Surcharge to extend over two quarters

By Kathy McLaughlin
Kaimin Reporter

UM students will only pay between $53 and $105 more for tuition in January if a budget reduction plan from the commissioner of higher education is adopted, UM President George Dennison said Wednesday.

Dennison said that students at all other schools in the university system may have to pay a surcharge in January as high as $210 to help with budget reductions.

However, he said, since UM students pay by the quarter, they will only have to contribute half of the increase Winter Quarter and the other half Spring Quarter.

Tuition is expected to increase this year to help cover the cost of state government-mandated budget cuts. The commissioner of higher education's office has developed three different proposals to offset the $6.8 million budget reduction in higher education this year. The proposals were developed in response to Gov. Stan Stephens' request for $21 million in U-system cuts.

"What we need to do is minimize the effect on students," Dennison said.

He received the commissioner's proposals Tuesday and must now begin targeting areas that can be cut with the least amount of repercussions. The cutback proposals also called for between $450,000 and $1 million in reductions.

"The fact of the matter is, whether it's a tuition surcharge or a general fund reduction," Dennison said, "the impact falls on students."

Class sections will probably be cut and some part-time jobs may be temporarily eliminated, he said. Also, operational costs will be targeted for reductions. Travel, supplies and equipment costs for faculty and staff may be slashed, he said.

Some students may drop out of school or lighten their credit loads because of the tuition increase, he added.

In addition, Dennison suggested that cutting enrollment in the fall of 1992 would prepare the campus for the possibility of hard times again next year.

The State Board of Regents has not agreed to any budget cuts beyond this fiscal year. But, Dennison said, "That doesn't mean we're just going to sit on our hands until next year."

If the number of students was cut from the expected 10,500 this fall, to about 9,000 in the fall of 1992, Dennison said, UM would have adequate funding to serve everyone at a high-quality level. However, he said, it is not feasible that enrollment could be cut so drastically by next fall. A decrease of about 500 students by the first semester of 1992 could be accomplished by capping enrollment, he said.

Home-hunters seek ASUM's help

By Nicole Marlenee
Kaimin Reporter

Horror stories reported by students unable to find a place to rent filled the ears of everyone at the ASUM Senate meeting Wednesday night.

Several students involved in Sunday night's camp-out on the Oval to protest unavailable housing told the senate that ASUM should use their resources and go to the people who can make a difference in the housing situation.

UM student Randi Erickson suggested that the senate introduce legislation through the Missoula City Council in order to bring the housing problem to the council's attention. She suggested ASUM lobby for a type of rent-control code that would limit landlords on rental costs.

One student said it is UM's responsibility to make sure there is enough housing in the city for the number of students they admit. He added that students should, at the very least, be warned of the limited housing when they register.

ASUM President Galen Hollenbaugh said he sympathized with the homeless students, but said UM is not the one to blame, and "they are doing a good job finding housing for single students."

He said he spoke with Housing Director Ron Brunell, who told him that any single female can immediately get a room in the dormitories, and 21 males are being placed in dorm rooms next month.

In other action, Hollenbaugh said the university system will decide at the October Board of Regents' meeting how much tuition will rise next quarter.

The three options include varying budget cuts and tuition increases of between $52.50 and $105 next quarter.

The senate was also given final numbers on the ASUM Programming deficit. ASUM Business Manager Paula Rosenthal said the final deficit comes to $45,138, after a $10,000 loan payment.

Rosenthal also urged senators to consider what programming did for the year and "not just look at the bottom line" when proposing legislation to solve the problem.

Arsenic no threat to drinking water, specialist says

MISSOULA (AP) — A plume of arsenic-tainted groundwater has drifted under the Blackfoot River near Milltown, but does not yet threaten drinking water, a hazardous waste specialist said recently.

Milltown and Bonner residents "are not currently at risk of drinking contaminated water," said Julie DalSoglio, project manager for the Milltown Reservoir cleanup.

DalSoglio was in Missoula for a technical briefing on the six million cubic yards of contaminated soils that sit on the north side of Milltown Reservoir at Milltown.

