"The world freedom is incompletely descriptive. To understand what freedom means, we must know what it is — freedom from or freedom for." Maurice Cranston.

Course Description:
Classical and contemporary political philosophers often speak of freedom, (some even make a distinction between liberty and freedom.) But what exactly does freedom mean? There is considerable debate among theorists, and especially among the writers we will examine this semester over whether freedom or "liberty" should be treated as an end (good for its own sake) or a means (to other human ends or values.) This seminar we will examine both forms of freedom, considering how the embrace of negative or positive freedom can influence a thinker's position on what properly belongs to the public verses the private, the relationship between society's good and the individual's interests, as well as what he/she believes are the sources of oppression and its remedy.

Course Objectives: after successfully completing the course work, the student should be able to:

1. Distinguish between negative and positive freedom, and recognize how this framework of analysis has influenced contemporary political discourse.

2. Develop concise, analytic essays on the assigned contemporary theorists. Specifically with regards to an analytic perspective, the student will consider their own position with respect to different approaches to studying political theory (i.e. what consequences follow if one emphasizes text or context when studying political theory.)

3. Evaluate a political theory in terms of its analytic, empirical, and normative strengths and/or weaknesses.

Course Grading:
PS 534 will be taught as a seminar. Short essays (6-7 per student) will be assigned and critiqued in class (55% of course grade.) Class participation (20% of course grade) will require each student to be prepared with reading assignments and contribute to class discussions. Students will be expected to assess the merits and weaknesses of their colleague's essays. (To give us time to prepare questions, copies of the essay must be distributed the Friday before you are scheduled to orally present it.) Late essays will not be accepted. The final (25% of course grade) will be a take-home essay examination.
Required Tests:
