to drop with instructor and advisor signature is October 29. A WP or WF will appear on your transcript for courses dropped after this date. December 7 is the last day to drop by petition.
