Housing hassles...

Students grapple with home shortage

By Adina Harrison
Kaimin Reporter

When Jane Robinson returned to Missoula last week to start school and move into her basement apartment, she got a dirty surprise. The basement, which she had paid $875 for the summer, had flooded because of the upstairs toilet.

"It was disgusting," said Robinson, a senior in wildlife biology. She left her apartment unoccupied during the summer, but paid rent so she would have a place when she returned.

She found the apartment through Garden City Management and was unable to get back the $875, but did receive the $175 damage deposit.

Rick Wilcomb, manager of Garden City Management, is familiar with Robinson's situation and said once she paid for the apartment it was her responsibility to check on it. "I realize it's a Catch-22," he said.

Robinson is now living in a cabin at the KOA campground where she pays $18.95 a night, has no phone, bathroom or kitchen utilities. She doesn't know how long she will be there, but she continues to search for an apartment.

Although housing is tight now, Wilcomb suggests that students don't give up and that they call their rental agencies every day. Because openings for housing happen spontaneously, even if a student has submitted an application they must call, Wilcomb said.

"I don't know why someone doesn't come in and build some cheap housing, they could make a bunch of money," Robinson said.

Wilcomb attributes the lack of new housing to the low-rent housing available in Missoula. It's not profitable to build new housing, he said. Also, it's tough getting financing, and building and land costs are up, Wilcomb said.

Ron Brunell, UM's Housing Director, said that students looking for single housing on campus will be housed, but they might be in temporary housing for a while.

Rooms for men are full, but there are still rooms available for women, Brunell said Tuesday.

Some students will drop out after fall quarter, Brunell said, and if the need arises some students can double-up in the dorms.

Students should apply early for housing next fall, he said.

Surcharge may fill budget gap

By Kathy McLaughlin
Kaimin Reporter

Montana university students may be forced to pay higher tuition beginning in January to offset state-mandated budget cuts in the higher education system, UM President George Dennison said Wednesday.

The temporary surcharge will help pay for $6.8 million that the Board of Regents proposed to slash from this fiscal year's spending in response to Gov. Stan Stephens' order to balance the state budget, Dennison said.

Stephens requested in August that all state agencies reduce spending for the next two years by eight percent, or $71 million. The governor's office determined that higher education's share of the total should be $21 million.

However, the regents have not made a final decision on how to cut the budget, Commissioner of Higher Education John Hutchinson said Wednesday.

The regents will draw up several different proposals before a final agreement with the governor's office is reached, he added.

Hutchinson would not comment on the amount of the proposed tuition surcharge, but said that his office should have figures to work with by the end of next week.

"What the regents want is a set of options," Hutchinson said. "All we've done at this stage of the game is offer the governor's office $6.8 million in cuts for the first year of the biennium."

Regent Kermit Schwanke of Missoula also said that the next move belongs to the state government. "We have some alternative plans and actions," he said. "We're just waiting to hear back from the governor."

Stephens' office will formally accept or reject the regents' plan at the end of this week, Steve Yeakel, budget director for the governor said.

"Our initial reaction is that this is a good first step," Yeakel said. "It looks like something we can accept."

But, he added, the state wants to ensure that the regents are willing to contribute more in cuts next year. The regents will make a final decision at their Oct. 31 meeting in Bozeman.

Dennison also said that a tuition surcharge may be just a portion of the plan to reduce. "But," he said, "We're going to try not to eliminate any classes. Students came to us in good faith and we need to offer them classes."

Dennison said in addition to higher costs, students can anticipate more stringent enrollment

ASUM Programming faces deficit, seeks figures

By Nicole Marlenee
Kaimin Reporter

Missoula is enjoying a higher quality of entertainment, but it is at the expense of ASUM Programming, which faces a high deficit with which to begin the year, programming's director said Wednesday.

Laura Dean said low attendance and other factors will result in fewer concerts, a smaller staff and a closer watch on finances.

Final figures are not in, ASUM Accountant Marlene Hendrickson said, but programming's deficit for 1990-1 is between $45,000 and $65,000.

