The Black Fish

Pat Todd
THE BLACK FISH

Once more the body folds down its heavy skin Sadness fills the houses like moss over stone a thickness when people feed their hearts nothing but old bread Today I saw something new There is anger in the faces of some women
As the wars deepen soft men weaken into mod
. . . bright ties and tiny whimperings that would shame a child These sweet merchants of death hunt the innocent I saw a man strong-arm his sullen wife as if he wrestled a deer into the trunk A new nun in town keeps three messenger boys on the run And there are pimps who hold back their girls' money for just one more exhausting trick
There are men who sleep in doorways out of the snow
And snow buries the soldier's face like a stump
The graves are filled with bright bones Bones slip fifty feet thru coal drifts for a three-second swim in molten lava Bones swirl smoke in the cremator's ovens
There are bones thin enough to open every lock And bones swivel water inside your grandmother's knee Bones my friend sift flour and spin tiny white whirls on the far hill It's not the gold scorpion . . . blood kernel
The dark fish of Pisces dies slumped over the world  Her giant bones glow and hum two hundred years more til the northern lights swing back