She said groundwater flowing out of the soils collects in a heavily contaminated plume under the town and is present in Milltown groundwater at a rate 20 times higher than the federal drinking water standard.

But the town's drinking water, which comes from a well drilled in 1985, remains safe and clean, DalSoglio said.

"People should feel comfortable that they are being protected right now," she said.

Atlantic Richfield Co. is responsible for cleaning up the dirty groundwater because the polluted reservoir sediments, which contain arsenic, cadmium, zinc and lead, were carried to Milltown from mines and smelters in Butte and Anaconda owned by Atlantic Richfield Co.

DalSoglio said another year of technical analysis lies ahead before the Environmental Protection Agency and Arco start on a cleanup plan for the Milltown project.

The Missoula meeting was held to give local water quality experts an early look at some of the data, she said.

Alliance urges protective law in Badger-Two Medicine battle

By Guy DeSantis
Kaimin Reporter

The Alliance for the Wild Rockies is continuing its fight to protect the Badger-Two Medicine area by lobbying for a new law after a summer in which they stalled proposed drilling in the region, the group's director said Wednesday.

Mike Bader said a new law is being introduced this week in Congress by Rep. Peter Kastmayer, D-Pennsylvania, that would protect the Badger-Two Medicine area by declaring it a wilderness area.

Bader said the alliance is working to get the approval of Montana congressmen for Kastmayer's law, but noted that he didn't expect it to be easy.

"They all seem to be leaning toward the timber industry," he said. "It's going to take a bigger outcry from the public."

The Badger-Two Medicine encompasses 116,000 acres bounded by the Bob Marshall Wilderness, Glacier National Park and the Blackfeet Indian Reservation.

This summer, the U.S. Forest Service rejected nearly 50 appeals of its decision to allow oil and gas drilling by Fina Oil and Chemical Co.

But before any drilling took place, the alliance and the Badger Chapter of the Glacier-Two Medicine Alliance took a new approach to postpone drilling in the area.

Bader said the alliance "challenged the whole process" by claiming that the Bureau of Land Management was also responsible for reviewing the proposed well's effects on surface resources—including wildlife, aesthetics and air and water quality.

The drilling permit was rescinded until BLM had a chance to review the environmental impacts under its new jurisdiction, Bader said.

That decision came only after the forest service's attorney agreed in August that BLM and the forest service shared authority on the surface resources.

Bader said between now and spring, Fina Oil and Chemical Co. will continue seeking approval for its drilling permit.

If the legislation proposed by Kastmayer is not passed in Congress, Bader said the issue will likely end up in court.

Guiding Eyes...

When Matt Meskimen got his guide dog, Joshua, he was told a story about the dog that can still bring tears to his eyes. The dog was donated by a family to the school where it was trained, and the parents of the family told the children that the dog would be someone's eyes.

The kids, "started balling," Meskimen says, because they didn't understand what the parents meant. When the kids understood the situation, they wanted the trainer to be sure to tell Meskimen about them.

Meskimen thinks about those children when he talks about Joshua, and he explains what Joshua means to him in simple terms.

"Two people in my life that calm me the most are Lisa and Josh."

Meskimen explains that Joshua is not a dog to him and his wife Lisa; "he's a child."

The relationship between Meskimen and Joshua is one of trust and caring.

"When I'm sad this dog knows; when I'm scared this dog knows; and when I'm happy this dog definitely knows," Meskimen says.

Meskimen, 28, has had eye problems since birth and lost his sight completely when he was 18. He decided to get a dog to help him get around faster.

Joshua is "working" when he is in the harness, and his job is to get Meskimen across streets, around objects and "from point A to B," Meskimen says, "It's up to me to know where point A and B is located."

Joshua can find the Meskimens' car in a parking lot without being guided, and he can take Meskimen to a building, if it's familiar enough, by simply being told the name of the building, Meskimen says.

Another visually impaired UM student, Craig Dunlop, has had Jack, his guide dog, for one month now, and got Jack because he wanted to get around faster. He says he felt ready for the responsibility and he wanted the companionship.

"There's a trust that I have in him that I don't have in any person, and that's saying a lot," Dunlop says. "He's a very substantial part of my life."