ASUM Programming Adviser Rick Ryan said the amount is closer to $45,000. Programming needs to study the shortfall and come up with "hard figures," Ryan told the ASUM Senate Wednesday night.

Ryan said there have been "problems" with programming finances off and on since 1971. Budget shortfalls and surpluses are largely determined by the successes and failures of concerts.

"Last year was a combination of the two," Ryan said. There were concerts, like the Judds, which succeeded, and there were some that fell flat, including Michael Hedges, he said.

Ryan said programming, which was funded $72,648 by ASUM, paid off $10,000 of the debt. But that repayment will leave them less to work with and require a "modification" of budgets for each category of entertainment. For example, pop concerts will be funded at a lesser level, he said.

Dean said there are many factors that contribute to the deficit. The Performing Arts Series, which is expensive to bring in, is a large part of the deficit. But Dean said the series is very important because ASUM Programming is the "sole provider" of this type of entertainment in western Montana.

Dean said there is a misconception that ASUM Programming earns a large profit from concerts held in the Harry Adams Field House, when in fact the shows earn only about $2,000. The concert promoter pockets the balance.

Hendrickson said another problem with the field house concerts is the electrical capacity of which the building is capable. Programming has had to hire out for emergency generators for concerts such as the Scorpions, costing them an unanticipated $2,000 extra in expenses.

Another factor contributing to financial problems, Dean said, was the accountant change-over last year. She said there was a period in which ASUM had no accountant and "no clear picture of where they stood." Gary Como was fired from his job as ASUM accountant last spring for alleged computer misuse.

Dean said there will be no film

Registration smooth despite high enrollment

By Kathy McLaughlin
Kaimin Reporter

Despite long lines and predicted record student enrollment, registration and fee payment went smoothly Wednesday, UM Registrar Phil Bain said.

"Things seemed to go very well," Bain said, adding that "most" students were able to register for classes. The greatest disadvantage to students who registered yesterday was the lack of class sections at convenient times.

With this quarter's enrollment expected to rise to more than 10,500 students, departments have added more sections of popular classes, rather than have overcrowded classes, Bain said. But not all of the new sections can be held at times that are usually popular with students.

UM President George

Dennison attributed the rapid growth of students--up from about 10,000 a year ago--to UM's good reputation and a growing belief among young people that a post-secondary education is necessary.

In his state of the university address Monday, Dennison said state funding for Montana's six-unit university system is about the same as it was in 1987. However, he said, the university now serves roughly 20 percent more students than in 1987.

UM's budget, decided by the 1989-90 state legislature, falls about $2.5 million short of what the university's fall enrollment will require.

The Montana Board of Regents will discuss a five-year plan to limit enrollment at the board's October meeting.

Popular coffee shop gets new look

By Kathy McLaughlin

Frequent customers of the old Chimney Corner restaurant may be in for a shock when they enter the establishment that has just opened in its place.

"Food for Thought," a new restaurant featuring fresh bakery products, deli sandwiches and specialty espresso drinks, began serving customers early this week in completely remodeled surroundings.

The dining area is filled with antique oak furnishings, new carpeting and paint, more windows and contemporary photographs.

Co-owners Jim Conkle and Layne Rolston, who began leasing the building space at the beginning of the summer, said remodeling was more work than they had originally anticipated.

They even had to go as far as replacing ceiling support beams in the eating area. The structure was so dilapidated that "the whole building could have collapsed," Conkle said.

With a staff of 16, including a cook from a five-star restaurant, Conkle said that he and Rolston hope to offer customers "a great fun place to take a break from life."

Food for Thought is now open 8:30 a.m.-5 p.m., but plans to switch to permanent extended hours of 6:30 a.m.-midnight within the next few weeks. Due to overwhelming customer feedback, Rolston said, smoking will not be permitted in the restaurant.

Financial aid delayed for 400 students

By Guy DeSantis
Kaimin Reporter

A new computer system and a record student enrollment are causing a delay of financial aid for more than 400 students who submitted their applications by the March 1 deadline, UM's financial aid director said Tuesday.

Mick Hanson said he was "hopeful" that the on-time applicants would receive their financial aid by the third week of October.

Hanson said his staff is being forced to work overtime to complete the evaluations despite the hiring of three additional employees.

