Gays speak out

Homosexuals say no to stereotypes

By Dave Zelio
Kaimin Reporter

Homosexuals are fighting a constant battle against stereotypes and misconceptions, several gay speakers said Wednesday at UM.

"It seems that everyone associates gays with sex," Scott Bratberg said. He added that homosexuals have "deeper relationships" than heterosexuals, or "straights," and sex is "just the tip of the iceberg."

Bratberg was one of many speakers at a "Gay Speakout" in the UC. The speakout, part of "Gay Pride Week," was sponsored by UM's Lambda Alliance, a support group for gays and lesbians. Alliance co-chairman Steve Knight said the speakout was designed to promote campus awareness of homosexuality. There are between 50 and 100 people in the alliance, he added.

Lenise Logo told a crowd of nearly 100 that negative stereotypes about homosexuals must be confronted.

"If people could see how numerous and diverse we are, we wouldn't have oppression and other problems," Logo said.

But Bratberg said gays and lesbians will always be faced with harassment and discrimination. Speaker Rennie Frank agreed.

"I stand here asking you to help stop the persecution of the gay community," she said. Frank said she and other homosexuals are unjustly discriminated against.

"Do you really believe somebody would really want to be prosecuted, persecuted, physically and verbally abused at all times?" she asked. "Would you?"

John Paul Betts said homosexuals only want to be left alone.

"All we want is to live in peace," Betts said. "Is that so much to ask?"

Bryan Spellman, an administrator in the Fine Arts department, said gays often take refuge in drugs because they are fighting a battle against themselves and society.

"We are taught that heterosexuality is the only way," Spellman said. "We have been left lost and searching for our own lives."

Spellman said he was optimistic, even though attempts by the Montana Legislature to overturn a law making it a crime to have homosexual sex failed.

"Two years from now, we will be back, fighting for our lives," Spellman said. Betts added that homosexuals have become more organized and efficient.

"We're here and we're queer," he said. "Get used to it."

Fee hikes scrutinized

By Dave Zelio
Kaimin Reporter

As UM administrators warned of cuts in key student services if quarterly fees aren't increased, the ASUM Senate Wednesday night decided not to support the fee increases until taking a good look at current charges.

"I want fast, hard numbers, I want facts," Business Manager Paula Rosenthal said after the meeting. "I expect Main Hall to be straight with us."

A resolution that opposes student fee increases until after an evaluation of current fees could be made, passed the senate just minutes after Dean of Students Barbara Hollmann warned the senate of possible service cuts.

Hollmann told the senate that UM must look at raising student fees in order to keep up with inflation, as well as finance higher salaries for state workers. She singled out the Student Health Service and the UC as specific target areas, but later told the Kaimin that room and board rates for dormitory students are also being considered.

"We'll reduce services if we don't increase fees," Hollmann told the senate. "It's that simple."

Sen. Chris Warden said students need to see a "hit list" of services that may be cut before deciding whether to endorse higher fees.

"When times are tough, you have to tighten your belt, but that doesn't mean it has to empty students' pockets," Warden said.

Dr. Nancy Fitch, SHS director, said she would not be able to replace a retiring SHS employee who currently handles classes, both on and off campus, about birth control and drug and alcohol abuse. Outreach programs, including dorm and greek house presentations, and wellness programs would also suffer.

Fitch asked the senate to endorse a $1 SHS fee increase, from $53.50 per quarter to $54.50 per quarter.

UC Director Kay Cotten asked the senate to endorse a $3 UC operating fee increase, from $37 per quarter to $40 per quarter. Cotten said UC operations and hours would be curtailed were fees not raised. Specifics were not available at the meeting.

The senate will not act on these requests until Wednesday. Hollmann said UM must submit new fee proposals to the Board of Regents by June.

In other business, the senate passed a resolution urging UM

House supports 7-day wait for handguns

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House passed legislation Wednesday to require a seven-day waiting period for handgun purchases in a historic break with the powerful National Rifle Association.

The 239-186 vote for the so-called Brady Bill came after the House rejected, 234-193, an NRA-backed plan to require "instant checks" of computerized records by gun dealers to determine whether customers were convicted criminals.

The seven-day measure is named for James S. Brady, former White House press secretary who was shot in the head in an assassination attempt on President Reagan in 1981. Brady led the lobbying campaign for the bill and was in the Capitol for the pivotal vote.