Dunlop, who got Jack for free from the same school Meskimen did, says he loves his new friend, but the 17-month-old Lab "still has a lot of puppy left in him."

"Jack is distracted easily," Dunlop says. "His weakness is other dogs."

Dunlop explains that when he is trying to get to a certain location, he depends on Jack to work with him, and when people stop and pet the dog without asking, "that screws me up," he says.

Dunlop explained that he wants people to "be aware of what this dog is: he's my eyes."

Dunlop describes Jack as three different dogs.

harness and he's just a dog," he says. When Jack is in the backyard of Dunlop's parents house, he is a 17-month-old puppy.

But, Dunlop says, "He knows when I grab that harness, it's time to go."

Del Addis, an orientation and mobility specialist at Visual Services in Missoula, says not everybody who is blind owns a guide dog.

"You can't store a dog as easily as a cane," he says. Addis explains that a person who uses a dog has to be very familiar with his environment and must have a schedule to ensure the dog is used continuously, so it won't lose its training.

There are about 10 schools in the country that train dogs for the blind, and it takes about three to four months to train a dog, Addis says. The owner then must train with the dog for a month, he says. But, he adds, each school varies.

Meskimen did not have to pay for Joshua because the Lions Club paid for the dog and the airfare to the school in Michigan, where Meskimen had to train with Joshua for a month.

"It cost me a total of one dollar," to purchase Joshua, and that was for the title papers, Meskimen says.

For Meskimen, Joshua is more than a dog and he wishes more mobility specialists would recommend guide dogs.

"They expect us to put our trust in a piece of metal (cane); why not a dog?" Meskimen asks. "A dog is much more fun."

Loose dogs on campus concern blind student

By Adina Harrison
Kaimin reporter

Matt Meskimen has had problems getting around campus because of dogs that are on the loose.

Meskimen, who is blind, said the dogs sometimes distract or attack his guide dog, Joshua.

Earlier this week, Joshua was attacked on campus by loose dogs while he was trying to get Meskimen across the oval. The dogs had leashes on and the owners were present, but they were not constrained.

"They have to have a hold of that leash," Meskimen said. "What good does a leash do in the dogs mouth?"

Ken Willett, UM Campus Safety Manager, said dogs on campus are required to be kept on a leash that measures six feet or shorter. Dogs cannot be left unattended either on a leash or off a leash, Willett said.

Even if the owner is with the dog when it is off the leash, or the leash is left dangling and the dog is wandering freely, it is considered an "unattended animal," Willett said.

He said some dog owners mistakenly think that "voice command" is enough to control a dog. "Under voice command, some respond, some don't," he said.

Willett said the easiest way to comply with the dog policy is to not bring them on campus.

"This is an institution of higher learning, it's not a dog sanctuary," he said.

For people who have guide dogs, Willett said, a stray or vicious animal could make the situation dangerous.

"I think it's very reasonable," he said referring to the policy, because it is for the general welfare of the campus.

Meskimen said that it takes patience to deal with blind or disabled people, but he has a solution. "A little common courtesy, that's all this world needs," he said.

Give Stephens a break; it's his job

Thank God tuition is going up next January.

The commissioner of higher education told presidents of the six institutions in the higher education system Tuesday that they have three options with which to raise tuition: a "temporary surcharge" of $7.50, $10 or $15 more per credit hour.

For a student carrying 14 credits, that amounts to $52.50, $70 or $110 more "out-of-pocket" expense for students per quarter.

Student anger at tuition increases is understandable and expected. But to blame the regents for their three options, all of which cost students, and to blame Stephens (or his budget office) for revenue shortfalls is misplaced anger.

The regents' other options included a massive slashing of programs; keeping the universities a viable source of education is also a priority of the regents and we agree with their decision to raise tuition rather than just cut departments (remember communication sciences and disorders?).

Also, the governor of Montana is constitutionally mandated to keep a balanced budget, by hook or by crook...or by any way possible. His original request for a $21 million reduction is too high (30 percent of the projected shortfall of $71 million), but the regents have not indicated whether they plan to make those sort of cuts. No, the governor is an easy scapegoat, but he shouldn't take the fall for tuition raises.