"Frankly, we're really tired and I don't know how long we can expect them to continue to work a lot of extra hours so we'll do it as quickly as we can with the staff that we have," Hanson said.

Many of the applications were not evaluated during the summer because UM was converting to a new computer system and the financial aid staff was preoccupied with testing the new software, Hanson said.

"We certainly have been understaffed this year because of the computer conversion. There is just no question about it," Hanson said.

In addition to the computer conversion, this quarter's enrollment of about 10,500 students has also placed a greater demand on the financial aid office.

"The number of people that we have to evaluate this year is much, much greater than it has ever been before," Hanson said.

To ensure that financial aid applications are processed as quickly as possible, Hanson said all students should submit an updated mailing address to the financial aid office. In the meantime, he urged students to be "patient and understanding."

More doctors recommend extra-strength HP

More and more PhDs across the country are recommending Hewlett-Packard financial and scientific calculators to their students. And for some very strong reasons.

"The HP 48SX Scientific Expandable has powerful graphics tools that are remarkably helpful to students learning mathematical concepts. And with the equation solver feature, it's excellent for applying mathematics to engineering," according to Dr. William Rahmeyer, a professor of civil and environmental engineering at Utah State University.

"The HP Business Consultant II has an equation solver and extensive math functions. These free the students from computational tedium so they can think and interact on a higher level," says Dr. Lee V. Stiff, a professor of math education at North Carolina State University.

So go check out the HP calculator line at your college bookstore or HP retailer. You'll agree, there's no faster relief from the pain of tough problems. HP calculators. The best for your success.

We've made a world of difference

In August, while we were in our secure little worlds, the United States, along with the rest of the world, held its breath waiting to see whether communism would live or die.

The demise of the communist party in the Soviet Union came swiftly. As the developments of the coup unfolded, a frightening thought entered the picture: should the coup succeed, the Soviet Union could revert to the cold, inhumane way it was in the days of Josef Stalin.

Since Mikhail Gorbachev came to power in 1985, the cold war warmed up considerably. During those hours in August, the world watched and waited to see if the thermometer would bottom out.

The iron curtain no longer exists. Gone is the Warsaw Pact. The Berlin Wall came down in 1989, and Germany is again whole.

And the coup failed. A persistent Boris Yeltsin, backed by the Soviet people, put down the coup that threatened the reform-minded Mikhail Gorbachev. In the past month, 12 of the 15 Soviet republics declared their independence from the Soviet Union.

It was the people who made this possible. The people wanted democracy, and they are getting it. There is plenty of work in store for the people of the Soviet "Union."

Many are concerned whether the disastrous economic state of the union will leave enough money for food to feed the people through the winter. But the Soviet people have already demonstrated their strength and endurance, and it is something to admire. We are living in a truly extraordinary time and we are witnessing extraordinary events.

People are making it happen.

People just like us, here in the United States, Montana, at the University of Montana, with creative, intelligent minds.

People made the difference half way around the world, and there is something to be learned from them. We can make a difference here.

We don't have to just be witnesses to world events.

Last year, students marched for and against the Persian Gulf War, held vigils for peace, protested for and against a state employees' strike, and marched to protest harassment of gays and lesbians.

The changes in Europe and the Soviet Union are changes we never expected to see in our lifetime, but they happened. While the changes that occurred in August and continue even now are colossal, we must remember that there is no cause too small.

We, too, can make a difference.

Column by Craig Stauber

Your only self-interest choice

Prison riots. Huge across-the-board cuts in state services. Loss of representation nationally. Friends, Montana is going straight to hell, and it's time firm, decisive action was taken.

Who, you may ask, will take this action? Gov. Stephens? Don't make me laugh. Perhaps one of the Democratic challengers to Gov. Stephens? Yeah, right. No, the major parties have nothing left to offer Montana, and so, I offer up myself as a candidate for Montana's governor.

Let me be honest right up front; I am doing this not for unselfish, patriotic reasons, but because I wish to be filthy, stinking rich. No other reason. However, I suspect that not many people will vote for me based on that reason alone, so here's your incentive: I'll make everyone who votes for me rich as well.

