Friends of the Montana State University Law School responded to the tune of nearly $30,000 to a call for donations to furnish the new law building on campus, insuring that the structure will be ready for occupancy for the fall term, Dean Robert E. Sullivan reports.

Dignitaries of bench and bar, including an associate justice of the U. S. Supreme Court and the president of the American Bar Association, will take part in the formal dedication ceremony on September 6, the dean said. Special events celebrating the dedication of the building and commemorating the 50th anniversary of the school will continue through September 9.

Voluntary contributions to the Law School Development Fund came from lawyers, alumni and other friends throughout the state and nation, Dean Sullivan noted. A number of gifts were made in the form of memorials. The fund drive was conducted by the Law School Board of Visitors under the leadership of Judge W. D. Murray of Butte with the active cooperation of Montana lawyers and alumni everywhere, he added.

"This heartwarming response is a demonstration of the loyalty of members of the legal profession and other Montana citizens to their Law School and of their determination to continue the outstanding tradition of the school," Dean Sullivan commented.