Instead, the fault, as it were, lies within Montana's budgeting process itself. Assistant Budget Director Steve Bender recently said the state, in some cases, is forced to estimate up to four fiscal years in advance. The inaccuracies, obviously, are greater than those made in states with an annual legislative session.

But beyond that is the glaring fact that Montana is a poor state. Despite the fact that Montana had the highest increase in tax collections in the country in FY 1990, the state was 45th overall in revenue collected. Bender contends that the state revenue structure "is not sufficient to support the kind of spending" Montana requires. He's right.

The coming tuition increases are upsetting, but students must voice their opposition wisely. Stephens should request another study (there have been many) of Montana's tax structure, but this time require it to report directly to the next Legislature. Perhaps they will recommend a sales tax; maybe income tax, or property tax reform; maybe a combination of the three. But they will ask for change. Stephens' number is 444-3111.

Don't bend over for Stan

Get out your wallets, your credit cards and your trust funds. Sell your skis, your mountain bike, your stereo and your dog. Stock up on macaroni and cheese. Start drinking Falstaff or Buckhorn, and get ready to bend over for Stan Stephens.

Governor Stephens signed an executive order last week ordering all state agencies to come up with budget cuts. The university system is a state agency. To offset the mandated budget cut, the commissioner of higher education, John Hutchinson, and the Board of Regents are likely going to raise tuition for Winter Quarter.

If the increase occurs, it will follow on the heels of an increase that went into effect over the summer. Many of us have families and all the trappings that come with them. Most of us are on already-tight budgets. An increase in fees will hit hard, probably forcing some students to leave.

There may be a chance to avert the increase, however. We've got people to represent us, and people to lobby for us. At least that's what they're supposed to do. The ASUM president and senators need a message from you, a LOUD message. Tell them you don't want an increase in fees. If they truly represent you, they'll listen and act.

Set a fire under these Solons of yours. Tell them to put up a real fight, not the wimpy little scuffle they fought against the semester transition, a move of questionable academic necessity that we are paying for.

Some consideration for the future ought to be included in the lobbying effort. We need a fair warning of fee hikes. We all have budgets, and need time to plan ahead for increased cash outlays. A year should be sufficient, six months would do in a pinch.

Funding for the university system lags two years behind enrollment. Why should we have to pay more now just because Stan wants to cut the budget? Write Stan a letter to let him know how you feel. A few thousand letters ought to get his attention if Victor Bjornberg lets him see them.

Go to the Board of Regents meeting on October 31 and November 1 in Bozeman. (It's just before the Griz-Cat game, so you can mix business with pleasure.) A room packed full of students will give the regents a powerful message, one they can hardly ignore.

The worst part of this whole deal is that we'll be paying more to support an inefficient bureaucracy that fails to provide timely service to students. One visit to the financial aid office ought to give you all the proof you need.

We'll be paying to support a computer system, Banner and CUFS, which was supposed to solve all the inefficiency, but has only muddled things up more.

We'll be paying for the mistakes made by the state government that caused the budget deficit in the first place.

Luckily, most of our faculty is caring and competent. How many of them will stay through all the cutbacks may be of concern, though. Let's hope enough of them care about UM and their students to stick it out until the financial picture brightens.

The people responsible for the budget deficit and the proposed increase in fees like to call the increase a "surcharge."

The first definition in Webster's for surcharge is "an overcharge."

How true it is.

Don't just let it happen.

Concrete destroys beauty on campus, professor says

By Kathy McLaughlin
Kaimin Reporter

New parking lots and sidewalks should not replace the "green space" on campus, a UM biology professor said this week.

"The spread of concrete not only robs us of our beautiful, life-giving 'green space,' but represents a large financial commitment that I feel would be better spent elsewhere," Vicki Watson wrote in an open letter to Campus Facility Services Director Hugh Jesse.

Watson said she wrote the letter because she was concerned about the amount of paving and construction that occurs during summer months. Concerned people are not allowed adequate time to voice their objections to the removal of more "green space," she said. The letter asked Jesse to hold an open meeting before any more construction is planned.