Now after years of hollow promises from other politicians, you may be skeptical of my ability to fulfill my promise. No problem, I can do it. I think my platform says it all. Sell Montana. That's it. No sub-planks with excepting clauses and provisional qualifiers. Just sell Montana. Now I do not mean that we will be pushing Montana products out of state, that's just plain lame. No, it means what it says. I will be selling everything in the state of Montana, and splitting up the proceeds with everyone who votes for me.

Yes, that's right, everything. We'll sell anything not bolted down, and then we'll start on the things that are. If we can't sell it whole, we'll knock it apart and sell it for scrap. We'll sell every damn tree between Yaak and Alzada. We'll sell the water. We'll sell the topsoil. We'll sell the damn rocks, by God! We'll sell them as building materials. We'll sell them as gravel. If necessary, we'll sell them in fist-sized pieces to the Palestinians. But we will sell them! Mineral rights, gas rights, any kind of rights you can name, they will be sold to the highest bidder. And when we've sold it all and there's nothing left but a 1000-foot-deep Montana-shaped hole in the ground, we'll sell dumping rights. Garbage, medical waste, nuclear waste, we won't care. Dump it all! We'll have split up the cash and left for nicer places already.

Sounds good, doesn't it? Well, friends, those are only the obvious possibilities. Think for a minute, and you'll find even more opportunities for profit. Last-chance tours of the Big Sky State. Selling permits to out-of-state hunters to kill everything furry or feathered that they can tote out. Why not? There won't be a habitat left for these creatures anyway, so why not make a few more bucks? And, my personal favorite, selling the votes of our national representatives. We can charge the big lobbies major bucks for assured "Yea" votes on vital issues, and if these votes don't rightly belong to people of this state, to do with as they please, who do they belong to? The only problem here might be if Ron Marlenee becomes our sole representative. The oil, timber and mining lobbies might object to putting out more money for the votes of someone they bought and paid for years ago. In that case, perhaps we could just sell Ron to Hollywood. I have no idea what Hollywood might do with this clownish thug, but with the circuses all going out of business, who else would have him?

One big advantage to running with this platform is that I don't have to concern myself with controversial issues. Abortion? Taxes? Rising crime? Hey, talk about those things with the governor of the next state you move to. I'll have dismantled this state before we have to deal with any other issues.

There is one aspect of the modern campaign that I will be leaving in, however, and that is the petty, acrimonious vindictiveness that will be displayed after the election to people who didn't vote for me. No money for these people! In order for this to work, I will be running as a write-in candidate. Immediately following my election, all ballots will be seized and the handwriting analyzed to identify those persons who voted for me. Those people get a share of the loot; everyone else gets until inauguration day to get the hell out of the state before I sell them to a lard-rendering plant.

One final note. Since I'm the one doing most of the work, I will be taking an executive bonus in the form of all the Minuteman nuclear missiles and one of Malmstrom's bomber wings. Call me greedy, but I need some extra leverage for making my second billion.

So much to do, so little time

Nick Baker

Drop half your classes, sell your books and pawn your stereo because that's the only way you'll have the time—and money—to attend the incredible assortment of live music, theatre, opera, art exhibits, museum shows, readings and films on tap in Missoula Fall Quarter.

Ticket prices are higher this year—some concerts are in the $20 range even at student rates—but the quality and variety of the entertainment make scraping the money together a little less painful.

Here's a quick look at what's coming:

Grammy-winning jazz saxophonist Branford Marsalis opens ASUM Programming's fall schedule on October 5 in the University Theatre and Amy Grant (Nov. 10) and The Nylons (Oct. 26) are other headliners in the mix of pop acts, jazz, opera, gospel and mime that fill ASUM's fall schedule.

Journalist Richard (Dick) Manning, hero of Missoula environmentalists and Bad Boy to Big Lumber and his former employer, the Missoulian, reads from his newly published book, Last Stand: Logging, Journalism and the Case for Humility, at the Crystal Theatre this Friday.

Frank Bird Linderman, a contemporary of Charlie Russell, friend of Montana's Native Americans and chronicler of their legends, is the focus of "Memorabilia," an art and history exhibit at UM's Paxson Gallery opening this Friday.