Brady watched from the gallery as the measure that bears his name was approved.

"We are delighted," said his wife Sarah, as the final votes were being cast.

Montana Reps. Ron Marlenee and Pat Williams both voted against the Brady Bill.

Both said the bill will have no impact on violent crime and infringes on the rights of law-abiding citizens to purchase handguns.

However, Rep. Charles E.

Schumer, D-N.Y., said, "Every life that has been unknowingly saved is a reason to vote for the Brady Bill today, every child that is still growing up, every cop that still patrols his beat, every family that remains intact."

Schumer was a leader in the drive to enact the bill.

Financial aid office adjusting awards for tuition increases

By Kathy McLaughlin
Kaimin Reporter

A delay with the new financial aid office computer system will benefit students who might not be able to afford a tuition increase at UM, Director Mick Hanson said Wednesday.

The office has been slow in mailing out financial aid award letters to students this year because of the installation of the new computers, Hanson said. He added that the extra time will allow officers to make adjustments for the cost of education. "It's a real positive side to something that's real negative," Hanson said.

Hanson said his staff is still learning how to use the complicated software program they received last November. "We're really excited about it; it's just that it's brand new," he said.

If the award letters had been mailed out on schedule, he said, the office would have been unable to make adjustments in the amount of aid.

Increases in financial aid awards will benefit out-of-state students especially, he said, because their tuition will increase five times as much as residents'.

The office will now begin updating the financial aid files to coincide with the increase, he said.

Funding for the financial aid program will not increase this year in response to a tuition hike, Hanson said. However, students who are eligible for Stafford Loans will probably see a rise in the amount that they may borrow, he added.

Students normally receive award letters for fall quarter in early July, Hanson said. This year, the letters may not go out until the end of the month because of corrections for the tuition raise. Hanson said the increase may "redistribute" funding among students.

Hanson said students who applied for aid need to check in at the financial aid office at the end of spring quarter to ensure that their files are complete. If documents are missing from a student's file, he said, it could take even longer to process an award.

One strike complaint remains

By Joe Kolman
Kaimin Reporter

About 30 complaints that were filed during the Montana Public Employees Association strike have been resolved except for one, UM President George Dennison said Wednesday.

Dennison met with ASUM Complaint Officer Carmen Hoover and Jim Parker, a member of the Student Coalition for Social Responsibility, to review what Dennison said were "not as much complaints as inquiries from students with concerns."

Dennison, Hoover and Parker asked the Kaimin reporter to leave the room when they discussed what Dennison called the one "serious" case.

He said he wanted to protect those involved.

The case had to do with a student who perceived that a professor was singling out students who honored the picket lines, Hoover said.

Hoover said most of the complaints stemmed from students not being clear about what their alternatives were concerning classes and exams when faced with crossing picket lines to attend classes.

ASUM received the complaints from the Student Coalition, who made the forms available to students who felt slighted during the strike.

There was a "little bit of anger and confusion about what was going to happen," Hoover said. But "once people get a chance to sit back and reflect, look at the other side and be flexible" they understand the alternatives.

Hoover related most of the problems to a lack of communication during the strike, but she added that the "faculty has just been great to talk to."

Indian graves unprotected, lawyer says

Native Americans push for laws to stop desecration of unmarked graves

BOZEMAN (AP) — There still is little protection for Indian graves located on state and private land, according to an attorney for the Native American Rights Funds.

"Many of our citizens think when it comes to Indians, it's finders keepers, losers weepers," Walter Echohawk, a member of the Pawnee Tribe, said here this week. "If there's no law on the subject, you can use a human remain for an ash-tray, doorstep or whatever."

Echohawk spoke as part of Montana State University's Native American Awareness Week.

His organization helped push through a new federal law signed recently by President Bush that helps protect unmarked graves on federal lands from being desecrated.

The law also requires all museums that receive federal funds to return certain skeletal remains and grave artifacts to Indian tribes.

Until the law was passed, Echohawk said, remains from unmarked graves were considered to be government property to be used only for scientific research and for public display in museums.

The 1991 Montana Legislature passed a bill similar to the new federal law.

It would make the looting of unmarked graves on state and private land a crime, according to the bill's sponsor, Rep. Vivian Brooke, D-Missoula.

The measure is now on Gov. Stan Stephens' desk, awaiting his signature, she said.

Brooke said her bill would establish a process for returning remains of Indians in unmarked graves to the tribe, if the landowner wants them moved.

