Speakers and registrants at the annual Montana Tax School are drawn chiefly from practitioners, but this year the program will include a speaker "from the other side of the fence," according to Tax School Director Lester R. Rusoff of the Montana State University law faculty.

The school, sponsored by the MSU Law School, will be in session November 13, 14, and 15, at the Rainbow Hotel in Great Falls.

Keith Stokes of the Internal Revenue Service, Helena, will discuss the procedural problems and irritations of the service on the opening day of the Tax School. "This will give registrants an opportunity to learn how the Internal Revenue Service reacts to those of us who practice before it," Prof. Rusoff commented.

Persons interested in attending the Tax School should register in advance if possible, Prof. Rusoff said. Information about the school is available at local banks or at the MSU Law School, he added.