In response to the letter, Jesse said Wednesday, "I'm kind of surprised and hurt, because she doesn't realize that our goals are her goals, too."

Jesse added that he believes campus has improved immensely in the way it looks since he began working at UM three years ago.

"We are all working toward the goals of beauty, function and analysis," he said.

Watson added that Jesse's office should work harder to keep student pedestrian traffic on the paved sidewalks, rather than on the grass. "Many new sidewalks have been built over places where people have cut footpaths through the grass," she said.

Director of Campus Services Ken Stoltz said that only one such sidewalk was paved this summer, and it was to "cover a mud hole" where grass would not grow.

As for the pressing need for more parking spaces on campus, Watson said that no new lots should be paved. "It's been my experience that you can never satisfy the auto beast. The more you feed it, the more it demands," she said.

She added that expected enrollment cuts will reduce the number of students and therefore reduce the need for parking spaces.

"We should definitely question the pouring of any more concrete on campus," she said.

Historic theater seeks MRA grant

By Guy DeSantis
Kaimin Reporter

The owners of the Wilma Theatre asked the Missoula Redevelopment Agency for a $1 million grant in a meeting yesterday so the 70-year-old performing arts center can finally be restored to meet building code requirements.

The theater has not met the requirements of the Missoula building code since June 1990 and has had three fires in the last five years caused by faulty electrical wiring, Assistant City Fire Marshall Dick Larson said.

Bob Sharpe, one of the theater's owners, said the Wilma can meet the building code without the grant from the MRA but it would not have enough money to continue operating as a performing arts center.

"We can continue to operate as a motion picture theater but without this grant, the symphony, the ballet and other productions will all have to look for other venues," Sharpe said.

Almost half of the $1 million grant will be used for improvements in ventilation, sprinkler systems, increased access for the disabled and additional fire exits, Wilma general manager Bob Ranstrom said.

Ranstrom said the rest of the grant will be used to improve the look of the theater and to make conditions better for the performers who use the Wilma.

Among the improvements proposed are the replacement of the fire-damaged Wilma sign, restoration of the foyer and mezzanine areas, remodeling of the concession area, and reupholstery of seats, Ranstrom said.

He also said the stage area would be made larger to better accommodate performers.

Mayor Dan Kemmis, who was present at the meeting, urged the MRA to accept the proposal.

"Performing art centers have a value to a city. It is indeed a public value and is deserving of public investment," Kemmis said.

Geoff Badenock, the director of the MRA, said he will meet personally with the owners of the Wilma Theatre again before the agency decides on the request for the $1 million grant.

Deadline Friday for decals

Students who have not yet purchased parking decals must do so by Friday to avoid being issued a parking ticket, the Director of Campus Services said Wednesday.

Ken Stoltz said that campus security has been issuing about 600 no-decal warnings per day. Beginning Friday, violators will have to pay a $10 fine if they park on campus without a valid decal, he said.

Parking permits at UM cost $51 per year.

Stoltz also said that a full refund will be issued through Oct. 17 to students who have purchased decals and no longer want them.

Ruggers set for opener with Crabs

By Mike Lockrem
Kaimin Sports Reporter

The UM rugby club begins its fall season Saturday when it plays the Butte Crabs at Fort Missoula.

The Jesters finished last season on a high note with a semi-final appearance in the state tournament.

The action begins at 1 p.m. when the Missoula Maggots take on a club from Helena. The Jesters will play the Butte Crabs at 2:30.

"From what we have heard, (the Crabs) have a strong team," Dahinden said.

The Jesters have 45 players on their club, but Nick Dahinden, the club's public relations officer, said the Jesters are always looking for people who want to play.

"We need more, as many as we can get," he said, adding that there is no trouble finding playing time for everyone on the team.

"We guarantee everybody who comes to practice and the games a chance to play. We have enough games so everybody gets to play," Dahinden said.

He said the Jesters average 12 official games in their fall season.

Dahinden explained that rugby teams sometimes play double-headers, with the second game played for fun. He said the second game provides a good chance for the younger players to get experience without feeling any pressure.