Crow leader scorned for being female

BOZEMAN, Mont. (AP) — Her life has been threatened, her house vandalized, her horse shot and her dog killed, but the first woman to lead the Crow Indian Tribe says she's still hanging in there.

"Believe me, the last five years have been one heck of a struggle," Clara Nomee told a Bozeman audience Tuesday. Her speech was part of Native American Awareness Week at Montana State University.

Nomee, 52, won the election for tribal chairwoman last year, succeeding Richard Real Bird. Nomee's supporters had feuded for years with those of Real Bird, who is serving a federal prison term for embezzling tribal funds.

A woman running for office was not easily accepted in the Crow Nation, which prides itself on keeping traditional values alive.

"Women, simply do not challenge men for leadership positions," Nomee said. "My life was threatened. They said they would take a gun and blow my head off. They broke every window in my car, they vandalized my house, they shot my horse in the head, and they even shot my dog."

She said it took eight months for the tribe to get back on its feet again after the investigation into corruption under the former tribal administration.

"When we came in July (last year), we couldn't even find any typewriters or computers (in the tribal administration offices)," Nomee said. "It was all gone."

The tribe is still paying for the mismanagement, and trying to recover federal aid programs lost after the conviction of Real Bird.

Nomee said she never wanted to be chair of the 8,500-member tribe, and did so only at the urging of tribal elders.

"I was content to raise my 13 children, 23 grandchildren, and take care of my paraplegic brother," she said. "However, the tribe had become so ineffective, it was about to come to a suicidal end. We were in really bad shape."

Nomee told Indian students in the audience that the future of the Crow Nation would be on their shoulders. She urged them to study Indian and American history.

Military presence in Asia may decline, speaker says

By Debra Brinkman
Kaimin Reporter

In the future, the United States may be without a military force in East Asia at the level it has now, the director of the Institute of East Asian Studies at the University of California said Wednesday night.

"We may have to live with a feeling of anti-Americanism," said Dr. Joyce Kallgren.

Kallgren, who is a candidate for the directorship of the Mansfield Center, spoke to an audience of about a dozen in the botany building.

The Mansfield Center focuses on ethics and public affairs and modern Asian affairs. She said we are facing a time in which American military presence will be in decline, especially in Korea and the Philippines.

There is a growth in nationalism in these countries, and they are moving away from dependency on the United States.

When the United States built its military base in Seoul, Korea, it was out in the middle of nowhere, she said.

But now it is surrounded by residential development.

"Sentiment is that the base is taking up valuable land for development," she said.

"In Korea and the Philippines there is a broadening group of people who find a foreign base incompatible," she said.

But in many East Asian countries, the United States may see a real turnover, she said.

"Many are on the edge of transition," she said.

Except for in Japan, neither Marxism nor democratic institutions have been successful in East Asia, she said.

Japan is a major world power that is not militarily inclined, and the United States does not have much experience with that phenomenon, Kallgren said.

Japan is a country of a single political power that is successful.

"We are interested that Japan remains democratic," Kallgren said.

Kallgren is a professor of political science at the University of California, Davis, and her latest book is titled "Building a Nation State: China After 40 years."

She will be speaking today at 3 p.m. in the Pope room of the law school.

Bush energized by health news; plunges into controversies

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, buoyed by his doctors' report that he has a treatable thyroid condition and not a heart ailment, underwent more tests Wednesday, then plunged into a range of foreign and domestic controversies.

In short order, Bush energetically defended his vice president against critics, called allegations of deal-making with Iran in 1980 "bald-faced lies," declared new optimism for a Middle East peace, and warmly praised Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Bush spent less than half an hour early Wednesday morning back at Bethesda Naval Hospital undergoing the first tests on his overactive thyroid. He had been there over the weekend for an irregular heartbeat.

The president immediately called a news conference on his return to the White House to announce the retirement of CIA Director William Webster and to field questions on his own health and other topics.

Bush said that he might have to curtail his athletic activity because of "the thyroid thing," but only temporarily.

An obviously upbeat Bush told reporters that his doctors were "elated that they know what caused this fibrillation and that it's curable and will be cured very soon."

Bush gave an animated performance at his hastily called early-morning news conference, including a vigorous defense of Vice President Dan Quayle against those who question his qualifications to replace Bush in an emergency.

