MISSOULA, MONTANA---A taller and promising group of freshmen basketballers will start Cub workouts in Missoula sometime in November, Montana University coach Forrest B. (Frosty) Cox announced this week.

Heading the list of yearling prospects are three Montana all-staters--Larry Riley, Roundup; Jim Bryngelson, Billings; and Steve Lowry, Red Lodge. Other top prospects are Richard Gueder, Milwaukee, Wisc.; and Alvin Ford and Raymond Lucien, Baton Rouge, La.

Gueder and Lowry are the tallest in the group, at 6-7. Ford stands 6-6\(\frac{1}{2}\) and Bryngelson measures up to 6-4. Riley is a six-footer and Lucien stands 5-10.

Cox stressed that a number of other prospects will be reporting later this fall. "We'll welcome any athlete who wishes to turn out. Our freshman team is not exclusive by any means, and we have room for anyone who wishes to compete."

SILVERTIP SLANTS..........

A nephew of one of Montana's all-time great football performers is a freshman at the University this fall. He is Virgil Bentz of Bismarck, N.D., whose uncle, Chris, played on outstanding grid teams from 1914 to 1917. Chris currently lives in Ekalaka, Mont., where he is a farm implement dealer.

Grizzly basketball center Dave Shelby, a 1959 University graduate, is currently coaching at Philipsburg high school in Montana. Two other recent Montana grads, Doug Dasinger and Don Brant, started their new head coaching careers in impressive fashion last week. Dasinger's Sidney team beat Hardin, and Brant has counted successes over Glasgow and Fairview for his Wolf Point Wolves.