Lela Autio's three-dimensional painting/collage/sculptures share the UM Gallery of Visual Arts with Jean Price and William Davis's "assemblages" exhibit, "Process," beginning Sept. 30.

Richard Ford's gritty screenplay "Bright Angel," a film woven from the short stories in his book "Rock Springs" has its Western Montana premier at the Crystal on Saturday at 7 p.m.

The UM theatre season opens on Oct. 9 with "Laughing Wild," a biting satire of American culture presented by the Montana Repertory Theatre's 'Young Rep' troupe in UM's Masquer Theatre.

MRT will stage Sam Shepard's drama, A Lie of the Mind, in early November and A Flea in Her Ear, a frivolous George Feydou romp later that month.

The String Orchestra of the Rockies will play at UM three times this fall. Their first concert is Oct. 12 in the University Theatre. Quintessence (a wind quintet), pianist Vicki Ray and tenor John Humphrey are also scheduled in the Department of Music's Guest Artist Series.

Music faculty members Margaret Schubert (flute), Fern Glass Boyd (cello), John Ellis (organ), and Dennis Alexander (piano) each will give recitals and the UM Jazz Bands and Missoula

Symphony Orchestra will perform several times later in the quarter.

For up-to-date information on these and other arts and entertainment events check the Kaimin's weekly arts calendar.

Bogus Records-I'm not making this up—has announced the release of a Sonny Bono greatest hits album featuring songs like "The Beat Goes On" and "I got you Babe" played by obscure rock bands.

A Wall Street Journal story says that Bono, whose latest gig is the mayorship of Palm Springs, Calif., said he was "honored by the new recording," which is titled "Bonograph...Sonny gets his Cher."

Dr. Seuss dies

LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) — Theodor Seuss Geisel, the Dr. Seuss whose rhyming children's classics delighted generations of children and parents--on a train, in the rain, here or there or anywhere-- has died. He was 87.

Geisel, author of "The Cat in the Hat," "Green Eggs and Ham," "How the Grinch Stole Christmas" and dozens of other books, died Tuesday night at his home with his family at his bedside. He had been ill for several months.

He wrote and illustrated 47 books, selling more than 100 million copies in 18 languages. He was awarded a 1984 Pulitzer Prize for his contribution to children's literature.

Geisel's works are journeys into nonsense, magical worlds of truffula trees, ziffs and zuffs and nerks and nerds, where top-hatted cats run rampant through youngsters' homes while parents are away.

They often include subtle messages on issues Geisel found important, from internationalism to environmentalism.

It was on a spoof of scientific developments that he first used the name that would become his trademark. He added "Dr." to his middle name to sound more scientific.

Disability woes grow with enrollment

Another issue ADSUM and Disability Services will tackle this year is developing a written policy for faculty and administrators.

Honors College
kicks off
1st quarterBy Nicole Marlenee
Kaimin Reporter

The UM Honors College is on its feet and looking for highly motivated and talented students who want to get the most out of their classes, the dean of the college said Wednesday.

Professor John Madden, who has directed the honors program for the past 10 years, said UM is an "incredibly good university with an excellent education to offer."

Incoming freshmen will be evaluated for motivation and talent and are expected to have a G.P.A. of 3.5 or higher. He added that those students must have been in the top 10 percent of their class.

But, Madden said, the college will be flexible in its requirements for accepting students. Nontraditional and transfer students must convince the college that they want to learn, but their high school records will not play a significant role, Madden said. Instead, what they have learned since high school in their life experiences will play a greater role.

Madden said honors classes will differ from traditional ones by limiting class sizes to 15 to 25 students and emphasizing direct contact between the student and professor. The format will be more of a seminar than a lecture class with an emphasis on oral and written skills, he said.

Professor David Emmons, who will be teaching the honors section of American History 152 this winter, said he will treat the smaller honors class differently than the larger, 500-student section offered to all students. Emmons said he will require students to meet with him once each week, do more reading and participate in class.

"I'm very excited for the Honors College and its magnificent start," Emmons said. He said it is important for the honors students to have a special sense of community and he hopes that many "good friendships" will be formed.