Asked for a response to suggestions that he consider dumping Quayle from his 1992 re-election ticket as a result of his weekend health scare, Bush said: "Do you want that by hand or do you want it by word?"

When some reporters called out "hand," Bush said, "No, no, I'm no Nelson Rockefeller," referring to the former vice president's much-published obscene gesture to hecklers in 1976.

"I think he's getting a bum rap in the press, pounding on him when he's doing a first-class job," Bush said of his vice president. Bush, who was Ronald Reagan's vice president for two terms, said he told Quayle: "Look, keep your head up — you're talking to a guy who went through something like this for about eight years."

The president was equally energetic in his response to questions about allegations of hostage deal-making by the 1980 Reagan-Bush campaign.

"I categorically deny any contact with the Iranians or anything having to do with it," Bush said.

He said if Democrats in Congress want to investigate allegations that he helped cut a deal with Iran to delay the release of American hostages and hinder Jimmy Carter's reelection, "that's fine."

"I can only say categorically that the allegations about me are grossly untrue, factually incorrect, bald-faced lies."

The story was given new life recently when a former Carter administration official, Gary Sick, published an article suggesting that the Reagan campaign brokered a deal with Iran.

A House panel heard from Sick last week and Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., is considering whether to open a formal investigation. Former Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr met privately with House members on the subject Wednesday.

Bani-Sadr, speaking through an interpreter, said after the meeting that he has never contended Bush was at a negotiating session with the Iranians. But on the broader question of a deal to delay release of the hostages, he said: "If Bush said nothing like this ever happened, then I think he's lying."

Former CIA agent to speak about Gulf

By Dave Zelio
Kaimin Reporter

Missoula residents will have a "unique opportunity" tonight to hear how the CIA operates from someone who really knows, Student Coalition for Social Responsibility organizer Jim Parker said Wednesday.

Philip Agee, a CIA agent from 1957 to 1968 and author of two books highly critical of the agency, will finish a 40-city tour in Missoula with a speech entitled "CIA, American Democracy and the Gulf War."

"He was really the first agent to write about the CIA," Parker said. "He was appalled by what was going on."

As an agent, Agee spent time in Central and South America recruiting spies, issuing propaganda, encouraging political warfare favorable to U.S. foreign policy, and tapping people and phones.

He left the agency in 1968. Parker said Agee had become disenchanted with the CIA.

"It was an ideological defection," Parker said.

After moving from country to country, Agee published his first book, "Inside the Company: CIA Diary," in 1975. Since then, Parker said, Agee has been "hounded" by the CIA and "literally chased around the world." Because of U.S. influence, Agee has had several visas, including his American passport, revoked.

"Currently, he is travelling under a 'citizen of the world' passport," Parker said.

That passport, established by an international organization, allows people restricted "for political reasons" to travel abroad, he added.

At his speech tonight, Agee will talk about the Persian Gulf War and what he sees as "manipulation by Reagan and Bush to coerce Saddam (Hussein)," Parker said.

"That posture was designed to allow the U.S. to militarily defend, if you will, Kuwait," Parker said. He added that the United States' defense of Kuwait made it possible for the United States to secure oil for American corporations.

Agee, a leader in the CIA-off-Campus movement, will also speak on CIA college recruitment, Parker said.

"I would urge those people who are CIA buffs to come and listen to another view," he added.

The talk is slated for 7 p.m. tonight, not 9 p.m. as reported in Tuesday's Kaimin. Organizers are asking a $3 donation to benefit Missoula's Poverello Center and the Missoula Food Bank.

But no one will be turned away for a lack of money, Parker said.

Tuition increase inevitable

Last fall, for the first time ever, UM's enrollment broke the 10,000 mark. At the same time, the Education Commission for the Nineties and Beyond released a report to Gov. Stan Stephens that recommended an infusion of $45 million into the university system to bring it up to the level of its peer institutions. The report said if the money wasn't made available, program cuts or enrollment limits may have to be made to ensure the quality of education is maintained.

The university system got $21.8 million from the Legislature for the next biennium. While that amount was $5 million more than the Board of Regents expected, it still falls short of the recommended $45 million.

The Legislature has finished its work and gone home, so pleading for more money from them is a futile effort.

Instantly, the new buzzword around the state is "downsizing." Not far behind it is the less euphemistic phrase, "tuition and fee increases."

For some students, proposed tuition and fee increases seem like an outrage. But what those students are not considering is that prices rise and costs go up. It is the way the system works.

