Fall 1981

Heat Wave

Linda Bierds

Let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank/vol1/iss17/4

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by ScholarWorks at University of Montana. It has been accepted for inclusion in CutBank by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at University of Montana. For more information, please contact scholarworks@mso.umt.edu.
HEAT WAVE

The killing sun is setting. We leave our withered horses, our windless, stone-dry wheat, to come to these lawns, these galleries, where Nick and Nora and stiff-legged Asta hang from the sky. Our children are slumped on the grass like empty jackets. A lung of cicadas rattles.

How green we are. How sun through the elm leaves greens us. How sun through the windows of celadon vases greens us. The saxes and trumpets are bleating, The clays of a thousand years tremble, regather.

Oh Nora. Oh Nick with your whiskey, your ascot, your eye swelling now like the moon from a hundred miles; give us your clear-headed glances. Skim over our bodies like rain.