Spring 1984

from Solar Matter translated by Alexis Levitin

Eugenio de Andrade

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank/vol1/iss22/9

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by ScholarWorks at University of Montana. It has been accepted for inclusion in CutBank by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at University of Montana. For more information, please contact scholarworks@mso.umt.edu.
from SOLAR MATTER

45.
It rains, this is the desert, the fire gone out, what to do with these hands, the sun's accomplices?

46.
Look, I don't even know about my fingers anymore, gnawed with desire, I touched your shirt, undid a button, imagined your breast the color of wheat, or of a wild dove, perhaps, the summer almost at an end, the wind in the pines, the rain foreseen upon your loins, the night, the night would not linger, how I loved love, that leper.

49.
I know where wheat illuminates the mouth. I invoke that thought to cover myself with the most fragile mantle of air.

Sleep is like that, it allows the body this abandon, to lie in the breast of the earth, a joy promised only to water.

I say that I was here, and now I go the route of another, whiter sun.

Translated by Alexis Levitin