When it comes right down to it, if we have to make a choice between kicking in more tuition or watching our programs deteriorate from lack of money, most of us would choose to fork over a little extra money.

To say that we are paying enough already isn't all there is to it. Right now, the Board of Regents tries to maintain a balance where students pay about 25 percent of the cost of education and the state picks up the other 75 percent. Naturally, when costs go up, in order to maintain the 25-75 split, students have to pay more.

The proposed increase would add $57, on average, to in-state students' tuition in 1991-92 and an additional $42 the following year.

Out-of-state students would see an average increase of $435 the first year and an additional $210 the second year.

Still, we would be paying less than students in comparable schools in nearby states.

A tuition increase is inevitable for Montana students; there's no sense fighting it.

However, it does make sense to keep a close watch on proposals to cut programs and cap enrollment.

'Frat' label doesn't fit fraternities

"Frat" is a derogatory term. When people think of a "frat," they picture a house full of college guys whose goals in life are to see how much beer they can drink, how many girls they can sleep with, and how long they can stay in school without flunking out. This is the reason there is not a single "frat" at the University of Montana. There are, however, nine fraternities.

The original intention in the forming of fraternities was to develop a fellowship among college men with mutual goals of philanthropy, scholarship and social life. In the past, the social aspect of fraternities overshadowed the other aspects. This is the reason for the "frat" image. Fraternities, specifically at the University of Montana, have taken steps to make philanthropy and scholarship more prevalent in their existence.

In the area of philanthropy, the fraternities have started working together to better the community. During fall quarter, the fraternities joined with the sororities to spend an afternoon raking the yards of their neighbors. The event spurred conversations between people who had been neighbors for years yet had never met. The afternoon proved to be prosperous for everyone involved.

Opinion
By Linn
Parish

With the start of Winter Quarter began the largest volunteer effort by a single organization in the nineteen-year history of Missoula's Y.M.C.A. The fraternities have started developing programs with the youth center. One volunteer from a fraternity spends the afternoon at the youth center talking to the teenagers. This is done seven days a week. Along with this effort, the fraternities are planning to organize teen dances and sports competitions.

In a special attempt to become more involved with the city of Missoula, Interfraternity Council (IFC) has become a member of the Missoula Chamber of Commerce. Representatives from IFC have been attending a Chamber event called "Business After Hours," which is a social function where important institutions and businesses congregate. One such function was hosted by IFC this quarter.

Fraternities have also taken steps in improving scholarship. Winter Quarter 1990 a Most Improved Scholarship Award was created for the fraternity whose house grade point average had increased the greatest amount over the year. This award has become incentive for fraternities to excel in scholarship and complements the original Interfraternity Scholarship Award. It has also been stated by the current Interfraternity Council administration that one of their chief goals is to raise the all-fraternity grade point average above the all-men's grade point average.

It is true that five to ten years ago fraternities on the University of Montana campus may have lived up to a "frat" image. Steps have already been taken, however, to improve the University's and Missoula's view of fraternities. Steps will continue to be taken to make fraternities an integral and worthwhile part of the college community and bring fraternities closer to fulfilling their original intention.

Mann Gulch dead honored in memorial service

YORK, Mont. (AP) — Veteran smokejumper Earl Cooley of Missoula, one of the last men to see 13 smokejumpers alive before the 1949 Mann Gulch disaster, honored the dead Tuesday at a memorial service.

Cooley joined Gov. Stan Stephens and George Leonard, assistant chief of the U.S. Forest Service, in the ceremony at the site of the disaster.

Leonard noted the Forest Service's 100 years have been marked by a "long line of fires. And from each one we've learned some lessons."

In Forest Service history, Mann Gulch was the worst of the fires.

Cooley remembers it didn't seem too bad when he and 16 other smokejumpers first flew over the lightning-caused fire.

Cooley was not jumping that day. He was the spotter, the person responsible for finding a safe landing spot for the parachutists.

Shortly after 3 p.m. on Aug. 5, 1949, the airplane arrived at Mann Gulch from its base in Missoula.

The fire was limited to a ridge along the gulch and was between 50 and 60 acres, Cooley said.

A safe drop spot was found across the gulch from the fire and 15 smokejumpers landed without incident, he said.

The 16th, sick from the rough flight, did not jump. The case of airsickness may have saved his life.

