Antarctic Allusions §

My body crashed
delicately, disconnecting a crystal sea. Memory reassured me I was home, but black and white submerged swimmers whispered hints of an ice-capped island.

Overhead, plasma is stricken with luminescent hues.
Green glowing curtains dance
an enchanting greeting.

These creatures before me—tusked, webbed, whiskered—would ring bells for centuries
the way they did now.

Bells ringing, or songs hummed. One bop on the head, a walrus perhaps?

My father, instead.
"Your alarm is chiming."