During the first year, Madden said, the main goal will be a revision of the curriculum for the Honors College. More courses will be made available, especially in the professional schools and in the science courses, he said.

Madden said he would like to offer more "capstone" classes--upper-division courses in one's major that would link and sum up what the student has learned and connect it with other areas of study.

Honors professors also want to establish some clustered courses in lower-division general education classes, he added. He said the same group of students would enroll for a cluster of three courses in different academic areas. This would enable those students to make connections from one class to the next.

One of the long-term goals, Madden said, is to ensure that the students grow as people and become contributing members of society.

Across the divide

Last June, as part of the Wildlands Planning: MT's Continental Divide program, 12 UM students hiked 35 miles in the Scapegoat Wilderness for a six-day trip. The outdoors became their classroom as they learned about wildlands planning.

Bill Cunningham believes there are two kinds of people in the world: those who have feeling for the wilderness and those who don't. For those who don't feel for the wilderness, he says, there is always a potential to, but for those who do, this class was made for them.

Cunningham, along with two other instructors, led students on a journey that exposed them to different views of wildland management and allowed them to share their views. The class featured speakers and a textbook to complement their experience in the wilderness. Students also earned credit for the trip through the university.

The class "puts things into perspective with a certain clarity and cogency that nothing else can," he says.

Students saw some of the 140,000 acres in the Scapegoat Wilderness north of Missoula that were burned in the 1988 fire, Cunningham says.

"There's a lot of beauty created from death," he says, adding that the fire brings a lot of new life.

New life is what inspired student Julie Lennox to go on the trip because of the three-month-old baby she was carrying inside her at the time.

"Being outdoors doing hard physical work is a good way to start a baby's life," she says.

The only discomfort she experienced on the trip was a backache, but added that it hasn't quelled her desire to be outdoors.

Three months after the trip, she still feels it was worth it and is leaving for another camping trip.

Lennox, an education major, says the urgency to save the wildlands has always been present, but thinks the class "helps to define what your place is in the urgency."

Lennox says she would like her future child to have a class like the one she had because it refined her respect for the wilderness and for other points of view about wilderness management.

"Students are given a sense of politics and ethics" about students. There was a good rapport."

So what does Devine think of Montana since the trip?

"Glad to be here," she said smiling. "I left my subway tokens at home."

Amy Edmonds, a Zoology major, says "there's an undeniable bond that happens among the students," because of the sharing of ideas, thoughts, time--and food, she adds with a laugh.

"If you're in a classroom, you're not being touched," she says. "You don't smell the smells, see the trees, feel the ground, or smell the air -- all the things that are part of the wilderness experience."

Students aren't the only ones learning, though.

Cunningham says he learns from the students' questions, answers, ideas and responses.

Because Cunningham's two loves in life are the outdoors and teaching, creating the class was pleasurable for him.

"When I combine those two loves, that's ecstasy for me, that's the ultimate," he says. "I could exist without wilderness, but I couldn't live without it."

"To have a meaningful, full life, I have to be in the wild and connect with it."

He says his appreciation of the outdoors and his knowledge make it easy for him to want to share the information with people.

There is a lot of confusion and many questions about the wilderness, he says, adding that penetrating the "cloud of misinformation" with education is important.

"The most common attitude in our society is ambivalence," he says. "Many people feel alienated from the wilderness as if it's something to be feared, conquered or violated."

"Those are the people we need to share ideas with."

I believe that the beauty, the vastness and the life that I have seen is a treasure that has allowed me to know who I am, and that is a treasure that I want to preserve. Wilderness offers solitude, seclusion, tranquility, beauty and life.

- Olleke Rappe-Daniels

wildlands, instructor Dexter Roberts, a retired UM English Professor, says. "We try to present it objectively."

"The wilderness does something to people," he says. "It's the best classroom in the world."

The class was also unusual because it was documented in a booklet of personal essays written by all the students.

"I wanted to do something for wilderness education and creative writing," says UM graduate Mark Ratledge, who put the booklet together with the help of a grant from the Matthew Hansen Endowment Project.

"If you write with passion about the wilderness, you can't help but to affect other people," he says.