What appeared to be an isolated stroke of bad luck occurred when the parachute carrying the radio failed to open.

The radio fell to the ground.

As Cooley flew from the fire, he saw the jumpers gathering their equipment. Later, the 15 on the ground were joined by a Forest Service employee who walked in.

With temperatures in the 90s and the humidity dropping to 4 percent, the routine jump didn't stay routine.

Within two hours, the fire exploded into an inferno, covering 3,000 acres in about 10 minutes.

Thirteen of the 16 firefighters died attempting to reach the protection of a ridge and a rock slide.

All the bodies were found within 300 yards of each other.

"It was gruesome," said Dr. Bud Little, a Helena physician who helped identify the dead.

One of the three survivors was the group's foreman, R. Wagner Dodge, who started a fire, burned the vegetation from a small area and then found protection from the oncoming flames in the burned-over plot of land.

It was the first recorded case of a firefighter lighting an "escape fire."

Two other men reached the ridge and safety seconds before 50-foot high flames caught them.

Both were badly burned, but they survived.

Memorial services were continuing Wednesday in Missoula, where a memorial located in a grove of 13 trees was to be dedicated to the smokejumpers.

Gambler behind Steinbrenner's ouster convicted

NEW YORK (AP) — The admitted gambler behind George Steinbrenner's ouster from baseball was convicted Wednesday of trying to extort money from the banished New York Yankees' owner.

The conviction of Howard Spira by a federal court jury was a victory for Steinbrenner, as well as the prosecution, because the Yankee boss' credibility was a central issue during the month long trial.

"Naturally, I am pleased with the verdict and I thank all of those people who believed in me and my family," Steinbrenner said through his spokesman.

Asked whether the conviction would prompt Steinbrenner to challenge his ban from baseball, spokesman Steve Mangione said, "It would be inappropriate to discuss that at this time."

A spokesman for Fay Vincent, the major league baseball commissioner who investigated Steinbrenner and got him to agree to the ban, said the verdict wouldn't change his position.

"The federal case against Mr. Spira, as the commissioner has said many times, has no relationship to any baseball matter including Mr. Steinbrenner's status as it pertains to his agreement with the commissioner," Rich Levin said.

Spira, 32, was convicted of five of six counts in connection with his dealings with Steinbrenner, including using the mail and the telephone to make extortion demands.

He was cleared of a charge that he taped a conversation, intending to use it against Steinbrenner.

The jury also convicted Spira of three charges unrelated to Steinbrenner. They acquitted him of a fourth.

The panel received the case Monday afternoon after a trial that featured Steinbrenner nearly crying on the witness stand and absorbing a grilling from Spira's attorney.

Spira's attorney said he would appeal the guilty verdicts.

After the verdict, the government sought to have Spira jailed, claiming the conviction proved he was a danger to the community.

But Spira appealed directly to U.S. District Judge Louis Stanton to allow him to remain free on bond.

"I have no intention of running away or nothing, but facing this like a man," Spira said.

Stanton agreed, but warned Spira to "stay away from everybody who testified in this case" until his sentencing on Sept. 19.

Rolling Stone rocker receives quickie divorce

LONDON (AP) — Veteran rock star Bill Wyman's two-year marriage to Mandy Smith, who's less than half his age, ended Wednesday with a 45-second court ruling.

The names of Rolling Stone Wyman, 54, and Smith, 20, were the last on a list of 20 uncontested divorces that Judge Burkett Baker dealt with in London Divorce Court.

Smith was granted a decree on the grounds of Wyman's admitted adultery with an unidentified woman.

Neither was in court for the hearing. Details of the settlement were not released.

During the marriage, Smith spent much time in a hospital. She said she was suffering from a severe yeast infection that caused her weight to plunge to 70 pounds.

Wyman and Smith met when she was 13, and kept their affair secret for more than two years. At 16, Smith announced she had left Wyman for a younger man.

Wyman retreated to the south of France, Scotland Yard launched an inquiry into the relationship, and Smith became a sensation as a model and released a record. Before long, the couple was together again, although Wyman insisted they were just friends.

On June 2, 1989, they were married before two guests in a registry office ceremony. A church blessing with a star-studded congregation followed.

Goblins and pirates and Klingons - Oh, my!

Hundreds of fans, writers, artists, role-playing gamers and collectors of science fiction will congregate in Missoula this weekend for MISCON 6, the Missoula Science Fiction Convention.