The Jesters will travel to Bozeman sometime this month to compete against 15 to 20 teams in the Oktober Fest tournament.

Anyone interested in joining the club is encouraged to come to the Jester's practices at the Riverbowl on Tuesday and Thursday at 4:30 p.m. A $15-$20 fee is required to join the club, but Dahinden said the money goes toward food and beverages for the team at home games.

Dahinden said inexperienced rugby players are invited to join the club. "We will teach anyone to play," he added.

Students who are interested in joining the Jesters are encouraged to call Dahinden at 243-1045.

Ex-Griz lineman waits for nod from Bengals

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — Former Grizzly Kirk Scrafford has been called a "yessir guy" who listens to orders and then carries them out.

Now, he is waiting for another order from the Cincinnati Bengals — to come off the injured reserve list and go back to work as offensive tackle.

Scrafford has not played since the Bengals' first preseason game against the Detroit Lions. That is when he strained the medial collateral ligament in his right knee.

"That's the big ligament to injure, if you're going to injure one," Scrafford said.

He should know. He did the same thing to his left knee as a senior at the University of Montana. He returned to play the following week.

Scrafford earned First Team All-America honors at UM in 1989. He also won the Paul Weskamp award for outstanding lineman that year.

But he's still waiting to hear from the Bengals about whether he'll be reactivated.

Ordinarily, the Bengals would be eager to put him back into play. In limited duty last season, he drew a playoff start against the Los Angeles Raiders that won rave reviews.

But the Bengals' offensive line is suddenly very healthy. All five linemen who were prospective starters are playing, and three more reserves are waiting their chance.

Scrafford told The Billings Gazette he was waiting for the word patiently, saying simply, "I'm usually the last to know these things."

Still, he said, he wants to play.

"It's been frustrating," he said. "There's nothing worse than sitting around while everybody else is practicing and playing."

Then he added, "It's just part of the game, and something I'll have to overcome, I guess."

Police drop corpse-abuse felony charge

BATESVILLE, Ark. (AP) — A prosecutor dropped a corpse-abuse charge against a man who threw a party for his dead mother and placed a cigarette in one of her hands and a beer in the other as she lay in an open casket.

Johnny Tee Harrington, 29, told authorities he organized the April 13 party because his 49-year-old mother, Lulu, had told him to have a party when she died.

Prosecutor Don McSpadden said that on Monday he dropped a felony charge of abuse of a corpse because Harrington was complying with her last wish.

Missoula police may pick up pedaling program

By Nicole Marlenee
Kaimin Reporter

Missoula may be one of the top 10 bicycling cities in the nation, but it is "behind the times" concerning bicycle-mounted police officers, an employee at the New Era bicycle shop said Wednesday.

Rick Stephens said that Diamond Back Bicycle Co. has offered to donate two bicycles to the Missoula Police Department to get a bicycle police program started. He added that he is in favor of the idea and said it is likely the Missoula Bicycle Club would donate the money to pay for Seattle police officers to train the officers in Missoula.

The Seattle police have sent extensive information to Missoula about incorporating mountain bikes into police departments, Sergeant Bill Dicus of the Missoula department said. The program has been well-received in Seattle and has had much success, he added.

Missoula police will enforce bicycle and pedestrian laws in special four-hour shifts the first few weeks of October, Dicus said. The voluntary shifts pay overtime and will also focus on motor vehicle laws requiring drivers to yield to pedestrians, he added.

Funding for those shifts comes from a federal grant, Dicus said.

Missoula was one of seven cities in the country to receive the grant last winter, largely due to the efforts of Mary Cheryl Hall, Missoula's bicycle coordinator, he added.

The focus on bicycle laws is not new. Missoula police did the same thing the last two weeks of May, and gave 26 citations to motorists failing to yield to pedestrians, 21 to bicyclists on sidewalks and about 10 to bicyclists failing to stop at stop signs. The officers spent one day near the Harry Adams Fieldhouse issuing citations to students.

Missoula experimented with one police officer on a mountain bike this summer and had success, said Dicus.

He said the department will discuss the option of having two or three bicycle-mounted officers, but only during the summer because of winter weather conditions.