The issues that the class discussed, including fire and wilderness management and The Badger Two Medicine area, were tackled from many different perspectives.

Class member Anne Devine has an interest in Environmental Studies. She came from New York to take the class because she was interested in going to school at UM, and wanted to get a feel for Montana before she enrolled.

"There was a lot more to it than putting up your tent and packing your food," she says. "Students learn from other

Mountain lion killed while scavenging

AUGUSTA, Mont. (AP)--An orphaned mountain lion befriended by state wildlife personnel was killed Tuesday north of Augusta near where it had stalked two bowhunters from New York.

The lion had been captured in a chicken coop near Livingston last winter, said Vince Yannone of the Montana Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks. Another lion captured with it died in captivity.

The surviving lion, which weighed about 35 pounds when captured, weighed 85 pounds four months ago when it was released in the Sun River Wildlife Management Area, Yannone said.

"It was a success to know that it could kill and eat on its own, but it was not a success in approaching people," Yannone said.

standards. Capping enrollment was suggested at regent's meetings earlier this year to compensate for lack of state funding for the growing number of students attending Montana's post-secondary schools.

Dennison said since the state can not adequately fund all students, the number of those enrolled must be reduced. He added that the earliest a reduction plan could be implemented is in the fall term of 1992.

series lecture coordinator this year as one of the cutbacks to save money. Instead, the rest of the staff will compensate for the loss. There will be only one or two film series this year, she said.

UM is one of the only schools in the region that promotes bigger concerts through a student group, Ryan said.

Concert promoters usually go directly through the vending manager in most schools, he said.

Dean said she "must pay closer attention to the money that comes in and where it goes" than has been done in the past in order to get ASUM Programming back on its feet.

Dean said Performing Arts Series season tickets may be purchased for $80 by students, and the support would be appreciated. Without it Missoula may lose a big part of its culture, she said.

Lebo heads new-look offense in early win, recent losses

By Mike Lockrem
Kaimin Sports Reporter

When the Grizzlies open their Big Sky Conference football schedule Saturday against Idaho State, Grizzly fans will see some unfamiliar faces.

This year's offense will experience a "personality change," head coach Don Read said. First-year offensive coordinator Mick Dennehy returns to UM after playing for the Grizzlies in 1971-72.

Quarterback Grady Bennett, the Grizzlies' all-time leading passer, graduated and moved on to the Canadian Football League. A three-year starter, Bennett threw for 7,778 yards.

Replacing Bennett at quarterback will be junior Brad Lebo. Lebo played in 13 games before the start of the 1991 season. In his first three games as starting quarterback, Lebo completed 61 of 115 passes for 714 yards with two touchdowns and two interceptions.

The loss of All-American Mike Trevathan and Matt Clark leaves UM inexperienced at the receiver spot. Trevathan finished his career as the Grizzlies all-time leading receiver with 1,969 yards.

Early season injuries have hampered the receiving core. Senior Shannon Cabunoc injured a hamstring in a 31-3 loss to McNeese State last weekend.

He is expected to miss 4-6 weeks and faces the possibility of being redshirted to retain his last year of eligibility. Cabunoc returned to the Griz after gaining 573 yards receiving and 709 yards in kickoff returns last season.

Bill Cockhill, Montana's Freshman of the Year in 1990, has seen limited action because of some early season injuries.

Lebo's favorite targets have been freshman Shalon Baker and junior college transfer Mike Carlson.

All-American guard Rick Erps will miss his senior year because of a chronic neck injury. However, three starters have returned to the offensive line, including All-America candidate Chad Germer.

"He has to be the leader of our offensive line," Read said.

Also returning to the offensive line are seniors Steve Premock and Damon Gilbreth. Premock was a second team All-Big Sky Conference selection last season.

"I'm going to predict that our offensive line is going to be one of our strongest units, if not the strongest," Read said.

Seven starters returned to the Grizzly defense. Seniors Gregg Smerker, Nels Kludt and Kirk Murphy make up the front line which anchors the Grizzly defense.

All-America candidate Sean Dorris returns to an experienced backfield. Dorris, a junior safety, was second on the team in tackles last year with 83.