"This is a convention devoted to the use of the imagination," said MISCON chairman Scott Whitmore. "The only thing you have to bring is an open mind."

Guests of honor include California author Barbara Hambly and artists William Warren Jr. of Seattle, Wash. and Jerry Olton of Eugene, Ore.

Hambly has published novels based on the television shows "Star Trek" and "Beauty and the Beast" as well as several sword-and-sorcery fantasy books, many of which have been nominated for Nebula Awards.

The convention will feature book signing, panel discussions and workshops, Whitmore said. Warren and Olton will also give demonstrations.

There is such a huge mass of events that they can not be fully described, said Christy Smith, one of MISCON's organizers.

"You must see it to appreciate it," she said.

A few of the convention's other events include a medieval costumed dance, science fiction computer demonstrations, a pirate dance, medieval armored combat, round-the-clock wargames and a video room showing everything from "E.T." to "Conan the Destroyer" and "The Dirty Pair," a Japanimation video.

Vendors will sell ancient-style edged weapons, miniature figurines, new and used comic books, jewelry, assorted collectibles and food, Smith said.

The event takes place this Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the Best Western Executive Motor Inn, 201 East Main, in Missoula, said Smith.

Registration opens Friday and Sunday at 10 a.m., Saturday at 8 a.m. Membership for all three days costs $20, and a single-day membership costs $12.

Rodeo Club gets $100,000 donation

By Rebecca Louis
Sports Editor

An anonymous donor from Missoula has given the University of Montana a $100,000 endowment to establish a scholarship fund for the UM Rodeo Club, adviser Joe Durso said Wednesday.

"We're starting to get the kind of recognition, awards and support we need," Durso said. "We've been living from hand to mouth for so many years."

The club has offered very few scholarships in its 20-year history, Durso said. In the two years Durso has been the club's adviser, no scholarships have been given. The first scholarships from the new donation will be awarded this fall.

Club president Maria Gee said the lure of scholarships will help the club recruit new members, and it will give current members incentive to practice harder. "We really haven't had a program," Gee said. "We've just been on our own."

"This is the best thing that could've happened to our club," Gee said. "When I came here as a freshman, we had no money."

Because the club isn't part of UM's athletic department, the only money it receives comes from ASUM funding and fundraisers organized by club members. ASUM has been "extremely generous" to the club, Durso said, but the club doesn't have enough cash to compete with programs that get a lot of money, such as Montana State.

The donation will help solve the club's money problems and put it on par with MSU, Durso said.

"We're going to make rodeo as big a deal here as it is at MSU," he said. "With the kind of community support we're getting we can do it."

Durso said the interest from the endowment will be used mainly for scholarships for Rodeo Club members, but the donor will allow the club to use money from the fund in special circumstances.

He said the club members also want to raise some additional money for practice facilities, livestock and more scholarships.

UM LONGJUMPER Diana Cole, a freshman, prepares for the Last Chance Qualifier Meet. UM Track coach Dick Koontz said the meet will be held unless the weather is "so bad we can't be out there." The meet begins at 3:30 p.m. Friday at Dornblaser Field and is the last chance for athletes to qualify for the Big Sky Conference Track and Field Championships May 15-18 in Bozeman.

Trouble keeps chasing Dykstra

Car crash that sidelined Phillies' catcher added to Dykstra's string of problems

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Len Dykstra was batting .400, running the bases with abandon and pushing the Philadelphia Phillies toward a short stint in first place. But that was last season.

Now, charged with drunken driving, he lies in a hospital bed, expected to miss at least two months with injuries sustained when his sports car hit two trees early Monday morning.

Almost from the moment he finished the 1990 season and signed a $7.3 million three-year contract, Dykstra has been hit by controversy.

During the offseason, he came under fire for criticizing the front office's inability to obtain quality starting pitching.

In spring training, he was called as a witness in a gambling trial in Mississippi. Amid revelations that he lost $78,000 in poker games, Dykstra was put on probation by baseball commissioner Fay Vincent and warned that any further illegal activity could mean a suspension.

Now comes the crash and the news that Dykstra will miss at least two months with three broken ribs, a broken right collarbone, a heart bruise and a broken right cheekbone.

Dykstra's actions also have cost the Phillies their starting catcher. Darren Daulton, a passenger in the car, sustained a broken left eye socket, a scratched left cornea and a heart bruise. He will miss at least 15

They were returning from teammate John Kruk's bachelor party when the accident occurred.

Both players remain hospitalized. Bryn Mawr Hospital spokeswoman Ellen Mattus said the men are in fair condition, conscious but in pain.

Mattus said the players declined to talk with reporters.

On Tuesday, Radnor Township police officially filed charges against Dykstra — driving under the influence, speeding and reckless driving.

If convicted, Dykstra could face the suspension of his license for one year, a $300 fine and 48 hours in jail.

Police say his blood-alcohol content level after the accident at 1 a.m. was 0.179 percent, well above the state's legal limit of 0.10 percent.

A reconstruction of the accident indicates Dykstra's car was traveling 47.25 mph to 53.43 mph when it hit two trees on a winding road in Radnor Township, said Robert Woll, a Radnor police dispatcher. He said the speed limit for the road is 35.

A hearing before District Justice David T. Videon has not been scheduled.

On Tuesday, the commissioner declined to comment on what action might be taken if Dykstra is convicted.

"The only proper concern is for their well-being," Vincent said.

Von Hayes will move to center field, and the team has called up catcher Darrin Fletcher and pitcher Wally Ritchie from the club's Scranton-Wilkes-Barre farm team to fill in for the injured players.

Strawberry pleases fans in his New York comeback

NEW YORK (AP) — Darryl Strawberry gave the fans what they wanted — a home run for those who cheer him, a game-ending grounder for those who jeer him.

He gave himself something, too. A decent day at the plate, finally.

"It was just something that happens when you face the team you used to play for," Strawberry said after returning to Shea Stadium on Tuesday night. "You get aggressive."

Frank Viola noticed. He was the winner in the New York Mets' 6-5 win over Los Angeles, and was the pitcher Strawberry tagged for his second home run of the season.

"Straw seemed to get better each at-bat," Viola said. "I could see he was more comfortable."

Strawberry, the star that the Dodgers expect to stir their drink, came back to New York in a 1-for-21 rut that included 12 strikeouts. The slump dropped him to .214 and seemed to be affecting his play in right field.

Strawberry began the year in the longest season-opening homer drought of his career, going 40 at-bats without one. He had gone 46 more at-bats before homering against Viola.

Strawberry had professed that the Mets were just another opponent.

When he came this time, he did not bring his family. And he isn't staying at the team hotel in Manhattan, preferring to avoid the hoopla by going to the house he still owns on Long Island.

Banners hung in right field — "Strawberry Fields — Rotten and Forgotten," one taunted — and the Shea security force was increased from 120 to 140. They weren't really needed; Strawberry spent some time waving to the crowd and his only problem came in the eighth inning, when he got a few real strawberries thrown at him as he stood in the on-deck circle.

Correction

A layout error Tuesday caused a quote from Tom Kelley in the story "Bicyclists to hold fund-raiser" to be cut off mid-sentence. The sentence should read: The group encourages responsible riding and care of the land. The Kaimin regrets the error.

Kelley also emphasized in a Wednesday interview with the Kaimin that his group, Low Impact Mountain Bicyclists, does not condone drinking and bicycle riding.

streets and what are we doing? We are taking away rights from law-abiding citizens," said Rep. Tom DeLay, R-Texas. "It's time we get back to crime control instead of gun control."

A cheer went up on the House floor when supporters gained the necessary majority to defeat the amendment that would require "instant checks" of computerized records to determine whether customers were criminals. Schumer and Rep. Edward Feighan, D-Ohio, were given hugs and kisses by colleagues, Reps. Rosa DeLauro, D-Conn., and Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif.

The measure faces an uncertain future in the Senate. And President Bush has vowed to veto the bill unless it is incorporated into an overall crime bill, which he favors, to extend the federal death penalty and limit federal court petitions by state prisoners on death row.

The vote culminated an intense lobbying battle by both gun control supporters and the National Rifle Association, which conducted an advertising blitz to persuade lawmakers to back its plan.

Gun control supporters said the alternative plan, backed by Rep. Harley Staggers Jr., D-W.Va., was simply an attempt to derail the so-called Brady Bill, arguing that the nation was years away from the capability for "point of sales" checks of computerized criminal records.

"The Staggers Amendment is really not an alternative to the Brady Bill. It is a killer amendment designed to permit any consideration of the Brady Bill," said Rep. Edward F. Feighan, D-Ohio.