Also returning are cornerbacks Dethrick Slocum and Darrin Stringer. The secondary is deep with junior college transfers Quentin Burns and Stacy Edwards.

Two reserves from last season and three redshirt freshman will make up a young linebacking unit this season.

"We have real fine players at our linebacker positions, but they need experience to become better," Read said.

Senior Paul LeProwse and junior Chad Lembke will start at inside linebacker. Freshmen Dan Downs, Eric Lono and Dennis Scates will share playing time at outside linebacker.

Although the Grizzlies have gotten off to a 1-2 start, Read said the inexperienced team will improve as the season progresses.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

BEFORE TRUSTING YOUR FUTURE TO ANY COMPANY, ASK FOR SOME LETTERS OF REFERENCE.

You put more than just your savings into a retirement company. You put in your trust and hopes for the future, too. So before you choose one, ask some questions. How stable is the company? How solid are its investments? How sound is its overall financial health?

A good place to start looking for answers is in the ratings of independent analysts. Three companies, all widely recognized resources for finding out how strong a financial services company really is, gave TIAA their top grade.

IN THE FINAL ANALYSIS, TIAA IS LETTER-PERFECT.

TIAA received A+ from A.M. Best Co., AAA from Standard & Poor's and Aaa from Moody's Investors Service. These ratings reflect TIAA's reliable claims-paying ability, exceptional financial strength, superior investment performance, and low expenses. With its guaranteed rate of return and opportunity for dividends, TIAA is one of less than ten companies, out of 2,200 nationwide, that received these highest marks.

CREF. FOUR MORE LETTERS EVERYONE SHOULD KNOW.

For further growth potential and diversification, there's the CREF variable annuity with four different investment accounts to give you the flexibility you want as you save for the future.

Together, TIAA and CREF form the nation's largest private retirement system, with over $95 billion in assets and more than 70 years of experience serving the education community. For over one million people nationwide, the only letters to remember are TIAA-CREF.

Jays, Dodgers one step closer to pennant

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Trying to gain ground on the Boston Red Sox, postponed due to rain, the Toronto Blue Jays used a six-run fifth to overcome the California Angels for the second straight night 7-2. The win reduces the Blue Jays magic number to nine in the AL East. The Minnesota Twins began the night with a magic number of three but failed to gain ground as they lost to the Chicago White Sox 6-1. Even though the Dodgers failed to overcome the San Diego Padres, 8-2, they cut their magic number to nine as the Atlanta Braves split a pair against the Cincinnati Reds.

Lady spikers ready for home stand

By Kevin Anthony
Kaimin Sports Editor

The UM Lady Griz volleyball team will take a break from what head coach Dick Scott called "a horrendous road schedule" when it takes on Nevada in its first home conference match Friday.

Friday's match against the Wolfpack and Saturday's match with Northern Arizona are the only two UM has at home against Big Sky foes during the first half of the season. Both matches begin at 7 p.m.

The Lady Griz are 8-3, including two conference wins last weekend over Boise State and last year's conference champion Idaho State.

UM is coming off its best season ever. The team finished second with a 13-3 record in the conference and earned UM's first bid to the NCAA tournament. It was the first appearance in the tournament by a appearance in the tournament by a non-conference champion from the Big Sky.

Scott said this year's team, which has been picked by Big Sky coaches to win the conference, is performing better than he expected this early in the season.

"Our team chemistry is very good this year," he said. "It's even better than last year's (team)."

Leading the team are outside hitter Angie Bellinger and setter

Ann Schwenke. Schwenke leads the conference in assists, averaging 12.19 a game, and is an All-America candidate.

"Ann is really the quarterback of the team," Scott said. "She's in charge on the court."

Bellinger was named the Big Sky Athlete of the Week last week, an honor she shared with Northern Arizona's Ruth Parsons. Griz senior Colleen Jantz won the award two weeks ago.

Kathy Young and Kate Faha round out the senior players. Young leads the nation in digs with 5.11 a game.

If UM is still in the hunt for a conference crown midway through the season, the team could benefit from a second half played almost entirely at home, where it wins more than 90 percent of its matches.

"We've been second numerous times," Scott said. "We're tired of being second."
